Mass. State Conference.

The annual State Conference will hold their meeting for the choice of officers at Boston, Lowell Street Chapel, Friday, April 8th, at nine A. M. It is desirable that the churches be fully represented at this meeting. Let your delegates be chosen speedily; two for every twenty-five; one for a less number. If delegates cannot come, represent yourselves by letter. Do not fail this time. Come, brethren, to this meeting, alive to every good work, and decide whether the Conference shall live and be a blessing in exerting a holy influence in converting men and spreading the truth; or shall it cease to be? S. W. THURBER, Pres. P. S. BUTLER, Sect.

R. I. and E. Ct. Conference.

☞ Change of time.

That our preachers may be at liberty to attend the Boston Conference, our next conference will be held at West Gloucester, R. I., commencing Wednesday, two o'clock P. M., March 30th, 1870, which is one week earlier than our adjournment. Those coming on N. and W. R. R., leave cars at Putnam. From Providence come to Chepatchet, and be met by team. A team will probably run to Putnam depot Wednesday and Thursday.

Per order of Moderator, H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Notice.

There will be a conference in Sangerville, at Brockway's Mills, to commence March 17th, at seven o'clock P. M., and continue over Lord's day. Brethren living in that section are invited to come and participate with us in hunting up the poor lambs of the flock. All will be cared for who can attend. We must soon report at the judgment. Brn. A. H. Walker and I. Damman are expected to be in attendance. ISRAEL DAMMAN.

Notice.

There will be a session of the Maine Westerly Quarterly Conference at the yellow school-house, in Brunswick, commencing Thursday evening, at 7 o'clock, March 17th, 1870, and continue over the following Sunday. Come, brethren and sisters, and worship the Lord with us. We hope our Brn. who preach the word will make it a point to attend. For the Brn., C. GOUD.

Notice.

Providence permitting, there will be a two days meeting at the lower North Fork school-house, near Westfield Village, Tioga Co., Pa., commencing Friday evening, March 25th, to continue over the Sabbath following. For the brethren, J. W. TAYLOR.

COMFORT IN THE NIGHT.

She thought by heaven's high wall that she did stray
Till she beheld the everlasting gate:
And she climbed up to it to long, and wait;
Feel with her hands (for it was night), and lay
Her lips to it with kisses; thus to pray
That it might open to her desolate.
And lo! it trembled, lo! her passionate
Crying prevailed. A little, little way
It opened: there fell out a thread of light,
And she saw winged wonders move within,
Also she heard sweet talking as they meant
To comfort her. They said, "Who comes to-night Shall one day certainly an entrance win";
Then the gate closed and she awoke content.

E. P. WOODWARD.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11: 6.

FAITH, BELIEF, AND KNOWLEDGE.

"What is the difference between faith, belief, and knowledge? We are told that we must 'walk by faith,' but is it not knowledge, after all? Can a man take any course in life without some knowledge? If not, why call it faith? Is it right, or duty, to take any step on mere faith? Must there not be some knowledge in the matter? I say I have faith that God will raise the dead: might I not just as well say I believe he will do it? I believe that the Pacific Railroad is completed: is not that faith?"

My friend, who made this inquiry, is, I suspect, or has been very lately, somewhere in that misty border-land of doubt, where the eye fails to discern clearly between many things not otherwise indistinguishable. Yet he speaks as many Christians would speak, if they stopped a moment to think. For, there seem to be some very indistinct ideas afloat in reference to these matters. And it certainly is desirable that Christians, of all men, should speak words that convey exactly, and only, their true meaning, and use them as the Spirit of God has used them in the Word. Many of the objections and difficulties in reference to the doctrines of Christianity, have arisen from this inaccurate, careless way of using words. Let us try to use "sound words."

Knowledge can be predicated of very few things. And even then, it is only relative, not absolute. We know what we see. Yet we see many things which we not only do not know, but which we do know are not as they seem. We know what we hear. Yet we hear many things which would utterly mislead us, did we not make due allowances. We know what we have seen, and remember. Yet memory often proves a treacherous friend. So that, in this limited sphere of knowledge, we are liable at any moment to find ourselves mistaken. Only He who knows the end from the beginning; who looks through the visible outside,—that which only becomes visible to us by its opacity,—and beholds not only the original atoms that compose the mass, but the secret forces that bind them together; only He may possess that absolute knowledge so vainly sought by man.

But, within certain limits, man has knowledge. If his senses do not deceive him, certain things are thus and so. And as his senses generally do not deceive him, he calls what he learns through those senses, knowledge. He knows there is such a place as Boston, for he has seen it. He knows there is some one speaking in the next room, for he hears him. And so of many other things.

This circle of things known is very small—smaller than men generally suspect. But outside of this is a still larger circle, generally called knowledge, but which really is only belief. For all practical purposes it is as good as knowledge, and men universally act on matters in this realm as though they were known. And this belief is founded on knowledge. The things which man knows, he uses as a foundation on which to build his belief in things he does not know.

I do not know there is such a city as Liverpool. But I see frequently a line of steamers advertised to sail for that port, and I have never heard any complaint of persons failing to reach their destination. On the contrary, I have seen many who affirm that they have been in that city. Every day I see telegrams purporting to come from Liverpool, and hear of business transactions based on the belief that there is such a city. And my reason tells me that there is vastly more probability that there is a Liverpool, than that all these transactions are founded on a mistake, a delusion, or a myth. And this belief that Liverpool exists has come to be, with me, knowledge. If I ever wish to do business in Liverpool, I shall not think of inquiring whether there is such a city. I shall make all my preparations for the journey and the business, just as confidently, and just as fully, as if I had lived in Liverpool half my life.

And just here we find the true office of reason,—to weigh evidence, and decide as to the greater or less probability. I have certain facts, I reason on those facts, and, as a result, I believe. We know certain facts in mathematics, called axioms. From these axioms, or self-evident truths, we reason, and prove certain other positions. These positions we consider as known, and from them, by reason, solve other and more difficult problems.

This may seem to be knowledge. It is based on knowledge, and constitutes that phase of belief which makes the nearest approach to certainty; yet it is only belief. No man with the most perfect instruments can demonstrate a single proposition of Geometry. True, he can come so near it, that we have no doubt in the matter. But his measurements would never produce that absolute and unchangeable conviction which is the result of pure reason acting from these axioms as fixed points of departure. And when we remember that the foundations of all calculations in solidity or extension in the science of measurement are two things (if things they may be called) which have never been seen, and never will be, the reasons why measurement is not demonstration, will be apparent. A point, and a line. But these can be seen? No. A point is position only, without length, breadth, or thickness; a line is extension only, without breadth or thickness. Study that, and see how much chance there is for instrumental measurement. Yet, reasoning from certain propositions which all men of sound mind know as surely as they know their own existence, on these two foundation ideas is built a system by which we may tell the distances of the stars of heaven. Still we do not know, we only have a sure belief. And however firmly we become established in our belief of its truth, were a single proposition disputed, the closest and most profound student would never think of dispelling the doubt, even from his own mind, by any such process as that by which he would prove or disprove a matter where his senses were concerned. He would find himself unconsciously and unavoidably passing back from the conclusion, through the various steps in the demonstration, testing the correctness of each step, until, arriving at the foundations,—the axioms,—he would rest there, believing the conclusion only because he sees no fallacy in the reasoning by which the conclusion was reached. Here we have an instance of pure intellectual belief, produced by the force of unassisted reason, from certain known facts. Here reason acts entirely and absolutely alone, and is able to obtain these results without aid.

But outside the sphere of the absolute sciences, reason alone is not sufficient. I cannot demonstrate the existence of Liverpool; still I am satisfied of it. Why does my reason yield to evidence which falls short of a demonstration? In mathematics, I should call for absolute proof; here I rest on the greater probabilities. Why is this so?

First, experience has shown that many things cannot be proved. If believed at all, it must be from weight of evidence, and not from absolute demonstration. Either, we must reject all the facts asserted by others, or we must accept them upon evidence. By the former course, we should be practically isolated from the world, and be about as free to move and act, as the man who thought his legs were glass, and never dared to stir for fear of breaking them. So this acceptance of evidence in lieu of proof, is a necessity.

Second, from what we know of ourselves, and those with whom we are intimate, we obtain a degree of confidence in mankind generally—a sort of human faith. And by faith in this connection, and when used with reference to the promises of God, is to be understood confidence, trust, in some person or thing,—always conveying, in some form or other, the same idea of leaning upon, though the reasons for, or grounds of, this confidence may be widely different. We deem it incredible that men of all races, conditions and pursuits, should unite in asserting and maintaining a lie, which could work no possible advantage to any but a very few at most, while it would certainly work great harm to many of their best friends. And so, because we have confidence—faith—in the honesty and knowledge of the man who made the guide-book, or map, or chart, by which we are to traverse the pathless deep, and visit the cities and mountains of another hemisphere, we believe the statements and direction found there, and act on them as though we had knowledge in the matter. The foundation of this faith in man is laid in our knowledge of men, making our knowledge of ourselves the principal starting point. So that, reasoning on what facts we have, using this human faith as a sort of lamp, in the light of which we judge of the value of the evidence, we come to believe that which decides our future action.

But even here, we have to use reason very carefully, for experience teaches that, sometimes, men do lie, with no apparent good to result to themselves from the lie, and much evil and suffering sure to come to those who act on the lie as though it were a truth. And even when men are honest, we know they are liable to mistakes, either from their inability to comprehend the bearing of all the facts in the case, or from prejudice in favor of one side, or from both causes combined. And perhaps they obtained a part of their information from a third party,—and that opens another avenue for mistakes and errors. Still, men have generally managed to keep so near the truth in worldly affairs, that, acting singly or in concert, they have arrived at about the same result. All this in the realm of belief.

But outside this larger circle, which in its widest expanse is so small and limited that human reason has striven in vain for ages to know what lies beyond, alternating between a denial that there was anything outside the range of its feeble vision, and the wildest credulity as to what really was hidden there,—outside of this, there is a realm, the mysteries of whose infinite depths are known only to Him who alone has dwelt there throughout the days of Eternity. All that lies beyond this circling boundary of human belief, must be accepted, if accepted at all, on faith.

Whatever, beyond the boundaries of belief, is received by us as faith, is received, not because facts support it, or reason proves it,—for it is beyond the reach of reason,—but because some one who, we have reason to believe, knows fully and speaks truly, tells us what is there concealed. Reason, judging from the few facts known to us in this life, may decide that some of these matters of faith are impossible, and this might be true if there were no facts except those we now possess. But men should remember that, before deciding what is absolutely contrary to reason, they must first know all the facts which lie in this very realm of faith; the impossibility of which, at present, should teach us that a thing may be above reason, and not contrary to reason.

Here we come to the faith spoken of in the Bible. Not faith in man, but in God. Our faith in man rests primarily on our knowledge of man. So we should expect our faith in God to rest primarily on what we know of him. But as, from the fact that he dwells beyond the realm of sensuous knowledge, we cannot know of him as we know of ourselves and our fellows; so our faith in him must rest on the facts which we believe to be true respecting him. We must believe that he is a God of truth, before we can have faith in his word. We must believe that he is love, and possessed of power unlimited, before we can have faith that all the trials and sorrows of earth will surely work for good to those who love him. Faith in God, that child-like trust that fears no evil while our Father is at the helm, is born of belief in him as a God of love, and power, and truth. We do not know that he is such a God. If we did know, there would then be no chance to develop the beautiful yielding of self which faith exhibits. And perhaps we shall learn some day that, in this present state of weakness and ignorance, such knowledge would be too great for us, even if we could comprehend the mighty revelation. But we do not know this fact, and faith must consequently rest on belief.

And as intelligent belief must always fall back on knowledge of some kind, so here. We have faith in God from what we believe him to be. We believe him to be so, because we believe the Bible,—the only source from which we can learn those attributes to which faith clings. And we believe the Bible from evidence, just as we do any other statements made by man. And this evidence is drawn, first, from the facts in the case, of which we are cognizant, either from observation, or from those commonly received truths which are generally unquestioned. Upon these facts we reason, aided more or less by that faith we have in the ordinary workings of human motives and actions; and from the three we obtain a belief, which may be feeble and weak, or as strong as life itself, according as we comprehend more or less fully the mighty chain of facts and reasons by which, amid the storms of life, God would anchor the soul to the Eternal Rock.

On this belief we rest our faith. In other words, from an intelligent appreciation of the facts, or assumed facts, in regard to the character and power of God, we have confidence in him, we trust him, in all things which are beyond the limit of our own strength, the reach of our own knowledge, or the deductions of our own reason. It is true that the words belief and faith are to some extent used interchangeably, perhaps too much so. But the faith spoken of in the Bible, without which it is "impossible to please God," through which "we understand—believe, not know—that the worlds were framed by the word of God";—this is a very different thing from an intellectual assent to truth. We assent to, or believe in, the truth of certain statements and promises made by God, because we have faith in his word. So that in this realm, the assent of the intellect depends on the confidence of the intellect in the veracity of Him who promises, not from trust in any chain of evidence. We have faith in God, and consequently believe what he says. And, as beyond the narrow boundaries of knowledge, our assumed knowledge is nothing more than belief, so, all that belief which depends primarily on our confidence in God, is practically faith. Still, this belief may become to us a certainty, just as does belief founded on knowledge and reason,—but a certainty only in name.*

As, from the certainties of knowledge, we reach out and act intelligently in the uncertain realm of belief; so, from the assured certainties of belief, we may grasp the veiled glories of the world of faith. But, though from what we know, we may feel certain of what we believe; yet, in all that lies beyond belief we act purely from faith. We have faith that there shall be a resurrection of the dead; we do not simply believe it. There are no facts on which to base such a belief. But there are facts to justify the belief that the God of life has promised it. But to have faith in the promise, to get the benefit which such a promise is designed to give even in this life, we must first believe that this God is both truthful and able to make his promise good. And we believe that he has made such a promise, because we believe the Bible which contains this promise is what it claims to be, the word of God. And we believe the Bible to be divine, because we are satisfied from historic evidence that the facts there recorded as truth did really happen, and consequently the doctrines which rest on those facts are also true. Thus, we believe that Jesus Christ lived, died, was raised the third day, and ascended into heaven. We do not know it, but we consider it so completely proved, that it becomes to us one of the certainties of belief. Believing thus, we find no difficulty in believing also that he loved us, and died for us, because he said so. And from the fact that he loved us, and was raised from the dead himself, we gain confidence—faith—that he will make his promise good, by coming again to raise the dead. That is why we have faith in a resurrection which reason says is impossible. The fact that he loved us, died for us, was raised from the dead, and has promised to raise us also, is no proof of a future resurrection. There is no logical sequence in the matter. After all this is admitted, we must fall back on his veracity, and his power to make his word good. And when we walk into the gloomy portals of the King of terrors, his promises will bring little joy or peace, even to the Christian, whose belief in his future deliverance is merely intellectual, and not rooted and grounded in faith, nourished and strengthened by a knowledge of God in his word; faith in Jesus as an absent, loving friend, who will never, no, never, forget or forsake. And when we pray for faith, let us remember that real faith, as distinguished from blind credulity, "cometh by hearing, and hearing by the word of God." We have been furnished with foundations on which to rest our faith, but only by intelligent and careful study of his word, can faith be born and brought to that perfect maturity and strength, where doubts are forever banished.

Knowledge makes men proud; "knowledge puffeth up"; cold, intellectual belief has about the same result. But when knowledge has reached its bounds, and sober, sound belief has taken its furthest flight, then the bright angel of faith lifts the weary one from the mists and darkness of uncertainty, reveals to the eye the unseen certainties of the present, and points with the finger of hope to the opening splendors of the future; and thus, in the surest, quickest way, fills the heart with love, mighty and unquenchable, towards Him who has thus vouchsafed, through the human instrumentalities of knowledge, reason, and consequent belief, to grant that faith which has been the burden of his prayer for years, and without which "it is impossible to please God."

* Belief is simply an act of the understanding; faith is an active, moving principle of the mind in which the heart is concerned. Belief does not extend beyond an assent of the mind to any given proposition; faith is a lively sentiment which impels to action. Belief is to faith, as cause to effect: there may be belief without faith, but there can be no faith without belief. We believe that Jesus Christ died for the sins of men; therefore we have faith in his redeeming grace to save us from our sins. * * * Belief is purely speculative; faith is operative: the former operates on the mind, the latter on the outward conduct. * * * Theorists substitute belief for faith: enthusiasts mistake passion for faith. True faith must be grounded on a right belief.—Crabb's English Synonyms, p. 79.

"Now faith is the substance [hupostasis, that which stands under, the foundation, the ground of confidence] of things hoped for, [here hinting at the truth so frequently forgotten, that the objects of all true faith must be both desired and expected,] the evidence [elegchos, proof, that which produces conviction and belief] of things not seen."—St. Paul.

FLOWERS.—An old Englishman of our acquaintance spends hours of every summer day among his flowers and vines. Said a neighbor, as he looked over the fence, when he was busy at work, "I can't see what good your flowers do you, Mr. H——, you can neither eat nor wear them." "True, true," replied the old man as he tenderly trained a flowering vine, "that is true, but the good Lord knew it when he made them!" Ah yes, though man was driven from the Eden where he had been placed to "dress and to keep it"—the flowers are still planted everywhere about the thorny rough places of the world. Let us not then disdain what God hath made so lovely, but bless the hand that has made all things beautiful in their season.—[illegible]

For the World's Crisis.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

There are many who are beginning to see that we are living in the last days, and such are to be found in all the religious denominations. I lately heard an Episcopal minister make some remarks in regard to it. He said he was looking for the second advent of Christ to come at any day, or hour, and he had long been of that opinion. He said the churches had neglected to preach on the subject. This was said in a farewell sermon to his people.

It is generally believed that we are on the eve of some great crisis in the world's history, and there can be no doubt of it. All these things are foretold in the Bible. God grant that we may all be ready for that great event. We must be living in daily preparation. It is truly a time that will try men's souls, and we need to be firmly founded on the rock of salvation.

I have tried to find happiness in the things of earth, but I could not, and have been forced "to return to my father's house where there is bread enough and to spare," as did the prodigal. "'Tis religion that can give sweetest pleasures while we live; 'tis religion can supply solid comfort when we die." However others may judge me, I shall try to live so that my ways may please God. I have none but the kindest feelings toward all, and forgive as I hope to be forgiven.

I love to read the soul-inspiring letters of those who write for the Crisis. My heart responds to them, for I love the spirit of devotion and of prayer. May we have that faith that works by love and purifies the heart.

We read that because iniquity abounds, the love of many shall wax cold. How true it is. We need to have a great deal of sympathy for such, for they have much to contend against, and they need much help and encouragement.

Jesus said if a brother offend, we should forgive him seventy times seven, if he returns and repents. How many are willing to do it? Oh that I for one may have the blessed Spirit that he possessed. Let us all seek for it, contending earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints. We need it in these last moments of time to keep us unspotted from the world. May the love of Jesus fill our hearts with that peace that is like a river; and we be endued with power from on high.

Hotchkissville, Ct. T. L. WAUGH.

HYMN.

Lord, I am thine, all glory to thy name;
I to thy law my life, myself resign:
Of right thou dost my love, my worship claim,
And I am thine!

In paths of doubt I wandered lost of yore,
When lo! upon my path thou deign'dst to shine:
Once was my heart a void, and death in store;
Now I am thine!

The world erewhile enchained my captive soul,
But now I dwell beneath thy rule divine:
Sweet is thy yoke; on thee my cares I roll;
For I am thine!

Me to receive with welcome to thy heart,
Thine arms outspread, and looks of love, combine:
O Lord, I come: I choose that better part;
Thine, wholly thine!

Possessing thee, I am of all possest,
And 'tis by faith this happy lot is mine:
Upon thy bosom, Lord, in peace I rest,
Thine, only thine!

None from the book of life shall blot my name;
No tempter from thy paths my steps incline:
'Tis death, 'tis life, thy piercing glance of flame,
But I am thine!

While on this earth I sojourn by thy will,
My Savior and my God, that will be mine;
Till safe in heaven I bless thy mercy still,
For ever thine!

TO YOUNG WRITERS.

The press moves the world. The pen is mightier than the sword. He who can write, ranks next to him who can pray. He who does both may employ the mightiest means to gain the grandest ends. Multitudes rusting in idleness should use the pen, not for a curse, but for a blessing to the world.

Would you write? You must work then. There is no royal road. Victories are won by veterans; raw recruits too often court defeat. Have you grace enough to be taught? Then you may yet have gift enough to teach. Suffer a word of counsel from one who has written much, and who wishes he had written better.

I. Never think what to write; this is useless. Write what you think. Thoughts that kindle your heart will melt others. Ideas that stir the writer will wake up the reader. Write facts; everybody loves facts, incidents, and true stories; and the world is flooded with whims, fancies, and fictions. Tell what you know, rather than what you think.

II. Write with a rush, hurriedly, just as fast as you can. Whenever the thoughts come, scratch down your ideas with pen or pencil on a scrap of paper, anywhere you happen to be, and when you get at pen and paper, write them out more fully.

III. Throw the article into the drawer, and let it lie for a few days or weeks, while you write more on the same, or on other subjects, studying meanwhile not only the subject you write on, but also grammar, logic, rhetoric, punctuation, penmanship, and everything else, especially the word of God.

IV. After some days or weeks, hunt up your ink-blots and scratches, see how they look, read, re-arrange, omit, add, condense, and study the whole subject thoroughly.

V. Write out the article carefully on one side of the paper, leaving margin for corrections, and putting everything into it that you wish to have there, and arranging the ideas and sentences in proper order.

VI. Lay it aside awhile, then read it all over by yourself aloud, and with a pen or pencil mark everything that does not read smooth, sound well, or express the right ideas; change the order of words and sentences, and, if needful, re-write the whole again. Put in all quotations from Scripture in full, and do not expect your readers to stop and hunt up passages, for they will not do it.

VII. Keep it awhile, and then read it aloud to the best educated and most sensible friend you have, who is not too busy to hear it, and who is honest enough to tell you your faults; and when they have criticised it, then consider, condense, and improve it all you can, remembering that every word costs money, time, and pains to put it in print.

VIII. If you do not get sick of the sight of it before this time, and still feel inclined to send it to the press, observe these directions: 1. Get you some fine, thick, smooth, white writing paper: "legal cap" is very good, but any good paper, well ruled, will do; and cut it into half sheets. 2. Get some deep black ink—black as midnight. 3. Get a coarse pen that will make a plain mark. 4. Get a quiet place to write alone. 5. Leave an inch blank at the top of the first sheet, and write the title of the article in bold, plain hand. 6. Leave an inch of blank paper down the left side of each page. 7. At the commencement, and at all places where a new subject or paragraph begins, leave two inches blank on the left of the first line of the paragraph. 8. Write your title in fine letters at the top of each page. 9. Write only on one side of the paper, and number the pages 1, 2, 3, etc., and pin, or stitch them together at one corner. 10. Keep your pages flat and smooth; never roll them up; but fold them flat across the sheet.

IX. Lay it aside again, then read it over, correct spelling, grammar, and punctuation, put a capital letter at the beginning of each sentence, a period at the end, and if you do not understand punctuation pretty well, omit all other points, and let the editor insert them; and then, if needful, re-write your article again; if not, fold it flat, and put it in a long envelope, keeping your old copy for your own use, and putting in a polite note to the editor, telling your short story, and giving your name and address, and wait patiently the result; and if your article does not appear, try again, remembering that when an article is to be read by a hundred thousand persons, and to be accounted for at the last day, it cannot be too carefully prepared.—The Christian.

"EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS."

It was centuries ago, on that lonely Isle of Patmos, that the beloved disciple uttered those sweet words, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus." It was in response to the solemn watchword of Jesus himself, "Surely I come quickly."

Although eighteen centuries have nearly passed away since these words were first uttered; though many sorrows, trials and disappointments have befallen God's holy watchers, during those long years, in their struggles to hold fast the "blessed hope;" though Jesus has not yet come in his glory, and though many are growing weary, and are saying, "My Lord delayeth his coming,"—his coming is nevertheless certain, and we still say, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Yes, the Savior will come, for he has promised it, and he never deceives. When he comes he will raise the sleeping saints, restore the earth to its Eden state, and reign with his people for a thousand years. Then will be commingled together in heavenly unison the voices of angelic hosts with those of the redeemed of earth, praising God for his righteous judgments, and for bringing redemption to the world. But, oh! what a fearful doom will be that of the wicked who will then "call upon the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of him that sits on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb!"

Dear reader, do you love Jesus, and if so, do you "love his appearing?" Are you praying to be accounted worthy to escape that hour of trial which is about to come "upon all the world to try them that dwell upon the earth"? Do you expect to be a guest at the marriage supper of the Lamb, or will you be shut out with the unwatchful "foolish virgins?" These are questions of intense moment for all; for "the day of the Lord is near, it hasteth greatly." "Blessed is he that watcheth." The watchman said, "The morning cometh, and also the night." Strange that morning and night should come together, but so it is—morning as bringing deliverance to the righteous, but night as bringing destruction upon the wicked. Solemn thought! Are we ready for these things?

Gems.

— No doubt there are some nettles in the world. There are unpleasant things, sad, hard things that tend to make life smart keenly. But we put far more nettles into the world than are there originally. The real nettles are ourselves, in our own uncomfortable, petulant, sour, selfish dispositions, and they spread their own character over nature.

— It were well for multitudes to copy the example of the great Reformer, who used some mornings to say to himself, "Luther, you cannot get through to-day without as much as three hours' praying.

— The bad man, diffusing the hue of his own spirit over the world, sees it full only of treachery, selfishness, and deceit. The good man is looking for and sees noble qualities.

— The guileless are usually without suspicion, but the dishonest man always suspects others.

— Religion is not mere sentiment. It is a vital experience of the heart, a resolute exercise of the will, a heroic service of the life.

— Bad habits are the thistles of the heart, and every indulgence of them is a seed from which will spring a new crop of weeds.

— Don't be afraid of the storms of time, knowing that God holds the moral as well as the physical ocean in the hollow of his hand.

— Melancholy falls upon a contented life like a drop of ink on white paper—which is not the less a stain because it has no meaning.

— The Christian's cup may be brimful of sorrow; but for him the overflowing drop is ever added.

— The greatest curse to ordinary Christians would be to relieve them at once of all earthly cares.

— One solitary philosopher may be great, virtuous, and happy in the depths of poverty, but not a whole people.

— Worldly pleasures are no more able to satisfy the soul than the light of a candle to give day to the world.

— They who give willingly love to give quickly.

— God thinks more of the good than of the influential.

— Endeavor for the best and provide against the worst.

— Faith is as necessary to the soul as the sun is to the world.

— One instrument should always be with you—"The Golden Rule."

— Conscience in most men is but the anticipation of the opinion of others.

— The man who is venial himself, believes that everybody has his price.

— Bigots ever think others most perversely and willfully wrong-headed.

— When a man is not liked, whatever he does is amiss.

— Wealth is not his who gets it, but who enjoys it.

— To whom you betray your secret you betray your liberty.

TREASURES IN HEAVEN.—We read of a philosopher, who, passing through a mart filled with articles of taste and luxury, made himself quite happy with this simple, yet sage reflection: "How many things there are here I do not want!" Now, this is just the reflection with which the earnest believer passes happily through the world. It is richly furnished with what is called good things. It has spots of honor and power, to tempt the restless aspirings of ambition of every grade. It has gold and gems, houses and lands, for the covetous and ostentatious. It has innumerable powers of taste and luxury, where self-indulgence may revel. But the christian whose piety is deep-toned, and whose spiritual perceptions are clear, looks over the world, and exclaims: "How much there is that I do not want! I have what is far better. My treasure is in heaven."—Dr. Tyng.

PRAYER WITHOUT CEASING.—What a precious privilege is prayer! Come to the mercy-seat,—that seat where love and justice, holiness and pardon divinely sit; whence grace streams full on the sin-sick soul. Let no hour pass without a visit to the throne of grace. It is but a thought-step, "an upward glancing of the eye," a leap of the soul from its earthly duties, and you are there. While putting that needle through the cloth, or washing that cup, or selling that parcel, or driving that nail, you can go to the mercy-seat. Thread every fibre of life with these pearls. Leaven every lump with this sacred life. Look up; leap up; fly up; be with Christ; be in Christ. How sweet to catch the eye and smile of God! It is your privilege always. Are you always enjoying it?—Zion's Herald.

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

SWINE. [illegible]

EFFECTS OF TOBACCO.

We do not see how any christian man or woman, who knows the injurious effects of tobacco, in all its forms, upon the physical, mental and moral powers, can have a clear conscience and use it. It is demoralizing in all its tendencies; while at the same time its devotees are as deceived by its seductive charms, that they think, as do those who use intoxicating liquors, that they cannot get along without it. Any amount of facts may be presented to show that tobacco is a deadly enemy to the human system.

The following is from Dr. Willard Parker, the distinguished christian physiologist of New York:

"That tobacco is a poison, is proved beyond a question. It is now many years since my attention was called to the insidious, but positively destructive effects of tobacco on the human system. I have seen a great deal of its influence upon those who use it, and work on it or in it. Cigar makers, snuff manufacturers, etc., have come under my care in hospitals and in private practice; and such persons can never recover soon, and in a healthy manner, from any case of injury or fever. They are more apt to die in epidemics, and more prone to apoplexy and paralysis. The same is true, also, of all who chew or smoke much."

MENTAL TREATMENT OF THE SICK.

(Concluded.)

I wish nurses knew how much more seldom than they imagine a nervous patient is entirely wrong as to any simple matter of fact. Monomania is oftener a mistake as to proportion than as to simple fact. Delirium and hysterical attacks are often accompanied and preceded by a wonderful sharpening of some of the senses and of mental faculties, at the expense of the rest, by an exaltation of one set of powers and deadening of the others, which throws the mind off its balance and makes particular objects and ideas acquire a disproportionate value, just because they are, for the time, seen alone, all others being forgotten. A patient is often thought to be mad, only because he insists on asserting something which is true, but which the nurse does not see to be so, and of which she only knows that in his ordinary health he could have no more knowledge than herself, and of which she therefore supposes that he can have no knowledge in his sickness. The patient often knows, and is sure that he knows, something of which you are quite ignorant. The thing may be of no consequence whatsoever in itself. His delusion may consist in the very importance which he attaches to it. If you contradict him, when he knows he is in the right, you only make him fancy that it is of immense importance that he should convince you. In fact, there is hardly any mistake so cruel as that of treating as insane, one who is only in a state of intense vision. You run thereby the very greatest risk of permanently disordering the intellect. Say, "You may be right. I cannot tell. I cannot make myself see the thing as you do. If what you say be true, I may be able to see it. But the subject quickens your pulse and flushes you. That is certainly a token to me that you are not to talk of the subject at all while you are ill, but to trust it to God. I will try to find out whether the thing be as you say. But I will not, I dare not, talk to you about what excites you."

Never laugh at any assertion of a patient about outside matters of fact. Never treat what he says about them with indifference or disrespect. For the abnormal quickening of particular faculties of which I have spoken is often accompanied by an intense realization of the unseen Presence. The man, perhaps, never before really knew, or at least never felt, that whatever truth he perceives is taught to him by that unseen Teacher. Suddenly he discovers that some one is telling him this particular truth—is showing him this particular fact. No wonder that he feels himself then inspired with the particular truth or fact. Any appearance of irreverence on the part of those to whom he speaks is torture to him. And of course the more you cannot see the thing he is telling you, the more he takes it to be a special revelation granted to him, and which he is bound to communicate to others. Take his inspiration quietly for granted; only tell him that you are inspired too. Your special business being to take care of his health, your inspirations refer to that subject and not to his subject. If you believe this, you will feel no difficulty in saying it kindly and seriously. If you do not believe it, what can you do in a sick-room? . . . .

If the patient's delusions have reference to his own state of body or mind, or to outward events as influenced by his own acts, or even, perhaps, as affecting specially his own happiness—as, for instance, if he supposes himself to be dying or going mad, or fancies that every one dislikes him, or that he is under an evil star, or that he brings ill-luck on those who love him, or that he has sinned past redemption, or that he is not "elect," or that he has ruined himself and his family, etc., the treatment must be different from that recommended above. Listen, for once, quite quietly to all he has to say. Then say calmly, "It is quite natural that you should feel as you do. It is a mere symptom of your physical condition. But you know it is a mere delusion. No one could brood much over his own state without falling into some delusion or other. The precise nature of the delusion depends on the nature of the disease; but if I sat thinking about myself for a day or two, I should be sure to be haunted by some absurd fancy or other. There is nothing disgraceful or sinful in your imagining what you do. Only it will really be very wrong if you go on brooding over a subject which makes you so morbid. Try to think of something else." After saying this, or something like it, once, show a good deal of indifference to the whole subject. Treat it openly as a monomania. A little kindly banter even may not be amiss.

I am aware that a patient sometimes pronounces himself to be dying when the doctor thinks there is no danger (or vice versa,) and turns out in the end to have been right. He has seen the end, as it were, of his disease by some kind of instinct or inspiration, without effort or excitement, and by the help of no process of reasoning. But I think you will find that this sort of prophetic instinct about one's self is almost always accompanied by a strange calm, which subdues all desire to convince others against their will. If your patient tries to worry you into the belief that he is dying, when the doctor says he is n't, you may very safely treat it as a delusion born of restless and selfish anxiety.

Never forget the wide difference between being led to make an effort of self-control by the desire not to be selfish or obstinate, and being driven to make it by the fear of being thought so. I do not say that the driving process may not be necessary sometimes, in the case of a patient who cannot be led, and over whom no high motives have any power. But driving is a very bad substitute for leading. And there is as much difference between the fear of being thought selfish and the desire not to be selfish, as there is between the fear of a flogging and the desire to please one's parents. And nurses, too, often do [illegible] travel.—Good Words.

TEMPERANCE AND VIGOR.

There comes from California an account of a gentleman living in that State, who is now sixty-four years of age, who has not tasted liquor, wine, tea, coffee or tobacco for thirty-five years of that time, and recently stepped off on a short walk of fifty-five miles, which he finished in twenty hours and fifty minutes, part of the distance being traveled in pitchy darkness, and in a [illegible], and, therefore, with shorter steps. When this (old) gentleman had accomplished his feat he was just as fresh as ever, and ready to return by the way he came. All his sustenance on the journey was a little parched Graham flour. Now here is a case of a man who has really lived while he lived. He is as youthful and springy at sixty-four as most men are at thirty and thirty-five. And it all comes of a proper regimen and regular and healthy habits. All of us can compass as much if we desire, and possess brisk spirits, a cheerful and contented temper, and every other desirable thing, if we will but practice that simple temperance which is the parent of a perpetual vigor, freshness and peace.—Ex.

SEASONABLE HINTS.

Don't "roast" yourself before a fire and then suddenly go out into the freezing air, telling your friends the next day that you "wonder" how you've caught cold.

Don't wash yourself in hot water, nor yet in water with miniature icebergs floating therein, and afterward complain that you have "terrible" chapped hands.

Don't stop up every crevice for fresh air in your bedroom with the idea of sleeping warm, and then be astonished if you should wake with a headache every morning.

Don't habituate yourself to sit at home over a "roaring" fire, because it happens to be a bracing cold day out of doors, otherwise your friends will style you a chilly mortal, and you will always be crying out that you are "perished" with cold, in going from one room to another.

Don't keep out all the draught from the doors and windows of your sitting-room with sand-bags and list, and then exclaim that you cannot conceive why the chimney smokes.

DIET OF BRAIN WORKERS.—A New York doctor has been writing up the "Diet of Brain Workers." He combats the theory that they should live on nothing. Those authors and thinkers who delight in luxurious dinners will find the doctor's labors very palatable. He is not content with opposing theory to theory, but calls upon all to witness the fact that the most arduous brain workers are the heartiest eaters. The answer to the inquiry, "Why is this?" is, because they need it. And they need it, because: 1. Labor of the brain causes greater waste of tissues than labor of the muscles. Three hours of hard study produce more important changes of tissue than a whole day of muscular labor. 2. Brain workers, as a class, are more active in their work, and work more time than mechanics or laborers. The thinking powers, the tools of trade of brain workers, are always at hand, and seldom idle. 3. Brain workers exercise, more or less, all the other organs of the body, as well as the brain.

CAUTION TO MOTHERS.—A distinguished physician of Paris declared just before his death, "I believe that during the twenty-six years that I have practised my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been borne to the cemeteries a sacrifice to the absurd custom of naked arms." "Boston," adds Dr. Warren, "sacrifices five hundred babies every year by not clothing their arms." What these little arms need is thick, knit, warm woolen sleeves, extending from the hand to the shoulder. The extremities require as much clothing as the body. Women should dress their limbs in woolen of some kind. The absurdity of loose flowing sleeves and wide-spread skirts worn in our climate hardly needs to be discussed.

AFTER DINNER NAPS.—Many persons are in the habit of sleeping for half an hour or hour immediately after dinner. This is a bad practice. Ten minutes' sleep before dinner is worth more than an hour after. It rests and refreshes and prepares the system for vigorous digestion. If sleep is taken after dinner it should be in a sitting posture, as the horizontal position is unfavorable to healthful digestion. Let those who need rest and sleep during the day, take it before dinner instead of after, and they will soon find that they will feel better, and that their digestion will be improved thereby.—Herald of Health.

POISONED CANDY.—There are many complaints afloat concerning the injurious, and even the deadly substances which, it is alleged, are mixed with the candy that is consumed by every one. The list of stuffs worked into the sweet mixture is actually appalling. On reading it, one questions the safety of ever tasting another piece of candy until he knows of a certainty of what it is compounded. What will not the greed for money lead men to do!—Ex.

HEALTHFULNESS OF APPLES.—An eminent French physician thinks that the decrease of dispepsia and bilious affections in Paris is owing to the increased consumption of apples, which fruit he maintains is an admirable prophylactic and tonic, as well as a very nourishing and easily-digested article of food. The Parisians devour one hundred millions of apples every winter.

FAINTING.—If a man faints, place him flat upon his back, where he can have an unlimited supply of pure air, and let him alone. This is all that is necessary.

IT IS WELL.

Ah me! the Reaper dread
Has come, with his sickle keen,
And cut off the precious grain,
Ripe ears at the head of the plain,
And below, the fresh and green,
With his sickle keen!

O Reaper, thou'st come too soon!
In the dewy morn thy labors begun,
Waiting not for the noon-day sun;
And thou came'st in the early June,
Thou hast come too soon!

Thou hast cut off the ripened grain,
Also of the fresh and green,
Unsheltered from wind and rain,
On the wide waste plain.

And yet thou comest again,
Cutting my soul in sunder.
I ask in fear and wonder,
Why dost thou me thus plunder?
O cruel One.

I had so blindly thought
Thou would'st be satisfied,
And in its scabbard hide
That which had me so tried—
That dreaded blade.

But, thou relentless One,
Not sighs, nor groans, nor tears,
Not the most earnest pleading,
Nor desolatest years,
Can move to heeding.

Hearken! O anguished heart,
From o'er the mountain's height
A voice—"Fear not!"—a light
Down through this dark, sad night,
Lo, breaketh now!

Be silent now, my soul,
That voice I hear again;
"T was not to give thee pain
I gathered the precious grain,
My garner for;

But soon in fullest measure,
Thou, finding thy heart's treasure,
Glad joy and holy laughter
For all thy bright hereafter,
I thus do make.

Now fully trust in me,
And calmly wait my time;
Then where the holy dwell,
And songs of triumph swell,
Thou shalt with rapture tell
That all was well!"

THE ARAMAIC, SADDUCEEAN, AND PHARISAIC FAITH AND DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

BY O. R. FASSETT.

The resurrection from the dead is not reliant on an "immortal entity," or "life element" in man, which survives in death. The body is "sown in corruption, it is raised in incorruption"; not through any vital power inherent in itself, or in man, or transmitted to us through Adam. "The first man was made a living soul" simply; and hence "in Adam all die." But the resurrection is dependent upon a vital producing power outside of man altogether,—"In Christ shall all be made alive." "The last Adam was made a quickening spirit."—1 Cor. 15. "If the spirit of Him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."—Rom. 8: 11. "As the Father hath life in himself, so hath he given to the Son to have life in himself; for as the Father raiseth up the dead, and quickeneth them; even so the Son quickeneth whom he will."—John 5: 21. And this will be "at the last day." "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 4.

It is however maintained by many that the apostle taught the immortality of the soul, and its reward in the intermediate state, in other scriptures. To these texts from his writings, which are so interpreted, and cited in proof of a conscious intermediate state against the faith and hope of the gospel, St. Peter has reference after he has given an epitome of the faith of the "holy prophets, and of the apostles of the Lord and Savior." 2 Pet. 3. "Our beloved brother Paul, also, in all his epistles, speaking of these things; in which are some things hard to be understood, which they that are unlearned and unstable wrest, as they do also the other scriptures, unto their own destruction." Those to whom Peter refers as "unlearned," are those ignorant in the Scriptures; for the Jews once "perceived that they [Peter and John] were unlearned and ignorant men." Yet they "marveled; and they took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."—Acts 4: 13. Let us refer briefly to a few of these texts. St. Paul says: "To die is gain."—Phil. 1: 21. But will Paul contradict himself? He inquires: "What advantageth it me, if the dead rise not?"—1 Cor. 15: 32. What gain shall I have? And then declares plainly he will reap none whatever. "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die." "They which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15: 18, 32. Will Paul make "the last enemy" a friend? Will he make death's coming a blessing, and the penalty of sin gain to man, instead of a curse? God said to Adam, "Thou shalt surely die."—Gen. 2: 17. Did Adam say in reply, "To die is gain; inflict the penalty"? A man is sentenced to death for crime; does he turn upon his judges who pass the sentence upon him and say, "To die is gain, execute the law"; and thus laugh at justice? Death, the last enemy, stands before the christian and says, "Thou shalt die." Does the christian laugh at him as though he were a liar, and refuse to send for a physician, or a council of them, if needful, to keep him from the "gain" death will bring to him?

The fact is, men's theology is against their belief. The christian triumphs in Christ, and in hope of a resurrection to life, if he rejoices and triumphs understandingly. Paul does not say, nor intend to be understood as saying, that "to die" would be "gain" to him. He first alludes to his "earnest expectation and hope." Phil. 1: 20. What were these? He answers: "Looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."—Titus 2: 13. "Of the hope and resurrection of the dead I am called in question."—Acts 23: 6. "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers. . Why should it be thought a thing incredible with you, that God should raise the dead?"—Acts 26: 6–8. These texts will suffice to learn his "earnest expectation and hope." Then he says: "Christ shall be magnified in my body, whether it be by life, or by death." Who magnified or advantaged? Christ. "For to me to live is Christ [for his glory it shall be], and to die is gain."—v. 21. Gain to whom? Christ; as his martyr death has been. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church." Hence Paul says, "Whether we live, we live unto the Lord ["for to me to live is Christ"]; and whether we die, we die unto the Lord [gain to Christ]; whether we live therefore, or die, we are the Lord's."—Rom. 14: 8. "I am in a strait betwixt two." v. 23. What were these two? Ans. Life and death. "What I shall choose I wot [care] not."—v. 22. Why? Living or dying, "we are the Lord's"; let him do with me as he chooses. If I live, it "is more needful for you"; and shall be "for your furtherance and joy of faith." "If I die, Christ shall be magnified in my body" also, as well. Nevertheless, he had "a desire"; "having a desire." What was this but his "earnest expectation and hope"? Hence he adds: "To depart and be with Christ; which is far better." Far better than what? To live in mortality, "in the flesh," or be in the condition of death.

The word "depart" is, in the Greek, analousai, and is used in Luke 12: 36: "And ye yourselves like unto men that wait for their Lord, when he will return" (analousaia). Thus he expresses his "desire for the returning, and being with Christ, which is far better"; and is thus explained by him: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first," and "be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord."—1 Thess. 4: 16, 17. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory" (Col. 3: 4); not before.

Life, death, and being with Christ, are three states. Between the first two he had no choice, only so far as Christ would be magnified, and the interest of his church and cause advantaged. But he waited the realization of his earnest expectation and hope; i. e., to "be with Christ" on his return. This scripture, analyzed and explained by the apostle's other writings, does not by any means controvert his faith and hope as an "Hebrew of the Hebrews," or a Jew and Pharisee of the Aramaic school.

Another passage in the writings of St. Paul needs a critical examination. 2 Cor. 5: 1–10;—"For we know that, if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal, in the heavens. For in this we groan, earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven: if so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened; not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life. Now he that wrought us for the self-same thing is God, who also hath given unto us the earnest of the spirit. Therefore we are always confident, knowing that, whilst we are at home in the body, we are absent from the Lord (for we walk by faith, and not by sight); we are confident, I say, and willing rather to be absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord."

It is generally supposed that the apostle refers to our bodies, as "the earthly house of this tabernacle"; and it is explained that on the dissolution of this body the soul, or spirit, enters into another prepared for it in the heavens. If this be so, is it not passing strange that Paul did not use the plural rather than the singular number, thus: "We know that if our earthly houses of these tabernacles were dissolved, we have buildings of God, houses not made with hands," etc. And if this be his meaning, why should he have contended so earnestly for the resurrection of the identical body from the grave and under the dominion of death?

What need of the resurrection of these earthly houses and tabernacles, if the soul goes into other buildings or houses at death, "eternal, in the heavens"? Or, are individuals on the resurrection of their bodies to undergo dissolution again, and pass though the ordeal of death, to rid themselves of the bodies with which they are invested at death? Or, are they to be possessed of two bodies on the resurrection and resumption of the old one? If, as it is argued, the body is a clog to the soul, this would make the resurrection undesirable indeed. And with such an interpretation, it is nothing strange that the doctrine of the resurrection from the dead [illegible] by thousands of professed christians and ministers of the gospel.

What is the meaning of St. Paul in this obscure passage? By connecting the preceding verse (chap. 4: 18), it will be readily seen: "While we look not at the things which are seen, but at the things which are not seen; for the things which are seen are temporal, but the things which are not seen are eternal." "The things seen" are the present heavens and earth, and all in them, in the midst of which we dwell; the heavens being spread out over us as a "tent to dwell in." These shall be "dissolved." "Seeing that all these things shall be dissolved." "The heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat."—2 Pet. 3: 11, 12.

"We have a building of God." What is this? Abraham "looked for a city, . . whose builder and maker is God."—Heb. 11: 10. This is Jerusalem, which is above." Gal. 4: 26. "A house not made with hands." What is this? "In my Father's house are many mansions"; and this is the "place" Jesus has gone to "prepare" for us. John 14: 2. This is "the city of my God, which is New Jerusalem, which cometh down out of heaven from my God."—Rev. 3: 12. Into this city the saints ascend when the world is on fire and is dissolved, and which the fires do not reach nor destroy. This city is "eternal," and "in the heavens"; but will descend on the new earth. Rev. 21: 1–7. "We that are in this tabernacle do groan." "God hath given unto us the earnest of the Spirit."–vers. 2–5. This language is explained by Paul in Rom. 8: 22, 23:—"We know that the whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain together until now. And not only they, but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to wit, the redemption of our body." "Not that we would be unclothed, but clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up."—v. 4. Not that state or condition imagined or fancied by the ignorant heathen world of an "unclothed" state; a phantom, ghost, a spiritistic state, in a spiritistic and immaterial world: this is not what we desire; but "clothed upon, that mortality might be swallowed up of life." Compare 1 Cor. 15: 53, 54: which is "my earnest expectation and my hope." Phil. 1: 20; Rom. 8: 19–25.

"Absent from the body, and to be present with the Lord" (v. 8), refers to two conditions: "absent" from this "body" of "flesh and blood," in which we "cannot inherit the kingdom of God" (1 Cor. 15: 50–59); and "present with the Lord" in our immortal body, glorified at his appearing. Phil. 3: 21. Archbishop Whateley's comment upon this scripture is consistent and reasonable:—"Some commentators have referred to this passage as regarding the separate state. But they should have remembered that the apostle is most evidently alluding to the state, whatever it is, in which we are to appear before Christ's judgment seat (vers. 8, 10); so that if we are then to have bodies, he cannot be supposed, without a very forced and harsh interpretation, to be speaking of a separate state, in the words immediately preceding, if you look a little further back—'We that are in this tabernacle,' etc. There Paul himself furnishes a ready interpretation of his own expression. He adds this caution on purpose, as it seems, to guard against the supposition that the deliverance he looked for from this burden is a separate state of the soul. What we desire, he says, is, 'not to be unclothed' (namely, as in a separate state, as the heathen and others maintained), but the hope we cherish is, 'to be clothed upon,' that is, to have an addition made to what we now possess, by having 'our vile bodies made like unto Christ's glorious body.' And these, our glorified bodies, are to be of so refined and purified a nature, in comparison of what we now have, as to be called by him in another epistle (1 Cor. 15) 'spiritual bodies'; for 'flesh and blood [that is, such gross materials as ous present flesh and blood] 'cannot inherit the kingdom of God?' You may easily, therefore perceive how he comes in this place also to speak of being 'absent from the body and present with the Lord,' when he is speaking not of a separate state, but of absence from such a body of gross flesh and blood as we now have.

The body in which he speaks of the christian as being 'at home,' whilst he is 'absent from the Lord,' is evidently this body; and the deliverance (of which he holds out the encouraging hope) is not being 'unclothed,' not a separate state, but the condition of being 'clothed upon'; namely, with our spiritual and immortal body. If, therefore, the commentators I alluded to had studied the whole passage as a whole, they would clearly have perceived, I think, that nothing is here revealed concerning the state of the soul between death and the resurrection; nor is the apostle at all alluding to that, but to the state in which we shall 'appear before the judgment seat of Christ.'"

Concerning the "visions and revelations" allnded to by the apostle in 2 Cor. 12: 1–7, Dr. Isaac Watts says: "I grant that this ecstasy of the apostle does not actually show the existence of a separate state after death till the resurrection."

CREEDS.

Creeds, in the sense of authoritative articles of faith, as prerequisites to membership or fellowship in the church, should everywhere and always be shunned. This system, though containing many good sentiments, conflicts with the divine admonition to receive "him that is weak in the faith"; besides, the authoritative code that we would make as a test of membership, may possibly be either defective or deficient,—defective, from the fact it may contain some things counter to truth; and deficient, from the fact it may omit many many truths of inspiration. If a man does not see the whole truth at once, we should not seek to coerce him by authoritative creeds. The man that truly loves and obeys Jesus is his friend, and belongs to the holy brotherhood, whether he yet fully comprehends all of heaven's theology, or not.

But some of our brethren are so much opposed to authoritative creeds, that they run to the opposite extreme, and fancy they can see "creed" in a mere explanatory or advisory resolution passed by a conference. If it is right for one individual to give an explanation or advice, provided it is not authoritative, it is right for a number to do the same thing jointly. Every man has a creed in his mind, and has a right to a creed, in the primary sense of the term; viz., "I BELIEVE"; but no man, and no class of men should abuse the right by converting our belief into an authoritative system to bind the consciences of our brethren. An arbitrary system is ever to be deplored, though many good people have thus erred. Wm. Sheldon.

ONE YEAR GONE.

The year has flown, and brought again
The day when called to mourn,
Thy spirit fled—soon from our sight
Thy cherished form was borne;
No dread to thee the vale of death,
Heaven's light around it shone.

Earth smiled that day in beauty bright
When thee we laid to rest,
And birds sang sweet from bough to bough,
A pean for the blest;
It seemed a resurrection song
To my sad, aching breast.

'Tis well, dear mother, that from thee
Were hid the tears I shed;
Or how in the still hours I've mourned,
And sorrowed o'er thee dead;
'Till I could almost wish I might
This earth no longer tread.

Thou art not lost, but gone before;
Why should we mourn or sigh?
We know, though now we see thee not,
Thy record is on high;
For Jesus said, "All who believe
In me shall never die."

Thy God in early life was sought,
His love around thee shone;
A pilgrim traveling on the earth,
A stranger seeking home;
Painful oft thy pathway here,
But now thy work is done.

The glorious orb of day imparts
Light to the moon's soft ray;
So thou by light and grace divine
Pursued thy heaven-ward way,
Looking for the fruition hope
In the eternal day.

Thy trials o'er, soon thou wilt sing
Without a sorrow's trace;
Join in the anthem—the new song—
With glory-beaming face;
And shout the victory thou hast won,
A sinner saved by grace.

The reminiscences of thee
The lessons by thee taught,
May to thy children blessings prove,
From a pure fountain brought;
The prayers thou offered for them here,—
O, can they be forgot?

In faith and patience let me aim,
The path she loved to keep,
And follow in the strength of Him—
The Shepherd of the sheep;
And then with her in the new earth,
An endless life to reap.

Dear mother, rest! thy sleeping dust
Is now thy Savior's care;
The summer rose is o'er thy grave,
To shed its fragrance there.
Mother, farewell! divided love
Will the new earth repair.

For the World's Crisis.

SAUL AND THE WITCH OF ENDOR.

"Then said Saul unto his servants, Seek me a woman that hath a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and inquire of her."—1 Sam. 28: 7.

It is a fact, that nearly all fortune-tellers, or clairvoyants, are women. Saul knowing this said, "Seek me a woman." Many have brought this case to prove the conscious state of the dead. I view this woman of Endor an impostor of the highest class: and she was possessed of a "familiar spirit." For Saul said to the woman, "I pray thee divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee." The connection informs us that when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, he was afraid and his heart greatly trembled. And when Saul inquired of the Lord, the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams, nor by Urim, nor by the prophets. In this condition Saul acted as affirmed in the text.

The witch of Endor gave out that she could call up spirits at her will, and predict future events; therefore she pretended to possess supernatural power, and knew just how to suit her dupes. All, therefore, who inquired of the witch of Endor, inquired of an infamous impostor, and violated the command of God—"Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live." God had forbidden his people to have any thing to do with witches.

I have stated that the witch of Endor was an impostor (like all those of her profession), and Saul was her stupid dupe. No doubt the power she possessed was a natural gift. Few possess this power, or have this gift. When Saul prayed to the witch, he said, "I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit." Saul's prayer was a full acknowledgment of the truth of the impostor's pretensions. A definition of the term shows the folly and wickedness of Saul.

Divination: prediction or foretelling of future things. All future things are secret things. "The secret things belong unto the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children." Deut. 29: 29. To divine signifies to foretell future events; and this is what Saul wanted the witch of Ender to do, by the aid of her familiar spirit.

The history of Saul's visit with the witch of Endor has been perverted by the superstitious to bad ends. There must be witches, they say, for the Bible says so; and this witch business and fortune-telling has been kept up ever since the days of Saul. It is thought by some that the Deity used the witch of Endor as an instrument to announce to Saul his approaching doom. Under the alarming circumstances which Paul was placed, to soothe the agony of his forebodings he sought a reputed witch. The character of Saul harmonized with his proceedings, and the witch was no more absurd in her pretensions, than was Saul in his expectations. His fate had been predicted by the prophet Samuel in his lifetime. The fact was notorious that Saul was forsaken of God, and David preferred as king of Israel. Would God employ such an instrument, and send Samuel back at her bidding to counsel a man forsaken of God? Does the character of God agree with the witch of Endor? Would God confirm her wicked pretensions to a divine power by aiding her in her abominable work? No. And the opinion that the witch really succeeded in calling up a spirit from the dead, and that God actually chose a witch instead of a prophet to communicate his will, already expressed by the prophet Samuel, in all that respected the wicked king of Israel, is contrary to the character of our God, and is unsupported by a single fact. No wonder superstitious people have believed in witches calling spirits from the tomb, when their spiritual teachers have laid the foundation of such absurdities.

The first statement in relation to Saul, after mention is made of the two armies—that of the Philistines and of the Israelites—being pitched for battle, is a key to the whole matter. And when Saul saw the hosts of the Philistines, he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled. He had a presentiment of his approaching doom and ruin. He knew that David, who on former occasions had aided him, was now with a band of valiant men in the camp of his enemy. The Lord had abandoned him, as predicted by the prophet Samuel, for no answer could be obtained, either by the Lord's prophets or by the priesthood. Under these distressing circumstances he went to consult the witch of Endor. Saul was all ready, under these circumstances, to be duped to believe anything the witch might say to him.

Here is the witch and her dupe Saul, who was a head taller than any other man in Israel, and was no doubt identified by the artful witch at first sight. The former predictions of God by Samuel concerning Saul's end, were too well known to be a secret to a person of her character. Saul's recent violence against her fraternity of witches must have operated to arouse her resentment and provoke her to vengeance. His first introduction was enough to arm her with boldness, and increased her ability at deception. Saul beseechingly requested—"I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee," without her first asking or learning the name she should call. The woman said unto him, "Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits." Such a speech she knew would surprise Saul, give him to understand that she was ignorant of his person, and give her a better chance to dupe him. "And Saul sware unto her by the Lord, saying, "No punishment shall happen to thee for this thing." Then said the woman, "Whom shall I bring up unto thee?" "And he said, Bring me up Samuel." This woman must have known Samuel, so conspicuous a prophet in Israel.

At this stage of the proceedings it was night. The woman had full opportunity to avail herself of as much obscurity as she chose, and as was customary with ancient impostors. She undoubtedly took her position, and stationed her dupe, so that attending circumstances should aid her deception. She probably occupied a recess fitted for such occasions, and was also screened by some contrivance from the gaze of Saul. Thus prepared, and Saul standing at a proper distance, trembling with fear, which would act to disqualify him from any accurate observation, she opens the scene: she cries with a loud voice; and a frightful scream, as of a person in peril, first saluted the ears of the terrified Saul. The phrase—"And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice"—there was a cause for this exclamation. She was to raise the spirit of Samuel, and she announced her success by a frightful scream. Now the cunning of the impostor is seen. As if the spirit she had raised had informed her, she says to Saul, "Why hast thou deceived me? [just as though she did not know who he was before this], for thou art Saul."

The thing works well. You will remember Saul has seen nothing. He has been electrified by the woman's outcry, and all ready to swallow her deception. And the king said unto her, "Be not afraid; for what sawest thou?" The answer of the witch is first rate. She is desirous of exciting the wonder of her dupe. She assumes the power of commanding the supposed infernal deities, by her answer: "I saw gods [plural] ascending out of the earth." Saul inquires, "What form is he of?" Remember, Saul has seen nothing as yet. The woman commences the farce, very likely, by burning incense, or some fumigating gum in a pan of coals. She first announced the effect of her incantation by a scream. Saul is now full of expectation. Instead of Saul's inquiring about the gods, he inquires of the woman respecting the form of the spirit, as though one only had been raised.

There is a very singular discrepancy in the phraseology of the translators, who make the woman, in the first place, to cry out "when she saw Samuel." Now the real fact is, that nothing is said of seeing Samuel, either by the woman herself or by Saul, during this part of the proceedings. But instead of this, the woman, immediately after she had given Saul to understand that she had discovered who he was by means of her incantations, instead of saying she had seen Samuel, affirms positively, in reply to Saul's interrogation on hearing her outcry—"What sawest thou?" that she saw gods ascending out of the earth. And immediately, on hearing Saul's second interrogatory, "What form is he of?" she gives a new shape to her farce. How absurd the conjecture that the witch actually raised the spirit of Samuel.

The next step of the witch is quite in character. As she must have had a previous knowledge of Samuel, as I have before mentioned, she was fully prepared for Saul's question—"What form is he of?" "An old man cometh up, and he is covered with a mantle." The old woman was too modest to coerce the spirit of Samuel to appear at her bidding, without bestowing on him a covering. And as she had, no doubt, seen Samuel during his lifetime, she very charitably lends him his old clothes to wear on that occasion. From the description of the woman, Saul perceived that it was Samuel, and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself. At the same time Saul saw nothing, unless the witch exposed her own person to be partly observed by Saul, through the gloom that enveloped her. This, no doubt, answered. Saul's imagination being diseased, it might pass for a number of different things. If Saul saw with his own eyes that it was Samuel, why did he ask the witch—"What form is he of?" The term "perceived" does not necessarily imply that Saul saw anything himself. He perceived that it was Samuel by the description given by the woman.

Saul was a good subject to be duped by the witch, being half-crazed with the result of the expected battle. Forsaken of God, he was full of wonder, and ready to receive any information the witch might impart, believing she was possessed of supernatural power. She was to him in the place of God; for he bowed himself to the earth before her. The phraseology of Samuel, in addressng Saul, is very consistent, on the supposition that the witch personated the spirit of the prophet; and is what would be expected under the circumstances. I am far from believing that a real spirit, or the spirit of the departed prophet, actually appeared on that occasion, by the agency of the supreme Being, to announce to Saul his approaching doom; the whole thing, from first to last, being a perfect deception on the part of the woman, assisted by the alarm of Saul, who stood before a witch begging her assistance. The kingdom was given to David, and he was on the side of Saul's enemy. No doubt the witch was well posted on all that was going on.

Samuel was raised from the dead by the witch, or he was not. If he was not, then the whole thing is a deception, and is the work of demons working miracles. Rev. 16. The woman was under the influence of a demon. Saul's application to this infamous and impious impostor, praying her to assume the attribute of the Deity, and to bring up the spirit of the pious dead, to come at her bidding, in obedience to his will, because he was forsaken of God and would employ sorcerers in his desperation, and in open defiance to all authority whether human or divine,—this new and daring crime of Saul would have been the theme of Samuel—burning words, indignation, tribulation and wrath, for so high-handed an offence, as Saul's last act must be branded, would have burst from the lips of the prophet.

Would the spirit of a departed prophet be sent back to the world by the Deity on an errand from heaven, as must have been the case in this instance if Samuel really appeared, call it being disquieted, and consent to the efficiency of the power of an infamous witch, a miscreant, too vile to be permitted to live on the earth? No! The bare idea is absurd. This woman, to effect her purpose in deceiving Saul, modulated her voice in addressing him when she personated Samuel.

Josephus says that the orders of Saul to his servants signified "that they should seek out for him one of those women that could speak out of their bellies, and call forth the souls of the dead, that by this means he might know if his affairs should succeed. For this sort of belly-speakers can bring up the spirits of the dead, and tell fortunes." In fact, the witch of Endor was a modern spiritualist, or fortune-teller combined with ventriloquism, and practised her art only in a private and mysterious manner.

The whole thing is very simple when laid bare. The witch has succeeded in her incipient operations, and Saul, her complete dupe, is bowed to the ground in the supposed presence of the real spirit of Samuel. The woman now personates the spirit of the prophet, and asks Saul the cause of calling him, adroitly pumping for a little information: "Why hast thou disquieted me to bring [or force] me up?" The witch is careful to assert her power, as the agent of Saul in this ghost-raising operation. Saul, who has now become a mere puppet in the toils of the witch, declares to him the true condition of his affairs, which he, of course, was best qualified to communicate, and which the witch was very desirous of learning. He says, "I am sore distressed, for the Philistines make war against me, and God is departed from me, and answereth me no more, neither by prophet, nor by dreams; therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do." The witch is now qualified to proceed understandingly, and to end the farce, knowing that the prediction, which was notorious to all Israel, hung over the head of Saul and over his house. She tells the old story, that every body in Saul's dominion was knowing to. Therefore, again personating the spirit of Samuel, she continues: "Wherefore, then, dost thou ask of me, seeing the Lord has departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?" and proceeds in her triumph: "And the Lord hath done to him as he spake by me. For the Lord hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to thy neighbor, even to David, because thou obeyest not the voice of the Lord."

The conclusion of the witch's speech was quite imprudent, but she risked all consequences. Therefore she adds, "Moreover, the Lord will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines." This woman must have known the dealings of God with the Israelites; viz., that in all cases when the Lord signified through his prophets or priesthood his disapprobation of the people or their rulers, they were sure to be defeated in their battles with their enemies. Her prediction, therefore, of Saul's defeat and death was not only sanctioned by the old prediction of Samuel, but, in her opinion, rendered certain from the information she had just received from Saul. The term "to-morrow," which the witch used, may answer as to time in any subsequent defeat, and death in any battle with the Philistines. "To-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me." The witch guessed just right, but if she lived in this age of the world, she would have all the business at her profession she wanted.

Suppose the spirit of Samuel did actually appear. Where did it come from? If he was actually in a state of bliss in heaven, he must have come from above; but no, he ascended out of the earth. See v. 13. And what does he say? "Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up?" Now Samuel was in heaven or in hell, in a state of consciousness; or else he was in the grave, in an unconscious state. If he was in heaven, then he gave Saul blessed news, for he told him, "To-morrow thou shalt be with me." So, though Saul killed himself (chap. 31: 4), yet he went to heaven. If Saul did not go to heaven, then Samuel did not tell him the truth; or else Samuel was in hell. If neither of these positions are true, then it follows that Samuel, till called up, was unconscious in the grave, and that there was where he told Saul he would be "to-morrow." This could be true; but it could not be true that Saul went to heaven, to be with Samuel, nor could it be true that Samuel was in hell to have Saul with him there.

LOVE DOES THE WORK.

Unless our hearts are filled with the love of God, our works avail nothing. Purity emanates from an undefiled mind, and from which spring the noblest works—charity and benevolence. Would that all who profess to be Christians, could so forget self and the world, that manifestations for doing good which proceed only from the love of God might abound in their hearts to such an extent, as to leave no room for evil to exist there. Our blessed Savior said there was no greater love than this—"that a man lay down his life for his friend." If such love exist in our hearts, we will surely love our enemies.

First, let us look to our homes. Are we all right there? It is there our works should first commence. "Home, sweet home!" Temporal as it seems to the christian who longs for the appearing of our blessed Master, yet there is no spot where the sun shines so brightly as at home. Well might the poet say—

"There is no place like home."

It is there in the secret chamber the christian finds rest, where he can unburden his heart, carrying everything to the Lord in prayer." "What a friend we have in Jesus." I love to praise God for providing me with a peaceful home. I repeat, home is where the christian's work should commence.

I am aware much dissension originates in families on doctrinal points, and if benevolence, supported by the love of God, will not avail, I am sure arguments never will. One says, "I love my family, but I stand alone in my religious views." Well, you can praise God, if you are alone, that you stand at the fountain head, and if you are determined to serve the Lord amid your trials, and hold out to the end, you will drink of the fountain of life.

My christian friends, did you ever kindly ask your companion, father, mother, brothers and sisters, if they would journey with you down this vale of tears, and on to that eternal and blissful home without end, where death no more can hold victory over us? Did you ever say to them, by way of encouragement, that long-suffering will bring to the christian an eternal weight of glory? Through "much tribulation" we shall enter into the "kingdom of God." Let us strive for an abundant entrance there, and encourage the sinner to go with us. If we have the love of God, there is much enjoyment in encouraging, entreating, and exhorting the poor sinner. Let us seek for things higher, nobler, than the mere momentary gratifications or enjoyments this wicked world affords. Work while we can, for soon the last trump will sound to call together the saints of God. It is then we shall be judged according to our works. May we not like the foolish virgins be found lacking.

Charity and benevolence at home, will aid on the stage of action, and together with the love of God will enrich the soil of our hearts, and enable us to sow more abundantly, that the harvest may be plenteous. There should be no tares in home culture, that when in sowing broadcast the world may be benefited by the fruits of our labor.

Come, sinner, will you be a christian, and labor with us for a little while? Help us to improve the soil, sow and reap, and gather in a rich harvest, that when Jesus comes to take us home, we may hear his voice (for we shall know the voice of our dear Shepherd) say, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, enter thou into thy joy."

Camden, N. J. Wm. H. Fay.

"Watch, therefore!"—I am coming, says Christ, therefore, watch! I am coming suddenly! therefore, watch! I am coming quickly! therefore watch! Time is passing away. The world is growing old. NEW VOLUME.

It will be observed that this is the first number of a new volume. Now is the time to pay in advance for the next volume. We would express out thanks to those who have made most noble and successful efforts to secure new subscribers. If the letters we receive, could be read by those who have been instrumental in persuading others to take the paper, we think they would feel well paid for their labors. We hope our preaching brethren will take special pains to get new subscribers. We would entreat them not to neglect this matter. Much good may be thus accomplished.

OUR NEW OFFICE.

About the first of April, we purpose to move into our new office, corner of Hanover and Salem Streets, directly opposite our present situation. We have secured very pleasant rooms over the Boston drug store. We have reason to thank the Lord that we are able to obtain such a desirable location.

RUTLAND.

The interest in the meetings at Rutland, Vt., continues unabated. The Lord is giving us rich feasts. Some of the Brn. and Srs. are receiving very extra blessings, such as they have not experienced before for many years. People who have been much prejudiced against us, and would not come near our meetings some years since, are now rejoicing with us, and taking an active part in the meetings. Sectarian walls are tumbling down, and the Lord's true children in the various denominations see the importance of true christian union, if they would enjoy the constant smiles of our heavenly Father.

While Satan is doing all in his power to unite the church and world in fairs, festivals, oyster suppers, tea-meetings, bazars, concerts, sleigh-rides, donations, visits, surprise parties, picnics, etc., etc., the real christians should separate themselves from everything of the kind, and unite around Jesus, and sanctify themselves wholly to him, and be ready to meet him at his coming, that they may have a seat at the marriage supper of the Lamb. The time has come when a point of doctrine not essential to salvation, about which honest, good men may differ, should not be made a test of christian fellowship. Every christian should be united with every other christian against the swelling tide of cold formalism that threatens destruction to all vital godliness. This is seen and felt in Rutland at the present time.

At our last meeting, Sabbath evening, March 13th, nine new ones came forward for prayers, besides several who were professors of religion. The Spirit of the Lord is with us in earnest power. Several Methodists, Baptists and Congregationalists, render efficient aid in the meetings, and in return are richly blest.

A few years since, a Christian Association was formed in Rutland, but those looking for the coming of Jesus, who believed in the sleep of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked, were not allowed to join. A happy change has taken place.

Yesterday (Sabbath, March 13th,) we were requested to read the following notice:—

"The union meeting of the Y.M.C.A., at their rooms in Bank Building, to-morrow evening, will be conducted by Elder Grant, instead of Bro. Murray, as formerly announced: Bro. Murray giving way by request of the officers and numerous brethren of the association.
O. L. SLADER, Pres."

We complied with the request, and had a very large gathering, and an interesting meeting. Four rose for prayers. We received a cordial welcome by Bro. Slader, and others connected with the Association. The Young Man's Christian Associations are doing much towards breaking down sectarianism, the curse of christianity. If they put the religious standard where it should be, they will accomplish great good, by uniting those who truly love Jesus; otherwise, it will become necessary to have another christian union, composed of all humble, sincere followers of Jesus, who are willing to come out from the world, and be separate, believe the truth instead of fables, loving the appearing of Jesus, being in harmony with Christ and all his children. Such, and only such, can expect to be ready for "the marriage of the Lamb." The mass of professors have become so worldly minded, and the standard of church fellowship so low, it is exceedingly dangerous for a young convert to join most of the churches of the present day. When we arrive at such a state of things, it is [illegible] left in the churches to unite together, and lay aside their sectarian prejudice; and do all in their power to save the deluded and perishing.

A HARD QUESTION.

Smith's Bible Dictionary and the Comprehensive Commentary reads that Jesus died Friday, three o'clock P. M., and rose early on the first day of the week. How could he have been three days and three nights in the heart of the earth? Please illustrate the subject.
N. A. ANGELL.

We are not able to show how the Savior could have been three days and nights in the earth, if he was not crucified till Friday, three P. M., and rose early on the first day of the week. Friday and Saturday nights are only two. We believe he was crucified Thursday afternoon.

A WORTHY EXAMPLE.

A Bro. sends us from his own purse pay for five new subscribers, and says: "All these men are leading men in the —— church. The first two are preachers, and the others hold prominent positions in the church. I am encouraged to do this, for I believe that I can thus silently, by the blessing of God, and our excellent paper—the Crisis—accomplish a good work in bringing men to the light of truth. A few months ago, I ordered the Crisis sent to Bro. ——, also a preacher in the same church, and the little leaven is doing its work effectually, making due allowance for life-long prejudice against our views. My object is to try to get the whole leavened; for men who think, soon fall in with our views, when by so doing the Scriptures so beautifully harmonize. Bro. —— remarked that now he can make the Bible harmonize by believing in the unconscious state of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked. It is only a very few months ago that he was quite opposed. Among many of the so-called "orthodox" believers the Crisis falls like a bomb-shell, knocking the scales right and left, and is a well of living water springing up within them to everlasting life."

PROGRESSION.

There is no doubt about the progress that is being made in these last days. It is a subject of boasting among many church members. They look back with contempt on the steady habits of their fathers, and rejoice that they can now have their scenes of amusement, fun and frolic like the worldly people. Indeed, the churches have become the leaders in the most fashionable amusements of these strange times. It may well be asked, To what are we coming? What would the plain, holy John Wesley say to such notices as the following, from the New York Tribune?

"The concert last evening at the Attorney St. Methodist Protestant church by the young ladies and gentlemen connected with the church, for the benefit of the pastor, was a success. The selections were mostly solos and choruses, and were from the popular music of the day. Several of the singers received encores and floral tributes from their friends. A pleasant feature of the affair was a substantial and well-served supper in the Sunday school rooms, and after the large assemblage had regaled themselves in squads of one hundred at a time, dancing was enjoyed in an adjoining room."

"The ladies of West Danby, Vt., are to hold a levee and social of the M. E. Church on Tuesday evening, March 15th, to which all are cordially invited. Messrs Bradford and Childs of Bennington have engaged to be present to entertain the people with recitations from the poets, sacred and humorous—the whole to conclude with a supper and dance at the hall. The receipts are to be used for church repairs."

It is truly astonishing to see the progress that churches are making. What next? Is it not time for christians to heed the Bible injunction in 2 Tim. 3: 5?

WITHOUT NATURAL AFFECTION.

When moved by the Holy Spirit to describe the state of things "in the last days," Paul said the people would be "without natural affection." It is a lamentable fact that it is departing, or has departed from many hearts. We often hear of most inhuman scenes connected with fathers, mothers and children. The following is a sample:—

"At noon yesterday some workmen in Morgan street, Jersey City, discovered a party of boys kicking about what was supposed to be a bundle of rags, but on examination proved to be the remains of a male infant. The body was given in charge of a police officer, who consigned it to the temporary custody of Justice Haybeck. The body was horribly bruised, and evidences of strangulation were perceptible. The child was about three months old. The general impression is that the babe had been murdered, and its remains thrown into the gutter during the night."

THE ECUMENICAL COUNCIL.

Things at Rome are still in a very perplexed state. The Pope has a hard task on his hands. While we do not get but very little reliable information in relation to the doings of the Council, yet enough is known to remove all doubt as to the fact that the Pope and his associates are sorely perplexed. Their combined wisdom fails to contrive means to escape the dangers that threaten the throne of mystic Babylon. The hand-writing is on her wall—mene, mene, tekel. Her days are numbered, Her fall and end must be near. We are truly living "in a grand an awful time."

The following letter published in the New York Herald, March 7th, 1870, will give some idea of the state of things at Rome:—

"ROME, Feb. 15, 1870. Never was such an excitement produced here in the ecclesiastical circles in the immediate interest of the Court, as when the Allgemeine Zeitung made its appearance with twenty-one canons or schemata of the category De ecclesia published in its columns. How in the world did such a precious document slip out of the pocket of a bishop into that of a German correspondent? For we are not to suppose for a moment that any bishop could or would willingly communicate what he had sworn to keep secret to the typographic trumpet of fame.

It is rumored that some venerable father, reposing for a few minutes in one of the lateral apartments adjourning the Council Hall, put down his bundle of schemata inadvertently, and on recollecting them subsequently found that they had disappeared from the spot on which he had left them. It is said that Archbishop Darboy complained of having lost the manuscript of his speech immediately after completing his oration. It is hinted that there may be such a contingency as a bishop letting a bundle of papers fall designedly among a crowd of curious [illegible] that among 1,800 theologians, who constantly attend the fathers of the Council, and know everything they think, say and do, there may chance to be one or two who do not so strictly adhere to the obligations of secrecy as the Supreme Pontiff has inculcated. But the fact is undeniable that documents relating to the Council have got abroad before they have been yet decided on by that assembly, and as the same indiscretion was committed repeatedly and repeatedly complained of during the Council of Trent, it is to be presumed that human nature has not changed in the lapse of 300 years, and that the curiosity of the majority will prevail over the reticence of the minority.

Since my last letter the great event here, in a political sense, has been the declaration of the French ambassador to Cardinal Antonelli of his government's intentions to withdraw the French troops from the Pope's dominions in case of the declaration of his personal infallibility. This announcement took place at the beginning of this month, and it was a singular coincidence that immediately afterwards, in its number for the 5th February, the Civitta Cattolica published a leading article, entitled the 'Sham Politicians and the Council,' containing the following remarkable expressions:—'Violence is not to be resorted to by the State in Catholic countries to counteract any pretended injuries which might be inflicted by the Ecumenical Council with its dogmatic or disiplinarian definitions. If such means were to be adopted the State would certainly damage the church much, but it would destroy itself. The Church, however, would soon recover its equilibrium, but the State would plunge into a hopeless abyss. This fact we think that governments understand well, and therefore we are convinced that they will not give ear to subtle counsellors of expedients which would conduct them to infallible ruin.' . . . . The friends of the Papal government considered the French Emperor and his Ambassador here as having incurred divine vengeance for insulting the church. There is no new step as yet in the Council. General congregations have been held every day this week, and speeches are being made without end, always on the arduous topic, 'De vita et honestate clericorum;' but the oppositionists confirm their attention of making it a race against time and defeating all the propositions of the government by delivering endless orations against them. The discussions are certainly drawing their slow length along to a degree of protraction which will render it impossible for the assembly to get through any single category of schemata, followed up, as they will be, by their respective postulata before the hot weather sets in. Finally, I am assured that both the postulata for and against the personal infallibility of the Pope have been presented to the consideration of the commission appointed to judge of the opportuneness of such new propositions. The announcements previously current of their presentation were premature."

THE CHRISTIAN CYNOSURE.

If any of our readers wish for a valuable paper, opposed to all secret societies, and especially to Free Masonry, they will be gratified in reading "The Christian Cynosure," published by Ezra A. Cook, 88 La Salle Street, Chicago. It is published semi-monthly, at $1.00 a year, 60 cts. for six months, and 30 cts. for three months. It is conducted with ability, and contains facts that all should read. The following is from the number for Jan. 25th:—

"RAREY, THE HORSE-TAMER.

Most of our readers will remember Rarey, the horse-tamer; how he would take a young wild horse, and tame him right down in a few minutes, so that he would never be wild again. The way he did it was, to make a profound impression, upon the noble young animal, by means of physical force, mingled with kindess. We once saw a horse-tamer take a horse known to be wild and vicious, upon the stage of a theater, behind the curtain; and after a few kicks and struggles, and a heavy fall, the curtain was drawn, and behold! the conquering man sat upon the prostrate animal, that had fallen in perfect submission to a superior power. The man could do anything with him; crawl between his legs, trample upon him, and even kick him, without exciting the least sign of resentment. It was a glorious triumph for the man, but a perfect enslavement for the horse.

And thus it is with the old, hard-headed initiator, who takes a free, manly, and noble youth behind the mystic curtain of secret societies. In the practice of his diabolical art, and by the means of daggers, skull and cross bones, hemp around the neck, coffins, sudden transitions from darkness to light, etc., the young man's sensibilities are so profoundly impressed that his manhood falls prostrate at one. When the curtain of initiation is finally drawn, that is—when the youth appears again in public, he is no longer the same man. He lies prostrate and panting, and the villainous wire-pullers of the secret society may hencefort trample upon him, and even kick him, without drawing the least sign of resentment, or of manly indignation. He is henceforth tamed, and will draw steadily at whatever burden the leaders of the secret society may impose upon him.

As he is still a man, however, in contradistinction from a horse, he is guided and acted upon by religious and moral ideas. He is made to believe that this unmanning of himself in his subjection to a scheming clique of speculative operators, is equal to religion; nay, better; it is pure, holy, divine; and hence, while subserving the basest and most selfish of purposes, he is taught that he is performing his moral and religious duties to God and man!

Nor can he henceforth clearly perceive the difference, though Masonic charity is no more like Christian charity than the painted strumpet is like the innocent girl. He has had his religious qualities, his qualities of fear and hope; so violently, suddenly, and artfully jarred upon by a set of cunning knaves, that he can no longer discriminate between pure religious ideas, and falsehoods. Having been violently subjected to the powers of priestcraft by a set of ignorant and wicked manipulators, who set up sanctimonious pretenses to moral purity, he comes to think that all religion and morality are nothing but priestcraft—nothing but jugglery practiced by a set of cunning priests at the expense of credulous followers."

A SENSIBLE ANSWER.

A lady asked Bro. Pomeroy, a Methodist preacher, if he thought it was hurtful for her to read the Ledger, and other similar papers?

"My friend, that depends much on your moral condition. They say crows can eat carrion and thrive on it, while it would kill some birds. Some ministers are not hurt by going to horse-racing, theatres, various shows, and becoming free masons, etc., while others say their conscience, the word and Spirit of God, require them to abandon all such associations. It's the pure spirits who get hurt with badness. And if I am to judge of your moral state by the folly hanging on to your apparel, I doubt if a dozen Ledgers would hurt you. It is probable that you are unhurtable by such things."

A CHALLENGE.—I, John McQueen, of Hillsdale, Mich., hereby challenge any celebrated Spiritist, mediums, or spirit-lecturers, to discuss the following: "Resolved, That departed human spirits communicate with mortals, and can be demonstrated a fact, by departed spirits." Find me a man. I deny.

FAST.

As the approaching Boston Conference will be of much importance, we would invite those who feel a special desire that it may be a happy success, to set apart Friday, April 1st, as a day of fasting and prayer, asking the Lord to make the conference the best one we have ever held in Boston; and that its heavenly influence may be widely extended.

PERSONAL.—We are saddened to learn that Bro. Ramsey, pastor of the church in Chicago, is sick. He has labored very earnestly in the vineyard of the Lord, and is prostrated as the result. Pray for him. He is one of the true men.

CURIOSITY.—A Bro. writes:—"I subscribed at first for your paper out of curiosity; but now believe that your views of the Bible are right, and should be received by every one."

LOWELL ST. CHAPEL.

Association has made this a sacred place to many. Here many have sought and found the Savior; and from the memory of this fact, dear old "Lowell St." seems a hallowed spot to them. Everything in and around it seems dear as a thing of life; and as the time approaches when this association within her walls must be broken up, the affections cling more closely to it, and fancy beautifies the staid old pulpit with its towering front, and one is caught unconsciously repeating—

"With all thy faults, I love thee still."

It isn't the structure, nor the location that fastens itself upon the mind in pleasant revery; but it is the association—the memory of a great joy, the dawning of new hopes, the birth of peace in the heart, first experienced here. Some, who were among the first associated as a religious band at Lowell Street, have fallen by the hand of death; with them association ended with life. Others still kneel at her altar; still give voice to their emotions in prayer and praise; still bless God for a long-uninterrupted association with a people looking for the return of the Master. They praise God that nothing has been able to separate them from the love of Christ and the fellowship of saints. Some, who worship here, have grown gray in the service of God; while others are in the prime of active usefulness; and some are but beginners, having wrought but an hour, as it were, in the vineyard of the Lord. But young, middle-aged, and the aged, cannot think of Lowell Street Chapel without the recollection of some happy hour spent there; and a half formed regret will well up from the heart at the thought of leaving her to worship at a new shrine, and, perhaps, from new associations under different auspices.

In memory of past experiences, whether rose-colored or sombre in their bearing, and in view of future changes, and their attendant results, let us, one and all, strive with prayerful earnestness to make this last general conference at Lowell Street the best religious feast ever known to its oldest members; that its influence may not tell upon the church only, but the assembly at large; and that its influence may not be felt during the meeting merely, but may go out to bless all who shall come in, and that, too, during our waiting time till Jesus comes. All who have ever worshiped here, and will be here during our conference, cast in your mite of influence—lend your aid to the work of God.

Why meet to preach the word, and pray and exhort, if not for blessing and being blest? All blessing comes in answer to prayer. Then let us pray that God's special blessing may rest upon the church, upon the assembly of preachers, brethren and friends, that those coming as strangers to Christ, may go thence rejoicing in hope of eternal life at the appearing and kingdom of our Savior.

Brethren and sisters, will you pray that the conference may not be merely a social interview between friends of Jesus, but that it may be a special move for the salvation of souls and the glory of God. Jesus is coming. This is no hour for faint-hearted prayers and lame excuses. Work with a will, and pray with a faith that admits of no denial. God is able, and willing, and ready, to perform all that the prayer of faith can request. It is left with you to determine whether you will be abundantly blest at this conference or not, and whether backsliders shall be reclaimed, and sinners saved. God help you to be in earnest in the matter, and not deem one prayer sufficient, but be willing to wrestle with God, that victory may come to the church of Christ. Do not wait until conference time to think of it, but commence now, that the purposes of the meeting may not be hindered with confessions of coldness and a lack of interest in the service of Christ.

"Up, oh! up, thou drowsy soldier, Worlds are charging to the shock."

Resolved, That we raise THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund the ensuing year.

It is proposed to raise this amount during the year for the publication and free distribution of tracts. The value of these little preachers in the work of enlightening and saving men from darkness and death can hardly be overestimated; and the generous and liberal stewards of the Lord's money are earnestly invited to contribute according to their ability in aid of the good work. Send on your dimes and dollars, brethren, with a liberal hand, and receive, by and by, the reward of the liberal giver.

MEMPHIS MISSION.

The friends and supporters of the Mission will remember that we made a special appeal in the Crisis a few weeks since in relation to matters of a financial character. We then stated that the City Board of Education had refused to employ our teachers, which left the entire burden upon us.

We are happy to state that the President of the Society has been to Memphis and brought about a reconciliation; so that our teachers are employed and paid for the present school year, up to June next, and things are now in a prosperous condition. We thank the friends for the help they have given, and would say that we are now out of debt, and will be able to meet all our obligations for three months to come.

In the mean time we would say to the friends of Missions that the Executive Board desire means that they may be able to send the gospel among the whites, both north and south. Let none withhold support from the missionary work.

LETTER FROM BRO. BLAIN.

BRO. GRANT:—I again ask room in the Crisis to make a fourth report of my work in giving pamphlets, to spread the truths we believe to be specially important to God's cause in our morally dark world. My views have not changed as to the good effects of this plan; for I get renewed evidence that I labor not in vain, and that money thus expended tells more for the cause of truth, in proportion to the amount used, than what is given to scatter tracts. I think our eastern and western publication societies give out from twelve to fifteen hundred dollars yearly in tracts, while I have for three years given out only about two hundred and fifty dollars per year in pamphlets. About eight thousand have, I think, been prudently scattered; making, in printed matter, about seventy-five thousand sermons. These are preserved and lent for years, as tracts seldom are. There are probably at least forty-five thousand Protestant preachers in the United States and Canada, and to these tracts are of but little use, and but a small part of them have yet had any of our books; though in some States enough have read them to almost stop their preaching endless torment. As they will seldom hear our preachers, books have done the most to effect this change, and if we persevere in getting books and pamphlets into their hands, we shall soon see a far greater change, as we constantly hear of some being convinced. Intelligent and reading persons also need more Bible and argument than can be put in a tract; and when they get the truth, their influence tells on the less informed.

We learn from the Rainbow, and other sources, that a great change is going on in England. Elder E. White wrote me, last spring, that his work and Bro. Dobney's, first given out twenty years ago, had been the main cause. These are the works that begin with the higher classes; and as the multitude will follow leaders, we should aim to reach them, and books must be our main hope. The main points of our reform are now quite generally known in the Northern States, and what is wanted are works large enough to prove them true.

I rejoice that we are to have a good work by our convention soon, and shall do all in my power to spread it; but I see it will leave a vacancy; it will cost too much to be given away in large numbers, and also fail to be bought by multitudes who would buy a cheaper work if offered to them. This vacancy should be filled, that truth may spread the more rapidly; and I purpose doing a little part of this work, if God permits, and means can be obtained.

Experience has taught us that about all who see the life and death question embrace also the glad tidings of a soon coming Savior; and my observation yet tells me that most who get this truth, first learn that evil is to end. Such works therefore answer a double purpose. Some do see the coming of Christ, and yet teach endless torment, and we have seen the result; they are yet "in a corner." God does not bless by enlarging their numbers. We should observe these things and learn wisdom.

As I am the only one who has attempted giving out pamphlets largely, and having seen the good effects, I wish to continue the work while life and strength are granted. Thanks be to God that these are better than three years ago, though seventy-eight to-day. I am out of my work into one hundred, and want to print one or two thousand by March, to be ready to give out at tent and campmeetings in different States the coming season, and also send packages to brethren who often write for them, the same as they do for tracts to our publishing offices.

Who will donate for this, as well as for other good objects? I can get what credit I ask for printing, but wish to be sure of means to pay; and so if brethren wish to aid, and will send me the amount next summer, I will print more or less as I feel encouraged. I shall print one thousand at least, so that all who wish to pay for any may have them at cost, if I am not able to let them go free. We need a cheap pamphlet for those who are struggling to give light in new fields. Such would get the more if they could have them free. Being in debt, I printed no works in 1869, and am out of my six tracts, having given out eight thousand in three years, with my pamphlet. Some may possibly think I ought not to give, and sell at cost, as it may lessen sales by those who sell at a profit; and some such may need such profits; but this would be a mistaken view, for the more light is spread, the more readers and buyers will increase, and in the end they will sell the more. If we wish a large harvest, we must make a waste to sow much seed. Reformers should always give, or sell their works as cheap as consistent, and will do so if they aim to do good, and not to make money. True, some need profits to live on. For three years past, I have published the names of brethren who have aided in my work, but will omit it this year, as some only wish to have "their record on high." Job 16: 19. By traveling and preaching some last season, I was able to obtain enough to pay up my debt for printing of $150, and partly enough to live on. I traveled mostly east, but was able to see a few liberal friends west.

Many thanks to kind brethren, who have relieved me from the burden of debt. I did not err in confiding in them, when I gave out works in advance of what I had received. Bless God, that their love for Jesus and his truth does not grow cold, as it seems to with christians who cannot think of glory to come, without thinking of a hell of misery for most of their fellow beings. I shall be home till spring. My address is simply Buffalo, N. Y.

Buffalo, Feb. 1st, 1870. J. BLAIN.

ADULTERY, OR CLINGING TO MOSES AND CHRIST TOO.

If I understand the force of the apostle's reasoning in Rom. 7, it is, that those who attempt to be married to Christ, and still cling to Moses, are virtually committing adultery. "For the woman which hath an husband is bound by the law to her husband, so long as he liveth; but if the husband be dead, she is loosed from the law of her husband. So then if, while the husband liveth, she be married to another man, she shall be called an adulteress; but if her husband be dead, she is free from that law; so that she is no adulteress, though she be married to another man. Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God."

What is the lesson the apostle brings out by this illustration? It seems simply this: that the church was married to a husband, but he being dead, she is at liberty to be married to Christ. Who was that husband? "But now we are delivered from the LAW, THAT BEING DEAD wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter." Would he have us understand that the law was represented by the dead husband? Certainly, or his reasoning is of no force. Can the law still be alive, and we be united to Christ without committing adultery? Certainly not. "But that means the ceremonial law." That is an expression not found in the Bible; but let us see if it does. "I had not known sin but by the law; for I had not known lust, except the law had said, Thou shalt not covet." Was that the ceremonial law? or the decalogue engraven on stones? People claim a difference between the law of God and the law of Moses, but they are used interchangeably in many places. "And when the days of her purification, according to the law of Moses, were accomplished," etc. (as it is written in the law of the Lord . . .); and to offer a sacrifice according to that which is said in the law of the Lord."—Luke 2: 22–24. The ten-commandment law is called the law of Moses. "Remember ye the law of Moses my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments."—Mal. 4: 4. What law was given in Horeb? "And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them on two tables of stone."

We learn by this that the law of Moses, in Mal. 4: 4, is what is claimed to be the law of God, or the ten commandments, and also that that is part of the old covenant which Paul said was faulty, and ready in his day to vanish away, to make room for the new. That which was engraven on tables of stone was part of the covenant, and that is what is "done away." "And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words; for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread, nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments."—Ex. 34: 27–28.

I have heard it asserted that the ten commandments were no part of the old covenant; but this seems plain enough that they were, and the "ark" that they were kept in was "the ark of the covenant." The law "was added because of transgression, till the seed should come to whom the promise was made; and it was ordained by angels in the hands of a mediator."—Gal. 3: 19. What was the law added to? The promise of inheritance to Abraham. How long after the promise was it added? "Four hundred and thirty years." Why was it added? "Because of transgression," or to keep their wickedness in check. How long was it to be in force? "Till the seed should come." Then, when the seed came, it was no longer in force. The old covenant run out by limitation. It was made with the Jews, and its promises and blessings were for them only. The dispensation being changed, and the middle wall of partition being broken, it was necessary to have a change in the law. "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also in the law. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by the which we draw nigh unto God."—Heb. 7: 12, 19. "For if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law."—Gal. 3: 21.

We often hear it said that the ten commandments were moral precepts, and it is impossible for a moral precept to be abolished. They were no more moral precepts than all the other commands or requirements of the law. Is not this a moral precept:—"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might, and thy neighbor as thyself"? This is not in the decalogue, but in the law people admit was abolished. When the young man came to Jesus to ask him which was the greatest commandment in the law, he referred him, not to one of the ten, but to this one separate and distinct. That which was engraven in stones was abolished also. "But if the ministration of death, written and engraven in stones, was glorious, so that the children of Israel could not steadfastly behold the face of Moses, for the glory of his countenance, which (glory) was to be done away; how shall not the ministration of the spirit be rather glorious. For if the ministration of condemnation be glory, much more doth the ministration of righteousness exceed in glory. . . . For if that which was done away was glorious, much more that which remaineth is glorious. Seeing, then, that we have such hope, we use great plainness of speech; and not as Moses, which put a vail over his face, that the children of Israel could not steadfastly look to the end of that which was abolished."—2 Cor. 3: 7–14. What was abolished? "The ministration of death, written and engraven in stones." What was engraven in stones? "The ten commandments." "The law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, that we might be justified by faith. But after that faith is come, ye are no longer under a schoolmaster."—Gal. 3: 24, 25.

Moses was the mediator of the old covenant, Christ the mediator of the new. The old covenant was dedicated with blood, so was the new. Moses was the head of the Jewish church, and was faithful in all his house; Christ is the head of the Christian church. "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if the first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. . . . In that he saith a new covenant, he hath made the first old. Now that which decayeth and waxeth old is ready to vanish away."—Heb. 8: 6, 7, 13. The old covenant, with all its penalties, passed away. The time it was to be in force ended. The seed came. It was to be in force "till" then. The schoolmaster came, and we did not need it any longer. He established the new and better covenant. Now we are commanded to "hear him." What he has commanded is our law. Some ridicule the idea of Christ's being a lawgiver, and of the law of Christ. Paul says we are "under the law to Christ."—1 Cor. 9: 11. Isaiah says, in speaking of Christ, "The isles shall wait for his law." Isa. 42: 4. Jesus says himself, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you."—John 15: 14. The Father acknowledged his authority and said, "HEAR HIM." Every soul that will not "hear him" will be destroyed from among the people. It is Christ, instead of Moses. I think he is good authority.

What there was in the old covenant, which he wanted brought into the new, has been re-enacted. So he says, "Ye have heard that it was said by them of old time, Thou shalt not commit adultery; but I say unto you, that whosoever looketh on a woman to lust after her hath committed adultery with her already in his heart"; thus showing his authority for making any change for the discipline of both Jews and Gentiles in this dispensation, preparatory to their both entering his kingdom. The man that will not obey his laws here, and be loyal, cannot have the blessings of his kingdom.

Now that Mosaic covenant being ended, can we still cling to it and to Christ too, without virtually committing adultery, and greatly dishonoring the husband we are now bound to, and commanded to "hear"? It is no wonder that those who go back to the keeping of the old law, or to the old husband, for a time, and find they have "fallen from grace," and come back to Christ again, and "hear him," always say—"I thank God I am now out of BONDAGE." Such can appreciate the force of the apostle's words, "Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage" (Gal. 5: 1), referring directly to "Sinai, which gendereth to bondage." "Christ is become of none effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace."—Gal. 5: 4. "For if righteousness come by the law, then Christ is dead in vain."—Gal. 2: 21.

For the World's Crisis.

WARWICK, R. I.

We visited the church on the old Warwick Plains, and it seemed good; and reminded us of days gone by to see the old chapel so crowded, and so many anxious to hear the truth. The conference in the forenoon was very interesting. Many spoke of the goodness of God, seeming determined to endure unto the end. At about twelve o'clock, twenty-two were led forward and baptized by Brn. Roberts and Noka. The church is prospering under the labors of Bro. Roberts. He is a little man, very spirited, and well versed in all present truths. Preaching in the afternoon by Bro. Peter Noka, of Westerly, R. I. He gave a very interesting sermon on "being planted in his likeness," etc. In his illustrations of the state of society, said he, Where I live, they have armed men to watch the bank to keep out thieves, and besides they have to bar, bolt, and lock the door; but he never read in all the word of God of a bar, or bolt, nor armed men to keep thieves out of the kingdom, as none can ever go there. And never did he read of a lock upon that door, for that door was always open.

As we looked over the congregation, we missed many an old warrior that had fallen asleep in Jesus. We truly missed among that number Bro. Geo. Champlin, who had been their pastor most of the time for the last twenty-five years; and we thought, could the old chapel speak, it would have told of many a prayer offered by him for poor sinners, when scores were before the altar. While we stood by the water's edge, they remained cold and silent; not a word did they speak, yet we could call to mind scores upon scores that he had buried beneath its waves, to rise and walk in newness of life. May all meet him in the new earth to part no more forever.

For the World's Crisis.

GOOD NEWS FROM PORTER, ME.

A little more than a year ago, some ten or twelve persons in this place covenanted together to serve the Lord, and started for the kingdom. The Lord has been with us, and we have had many refreshing seasons when met for worship, and it can be truly said of us, Behold, how they love one another. Preaching brethren have visited us, and have preached the present truth to us, and we have been searching the Scriptures for ourselves, and find that the signs of Christ's coming are all in the past, except the sign of the Son of the Son of man; and all prophecy that is not fulfilled converges to a focal point, not far from this time.

In view of the nearness of the coming of the Just One, and of the judgment of the great day, we feel that it is necessary that we should spend each day to the honor and glory of God. While we have been striving to purify ourselves, our fears have become alarmed for the unconverted, and our united prayers have been ascending to God for the salvation of those who have no interest in the Savior. We have been holding on to his sure promises, and thank heaven our petitions have been heard and answered, and six precious souls have been converted and reclaimed within a few weeks, and are now rejoicing in the love of God. O how good and blessed it is to hear their testimonies for Jesus. There are many more who are becoming deeply interested, and are almost persuaded to be christians. We expect to see more come to Jesus soon. We feel that there is a great work to be done here.

Bro. T. E. Lang has been laboring here some three weeks, with good success. O bless the Lord for what he has done, and is still doing. I do feel to thank him, that he ever put it into my heart to search for truth in these days, when men turn to fables. Truly the perils of the last days are upon us. Let others do as they will, I feel that as for me, I will serve the Lord, and be ready to meet my Savior in peace when he comes.

Porter, Me., Feb. 21st. ALBERL RICE.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

BRO. GRANT:—Glory to God, I am glad I am yet alive, and that I am living in this age of the world, when light is shining more brilliantly than ever before on the word of the Lord. It seems to me that no one can be mistaken in regard to the fulfillment of God's word. Truly we are in the perils of "the last days," as the apostle said: "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come." I am sure there never was a time when men were such lovers of themselves, as at the present time. Almost every one has so much care and love for himself, that he hardly thinks that there is any one that needs help or aid under any circumstances.

Covetousness is one of the last day sins. This, with unbelief, is destined to destroy many souls. Men love this world with a perfect love, therefore the love of the Father is not in them. We cannot serve two masters. I am more and more convinced that the end of all things is at hand. Glory to God, I want to see him, and be made like him.

Yours truly, looking for Jesus soon to come, J. A. CLEAVELAND.

East Montpelier, Vt.

From Sr. S. E. Teeple.

BRO. GRANT:—It is a privilege to communicate our thoughts to each other through the Crisis. I am yet among the living, and trying to keep my head above the waves as they come dashing and foaming by me. Sometimes it seems as if I must sink to rise no more; but when I started I did so for life, let the voyage be longer or shorter; the sea calm or rough. I feel confidence in the Captain, that he will guide the ship, and bring it safe to land. I have often sung:

"Then we'll watch and we'll pray, as our vessel bears away,
And we ne'er will be disheartened any more;
For the port is getting nearer, and I hear the leader say,
We soon shall reach the harbor and the shore."

Thus, with my face as a flint Zionward, have tried to go against wind and tide, making my way towards the port of endless rest. I have no desire to go back, nor even look back. The heavenly music has elated me so, I must go; I will go. I have not much preaching but the Crisis, and I know how to sympathize with others who are in some isolated place, sick and suffering; but praise God, the day is nearing when they will come from the east, west, north, and south, to inhabit the land, where the inhabitants will no more say I am sick. God bless the children, and give them a new impetus for the kingdom.

S. E. TEEPLE.

Hotchkissville, Ct., March 3d, 1870.

BRO. J. M. HACKETT writes from Dover, N. H., Feb. 25th, 1870:—"We are enjoying a blessed season of a revival of the work of the Lord in this place, under the faithful labors of Bro. Hook, whose efforts in the cause of our dear Savior, since our tent-meeting, in Sept., have been greatly blessed. Some have commenced the pilgrim journey to the land of rest; and, recently, during a series of meetings now in progress backsliders have been reclaimed, and the dear children revived and strengthened on their pilgrimage journey. The interest increases, and the work goes on. Yesterday (Sabbath Feb. 27th) was a memorable day with us. At the close of the forenoon service, the multitude repaired to the bank of the river to witness the solemnity of the baptismal scene. Three believing, obedient children were buried with Christ in the liquid grave, and raised in the likeness of his resurrection, with the impress of his divine approval. The scene was solemn and delightful.

In the afternoon, the grace of God that bringeth salvation was richly enjoyed; and in the evening, at an early hour, the hall was filled with attentive hearers, who listened with deep interest to Bro. Hook, while he gave a prophetic description of Rome, its present crisis, and impending doom. To God be all the glory for what he has done."

BRO. S. S. WOOD writes from Whitehall: "I must tell you what the Crisis has done for me. I had used tobacco for forty years, and one year ago the 17th of last Jan., I stopped that most filthy habit, and have not touched the filthy stuff since. Two weeks ago, I started to serve the Lord."

BLAMING OTHERS.—A disposition to lay the blame for our neglect of duty, or our shortcomings, upon others, is a sure sign that we have inwardly backslidden from God. The first transgressor endeavored, in this way, to palliate his offence, and his example has been faithfully followed ever since. God can make us right, whether any one else is right or not. Whoever may falter, he can enable us to do our duty. When we fail, we should blame ourselves, and no one else. In this way alone can we hope to obtain forgiveness for the past, or make improvement in the future.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, March 18. A correspondent at Rome telegraphs here that the rumor of the Pope's illness is confirmed. The Bishops of Besancon and Neveis take the lead in opposition to the infallibility dogma.

PARIS, March 21. The Opinion Nationale has a remarkable editorial to-day. It demands the withdrawal of the French troops from Rome, the renunciation of the concordat, and suppression of the budget, for public worship, and declares that should these measures be carried out, nothing will be left to Rome but imbecility and fraud.

DOMESTIC.

New York, March 10. Recent advices state that another insurrection had broken out in Hayti. The Piquets in the Southern Department are in arms against the new Provisional government, and the partisans of the late President Salnave are joining them. The government has sent reinforcements to the army in the field, and several war steamers have also been dispatched to the South. Thus Saget is hardly in his seat before he is called upon to go through the experiences of his predecessor, Salnave.

New York, Feb. 21. Correspondence from Salt Lake City reveals the fact that the passage of the act to give woman suffrage in Utah was the work both of the Mormons and the Gentiles, the Legislature which passed it being Mormon, and the Governor who signed it being Gentile. The two parties entertain different views of the way in which it will work.

EXTRAORDINARY RELIGIOUS REVIVAL.—A very remarkable religious revival is in progress in the Baptist church at Rondout, New York, of which Rev. Wm. H. Evans is pastor. It began about the middle of November, and has increased in extent and interest ever since. So remarkable and numerous are the conversions, says the Poughkeepsie Eagle, that the influence of the meetings is felt for many miles, both in and out of Ulster county. Five hundred and fifty persons have already been forward for prayers, and over four hundred have united with the church on probation. Among the converts are those of all ages, from seventy-nine to nine. Hotel keepers, wholesale and retail liquor dealers and confirmed inebriates have ceased their traffic in and use of liquor. Whole families have been brought out together, and in some cases as many as nine in a family. A large number of Roman Catholics are also among those who have been converted. People flock to Rondout from adjoining towns and villages, and the excitement increases daily.

SUBTERRANEAN LAKES. In connection with a notice of the subterranean pond supposed to exist at Worcester, the Lawrence American makes the annexed statement:

"In Stockton, Cal., and immediately around it, an abundant supply of good water can be had anywhere by boring down a dozen feet with a common augur with a long handle. Pic-nic parties carry a pump and stand, lead pipe and an auger as a part of the required articles for the day. But a very short time is expended in obtaining water. The fire reservoirs have no bottoms and require no filling, the water coming in freely as soon as they are dug. It was necessary to change the place of burial first selected in the town, the water penetrating the graves and partially filling them. Yet there is no healthier place than that locality in that or any other state. An artesian well was sunk one thousand two hundred feet in 1855, and ever since has thrown up a solid column of water ten feet above the surface of the ground. Some thirty or forty miles from Stockton there is a large tract called 'float land' which moves on the surface, probably of a lake, several hundred feet at times. Hundreds of cattle graze upon it with perfect safety. It is supposed to have been formed much as the Worcester land. There are several pieces of such ground in different countries of Europe."

MR. REVEL'S IN THE SENATE.—Washington, March 7th.—Not ten years have elapsed since a Methodist clergyman, who was on a visit to this city, endeavored to enter the gallery of the Senate, but was refused admittance, because, as the doorkeeper rudely told him "Niggers were not allowed there." To-day that same man, notwithstanding his African descent, stood upon the floor of the Senate Chamber, the peer of the leading men of the land, to speak as a Senator from the State of Mississippi.

It was one of those grand scenes which the future historical painters of the republic will endeavor to portray upon canvas, but which words cannot describe.

Mr. Sumner appeared rewarded for years of persistent declaration of political equality. Gen. Wilson's frank countenance glowed with delight. Mr. Pomeroy appeared perfectly contented, and the republicans generally seemed to be well pleased with the successful result of their labors. Some of the Democrats at first attempted to indulge in humorous comments, but they soon became attentive listener, and Mr. Garrett Davis appeared to regard it as no laughing matter. (Mr. Saulsbury is in Delaware.) When Mr. Revels sat down Gov. Fenton congratulated him, then Mr. Cameron, and then other Republican Senators. His speech was a success. The colored man has fought well, has voted well and has spoken well.

Two Bishops of the African Methodist Episcopal Church, introduced on the floor by Mr. Sumner, had no reason to feel ashamed of their race, and the Senators at once ordered a large edition of this epoch-marking speech for distribution.—Cor. Boston Journal.

☞ By special appointment Rabbi Sneershord, of Jerusalem, accompanied by Dr. Samson, president of Columbian College, and A. S. Solomons, Esq., has had a prolonged interview with the Secretary of State relative to the present condition of the Israelites in the Holy Land.

The learned Rabbi has been a resident of Jerusalem for the last twenty-six years, and was eloquent in depicting the condition of his people, and the grievances under which they labor, on account of their having no government of their own or recognized foreign consul to appeal to in case of need, which is by no means infrequent. The Secretary sympathized fully with the Rabbi, and expressed his entire willingness to render his people all assistance consistent with the enlarged and progressive spirit of the Government.

Passing Events.

☞ The astronomers are just now turning their glasses in the direction of the sun, that luminary having lately broken out in a perfect rash of spots, some of them of enormous size. No less than eight groups of spots are visible, and the largest single spot covers a superficial area of not less than one thousand four hundred and fifty-eight millions of square miles, or seven times the superfices of the terraqueous globe.

☞ The Cumberland Presbyterians are introducing the custom of licensing colored preachers to preach "among people of their own color." The Cumberland Presbyterian denounces the practice as unchristian and unauthorized by the Bible, Confession, or form of Government.

☞ A California missionary says that after devoting two nights to visiting the underground drinking and free lunch saloons of San Francisco, it is not a mystery to him that the California State Prison has 799 inmates, and that a large proportion of them are youths.

☞ Colorado has as many daily papers as New Hampshire.

☞ It is said that three young Celestials are to enter Harvard University soon.

☞ It is reported that the Œcumenical Council is to decide, among other things, the price of masses in France. The demand in Paris exceeds the supply, while in the Provinces the supply exceeds the demand. Of course the city clergy apply to the country for assistance; but they are inclined to demand about seventy-five per cent. brokerage. Hence the assembled Bishops are called upon to adjudicate between the parties.

☞ A grand ministerial excursion is proposed for the coming summer, from Chicago to San Francisco and return. Clergymen of all denominations can procure for themselves and members of their families, tickets for the round trip for $118; only at the Chicago office of the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, however. As the trip is designed for a vacation excursion, tickets will be issued only from June 15 to July 15. They will be good for sixty days from date of issue, and will allow visits at various stations on the return. Information may be obtained of Rev. H. D. Jenkins, of Joliet, Ill.

☞ The American carpet-makers produce nine-tenths of all the carpets consumed in the United States. Philadelphia has no less than 4,500 looms engaged in this production. Great quantities of American carpets are sold as "foreign."

☞ A Quaker once hearing a person tell how much he felt for another who was in distress and needed assistance, dryly asked him: "Friend, hast thou felt in thy pocket for him?"

☞ Despatches from Japan report that another Japanese embassy is about starting on a tour through Europe and America.

☞ Rev. Albert Barnes is reported failing rapidly, and will hardly be able to live through the current year.

☞ Horse cars are to be introduced into China. An enterprising Prussian has obtained the privilege of laying down tramways in all the cities in the empire. At this rate, the familiar image of that municipal vehicle will soon possess the world.

☞ A western writer says if as much attention was paid to improving corn as is given to grapes, a hundred million bushels might be added to the annual crop.

☞ The rising of the Nile this year to a greater height than within living memory has done $40,000,000 damage.

☞ The Pope is said to have a very ferocious Bull in writing, which he proposes to promulgate against the Fenians, despite the remonstrances of Archbishop McCloskey of New York and all the sensible Irish priests present at the Council. McCloskey has spoken in very plain terms against the foolishness of the Pope. He is not the only one, for Napoleon Third is alleged to have spoken of the Holy Father as a "ranting old dunce" the other day.

☞ On the 1st of March the citizens of Paris saw the first of the twenty-five franc pieces struck at the Hotel des Monnaies. The issue of French coins almost equivalent to English sovereigns is another step towards a future coinage common to all Europe. The practical difference between a sovereign and twenty-five franc piece is less than three farthings.

☞ In spite of severe cold weather, the cholera rages with unabated violence in Moscow. Of 78 cases in one week, 40 proved fatal.

☞ There was something very like a fight in the Ecumenical Council the other day. Ghilardi, Bishop of Mondovi, a violent Italian, addressed the leaders of the Opposition with such acerbity that they rose, rushed toward the pulpit, shook their fists, and finally ran out of the hall.

☞ Queen Victoria is anxious to abdicate, but the Prince of Wales is afraid to ascend the throne. He pleads a lengthy delay.

☞ France is again talking of battle with Prussia. It is thought that if the liberal (?) Cabinet gets a firm hold chance for hostilities will at once be sought.

☞ It is asserted that the sessions of the Ecumenical Council are to be suspended during May, June and July.

☞ It is said that a new description of lava is being thrown from the crater of Vesuvius since the last eruption, consisting of crystallized salt. This beautiful phenomenon has heretofore been unknown in volcanic natural history.

GENERAL CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ worshiping at Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting:

Beloved in the Lord, believing that yet a little while and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry; and that the signs of the times indicate that we are among the predicted perils of the last days; and that we are rapidly approaching those scenes of final trouble such as never was, which shall convulse the world with sorrow and distress; we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ, and the preachers of his word who are interested in these momentous themes, without distinction of sect or name, to meet us at our place of worship, at the CORNER OF LOWELL AND CAUSEWAY STREETS, BOSTON, on Tuesday evening, April 5th, 1870, and to continue with us over the coming first day of the week:

To unite with us in worship and thanksgiving to God for his abundant mercies to all men, and to us who have learned his will, and tasted that he is gracious:

To listen to the proclamation of the truth of God for the edification of the church, and the preaching of the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand:

To exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching:

To invite sinners to Christ, the refuge from approaching wrath, pointing them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world:

To encourage each other in the great work, committed to us as a people, of proclaiming life and immortality through Christ alone, the resurrection of the dead, and the speedy coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For these objects we invite our brethren and sisters, and the servants of the Lord, and shall make them welcome to our worship, our homes, and our hospitalities, trusting that we may thus be blessed and comforted together. And we desire the prayers of God's people that our gathering together may be to the praise and glory of our heavenly Father. And when the mighty voice shall be heard, saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready;" may we all be found arrayed in that righteousness which alone will insure admission to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

The annual State Conference will hold their meeting for the choice of officers at Boston, Lowell Street Chapel, Friday, April 8th, at nine A. M. If delegates cannot come, represent yourselves by letter. Do not fail this time. Come, brethren, to this meeting, alive to every good work, and decide whether the Conference shall live and be a blessing in exerting a holy influence in converting men and spreading the truth; or shall it cease to be?

That our preachers may be at liberty to attend the Boston Conference, our next conference will be held at West Gloucester, R. I., commencing Wednesday, two o'clock P. A team will probably run to Putnam depot Wednesday and Thursday.

Per order of Moderator,
H. F. CARPENTER, Clerk.

Notice.

As I am intending to publish the new and enlarged edition of "Spiritual Melodies" in the first part of April, I hereby would notify those who are owing me for hymn books, that I shall need all there is due me to use in publishing. Please send to me at 167 Hanover Street, Boston, till April 15th. I. K. LOMBARD.

Who will Help?

Bro. A. H. Wyman, of Freedom, has met with a great loss. On the night of the 8th inst. his dwelling house and several other buildings, with nearly all their contents, were destroyed by fire. Any favors from friends, willing to help in this time of need, will be gratefully received by Bro. W. and his family. Direct to A. H. Wyman, Freedom, Me. R. R. YORK.

A Card.

We have just published a new series of Anti-Tobacco Tracts, entitled "What Scientific Men say about Tobacco." Many persons wishing to do good, would gladly spread these productions over the nation, but they are too poor to pay for them. We beg all such to understand, that if they will send a little postage money with their orders, they shall have the tracts "without money and without price," so long as "the cruise of oil" does not fail.

GEORGE TRASK, Fitchburg, Mass.

A New Book

In manuscript, all ready for the press. "THE BEAUTIFUL PORTRAIT," or, The Christian Contemplated. Written, compiled, and reviewed by J. W. Thomas. The above work is to contain not far from four hundred pages. It is divided into thirteen chapters; each chapter is in the form of a discourse, based upon a passage of Scripture, appropriate to its title, and addressed to the reader. The whole taken together presents a complete picture of the Christian, from the commencement of his religious course to its termination in glory. The titles of each chapter in order are as follows: Chapter 1st, The christian.—Acts 11: 26; 2. The christian in Christ; 3. The christian in the closet; 4. The christian in the family; 5. The christian in the church; 6. The christian in the world; 7. The christian in prosperity; 8. The christian in adversity; 9. The christian in his spiritual sorrows; 10. The christian in his spiritual joys; 11. The christian in the grave; 12. The christian in glory; 13. The result.—Acts 26: 28.

The prayers and sympathies of all christians are solicited that the book may soon be published, and that through its perusal many may become more scriptural, harmonious, and consistent in their christian walk and character; and that some, at least, who are not christians, may be not only almost, but altogether persuaded to become such, while the day of grace lingers. Those who think the enterprise not beneath their notice, but have a heart and a desire to help, may send their name and address to J. W. THOMAS, North Springfield, Vt., until April 10th, after that to 16 Rock Street, Lowell, Mass.

Notice.

As the piece of music entitled "Sweet by-and-by" cannot be obtained in sheet form, I will send the book containing words and music, post-paid, for 35 cents. "The Pilgrim's Harp," 60 cts., post-paid. GEORGE E. LEE, Brimfield, Mass.

IN THE SHADOW.

"In the shadow our work is done,
And in the shadow our crowns are won."

Wait calmy in the shadows,
Trusting thy cares to Him
Who watcheth o'er his children
From dawn to twilight dim;
For in these deep'ning shadows
Thy truest work is done;
Amid dim doubts and longings
The brightest crowns are won.

Strive faithfully 'mid shadows,
Though the prize for which you long
May soon be grasped by other hands,
In life's swift-rushing throng.
All honor be to those who strive,
And meet well-earned success;
Yet saddest failures merit oft
An honor scarcely less.

Work earnestly mid sorrow,
In hours of doubt and pain,
Far down the misty future
The sunshine gleams again.
With the dim shadows round us,
Life's path is often dreary;
Yet there is One who giveth rest,
And comfort for the weary.

Endure, for time is fleeting,
And the seed must be sown to-day,
Though you may not reap the harvest
For which you wait and pray,—
Still work 'mid doubt and sorrow,
And when thy toil is done,
Ye shall see how, in darkest moments,
The angel crown was won.

Evening Hours.

E. P. WOODWARD.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11:6.

THE MYSTERY OF GOD'S LOVE AND JUSTICE.

"I guess Mr. Alger is about right after all. It will come around all right by-and-by. At least, I can see no other way to reconcile the love and mercy of God with the idea of a future."

So says my sceptical friend, who has just come from Mr. Alger's lectures on Hell, in which the idea of universal salvation was taught. So he is wavering, and doubting the words of the truthful One. And many others, when they think of the mighty problems whose solution will never be known short of that perfect knowledge born of the perpetual light of the eternal day, and try to understand how a God of mercy and love can pour out his fury and indignation on those who will not serve him, stumble and fall.

This problem, how God can love men, with a love which moved him to give his only begotten Son to die in shame and anguish, that they might be saved, and then find it possible to lay aside his yearnings of love, bid the gentle voice of mercy cease, while He goes forth to vindicate his honor, and destroy sin and suffering and consequent death, by burying them all beneath the angry billows of the Lake of Fire,—this is a mighty problem: one which every christian does well to admit, has never yet found a solution.

But this is not the great mystery of the divine government. The great mystery is that evil exists at all. That it does exist, none can deny; and that it is evil, few will dispute. And the few who use smooth words, and tell us that "evil is only undeveloped good," that "whatever is, is right," that every act, whether called right or wrong, not only was a necessity, but another step to a higher life,—let the iron enter into their souls, let their homes be invaded, and their hearthstones be desecrated, let the cunning and rage and bitter hate of wicked men be poured upon them, or upon theirs,—and all their theories are gone like a dream. O, it is very easy to sit in prosperity and health, with kind and loving friends, and say, "Whatever is, is right." And O, it is so much easier for God to put his finger on you, and wake you from your dream of death, by breaking your idol, and making your future a desolation. Can you say then, "It is all right"? Then, you find nothing in nature to tell you that. Then, every thought of your life, every throb of your weary, aching heart, cries out against this statement as a monstrous LIE. Everything is not right. There are wrongs in the universe; terrible wrongs, heart-breaking wrongs, unspeakable wrongs;—wrongs that blast the hopes of trusting childhood, and crush the aspirations of riper years; wrongs that make the fountain of purity a cess-pool of corruption,—a source of all uncleanness and death; wrongs that have filled this earth with dead bodies, and ruined souls.

No, the mystery is not, how God will right these wrongs, but that the wrongs EXIST. If God is Almighty, why has he permitted it? If he was omniscient, why did he not provide beforehand a preventive of the whole. If he created everything perfect, how could imperfections arise? And since they have arisen, why does he permit them to continue?

Admitting that the question of God's future disposal of evil, is a problem beyond our reach, there are problems of this life just as hard to solve. Go with me through the streets of the city, and look behind the scenes, through the disguises, beyond the shadows, and I will show you sins against heaven, crimes against men, wrongs unrighted, and sorrows unassuaged, which shall make you doubt if there be a God who cares or knows what his creatures do or suffer. Look at the blasted lives and ruined hopes; innocence and purity trampled down by guilt and lust; the trusting heart betrayed by him in whom it trusted, and cast aside as a worthless thing;—look at these, and all the long, dark list of earth's iniquities, and then remember that, if there be a God, he stretches forth no hand to save the victims of wrong, or to destroy the wrong doer. Can you reconcile these facts? Do you find nothing here beyond your power to explain? Why does God permit these things?

"But he will bring it all out right by-and-by; this is only a dark shadow, to be followed by the eternal day. And when all are saved, then these transient evils will disappear and be forgotten."

But how do you know that? All the evidence we have in nature respecting God, lies in just these facts which your theory tries to explain. These facts, as we see them, seem inconsistent with the idea of God's goodness, and nature, in the grand climax, lays us all in the dust together, and we are forgotten. What can Nature do to explain this? How do you know God is a God of love?

Does the Bible say so? Then take all the Bible says about it. Admitting the love and goodness of God,—that he so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son to die,—that he is love,—we also find that he is a God of justice, who will in no wise clear the guilty, who will take vengeance on them that obey him not; that this very message of love and mercy is so given, that to reject it is to incur his everlasting displeasure. If the Bible proves that God is good, it also proves that he is just. If it proves that his love towards us exceeds that of a mother for her only child, it also proves him to be a God of exact and unbending justice, who will never pardon an unrepented sin, and who says, "Whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is GUILTY OF ALL." If the Bible is filled with the grand truth that we should love God "because he FIRST loved us," there are also many, very many words that tell us of God's hatred of sin, and that the day is surely coming when he will make an end of sin by destroying all who walk in its ways; warnings which, put them aside as you may, forget them, ignore them, doubt them, disbelieve them, deny them, find times when they stand before the soul in all their gloomy grandeur, and will not depart at your bidding.

The trouble is, men theorize on this subject, when theory is not in place; it is not a matter of theory. It matters just nothing whether you can reconcile these things or not. The love of God, and his justice, his salvation and his judgment are facts, and whether you reconcile them or not, whether you believe them, or reject them with scorn, they are facts all the same. God has revealed the facts, for nature never could do it; but with this revelation, we reach the limit of our knowledge. While we accept the Bible as God's word, we have no business to question the consistency of that word, or deny or explain away a part because apparently inconsistent with the rest. His statements must be accepted as facts, not ideas. And facts can never conflict. It is not our place to say that God must save all, because he is so good, unless he says he will. We have just as good right to say he will save none, because he is so just. If his revealed mercy will save all, his revealed justice will condemn all. How he can blend the two, save some, and let others be lost; how he can "make it all right," even in the destruction of sinners;—we may not say. But we can say, by faith, "he doeth all things well."

But it is said that the Bible is not very plain, and we must explain it somewhat according to our own ideas. Admitting the indistinctness of the Bible in some of its parts, we must call it madness to make the same claim for the whole. Is it not plain that such a man as Abraham lived, and that Moses was the chosen leader of Israel's emancipation? That David was the "sweet singer," and Solomon the wise and foolish king? And there are other facts just as plain as these; facts recorded so plainly, and put down as foundations of so much that follows, that if we deny them, we might better throw the whole away. And men by thousands, who began by denying these facts, ended by putting the whole thing among the tales and fables of the shadowy past.

It is a plain, unvarnished, incontrovertible statement of fact, that Jesus Christ was born in Judea in the days of Herod the king; that he spent several years in proclaiming his mission as one sent from heaven to save lost men, and guide them to the land of light; that he was crucified under Pontius Pilate; that he rose again the third day, according to his own prophecies; that he ascended to heaven in the sight of mortal men. There can be no honest doubt as to the Bible's teachings on these points. Whether they are facts, or not, is another question; but we do KNOW that the Bible calls them facts. And what did Christ say on this point? Did he promise a time when love and tender compassion should overlook men's crimes and hatred of his laws, and save them forever? Did he ever teach that these wrongs would all be righted by love alone? Did he use smooth words for sinners, and gentle words for rebels? Nay, verily. The same Jesus who wept at the tomb of Lazarus, and stooped to bless the laughing babes, has spoken of the sinner's certain doom, in words of such awful import, that no art can turn aside their mighty significance; shadowing forth this swift-coming destiny in such startling figures (if figures you choose to call them), that we would fain shut our eyes to the mightier reality behind. No man has ever described the terrors of the coming judgment in words more pregnant with meaning than he. All the agonies of suffering which men have fancied as the results of God's broken laws, pale and fade into insignificance, beside the untold sorrows that cluster about the sentence "Depart," and which hang over the lake of fire. Yes, the gentle, loving Jesus, the Man of Sorrows, the forgiving One, has used language which none of us would dare to use; and which, if it proves untrue, will make Him a LIAR.

O, let us all strive to look beyond the brief, uncertain Present, when we know so little, and long to know so much, into the great, abiding, and unending Future, when we shall have time to learn all that can be known, and wisdom to comprehend and reconcile what now seems dark and conflicting. Then we shall learn the world of meaning wrapped up in those few, calmly spoken words, "What I do, thou knowest not now, but thou SHALT KNOW HEREAFTER."

For the World's Crisis.

DECISION NEEDED.

It is pleasant and joyful beyond any degree of comparison which mortal man is able to fully make known, to know that our sins are all forgiven us, and our worthless names written in heaven. Our mind reverts back to that period of our life spent in sin, when, without God and without hope in the world, weary, restless, unhappy and sin-burdened, we went to and fro in the earth, seeking for substantial enjoyment in the barren wastes of a heart full of sin and unbelief, and in the unsatisfying pleasures of the world; where the pure joys of heaven are not, but guilt, and weariness, and sorrow of heart are there instead. How often in those days misspent, the Spirit of Him who came to seek and save the lost, perishing children of this world, found way to our hearts only to find in us no fruits of repentance, but an utter unwillingness to obey the teachings thereof, and come in the humiliating, sin-killing way brought to light in the gospel.

When, at length, after all our labors in the vain pursuits of the world for happiness, we at last did find rest to our souls, it was first a willing mind, when we from the heart decided that, let the consequences be as they might, as for us, we would serve the Lord, and began to act out, in deed and in truth, the decision thus formed. What peace and joy then did fill our heart; and ever since that glad day it has not ceased to fill it, as far as we have lived up to the decision then made. And inasmuch as we have enjoyed the sweet fruits of the Spirit, and know the power and willingness of Christ to forgive sin, we feel deeply anxious that our friends may likewise seek and find forgiveness of their sins and joys which alone are found in obedience to his will; that they too may be saved from sin here, and from its fearful results hereafter.

Come, sinner, come now; right away, this very hour! Do yield to the gentle influence of the Spirit, which often, perhaps, has reproved you of sin, and of righteousness, and of a judgment in store for all. How can you, how dare you delay, when almost daily you are reminded of the uncertainty of life, and of the certainty that death and the judgment will surely overtake you one day? and that day may come soon, far sooner than you are expecting it. Be persuaded in season, and get ready. Brethren, you who have wandered in any degree from your first love, come back quickly, lest He come and find you unprepared. And to you, dear children, who are walking in the Lord as you received Him, so continue steadfastly unto the end; and, try by all means in your power, to win again to Christ any who may have fallen out by the way-side; remembering that we are liable to fall, and but for the mercy and long-suffering of the Lord toward us, what would have been our condition to-day? Let us be good and kind to all, that at the last great day we may stand acquitted. CHAS. H. HURD.

WATCH AND PRAY.

Watch, for the time is short;
Watch, while 'tis called to-day;
Watch, lest the world prevail;
Watch, christian, watch and pray;
Watch, for the flesh is weak;
Watch, for the foe is strong;
Watch, lest the Bridegroom come;
Watch, though he tarry long.

CHORUS.

O watch and pray,
O watch in the darkness and watch in the day,
Christian, watch and pray.

Chase slumber from thine eyes;
Chase doubting from thy breast;
Thine is the promised prize
Of heaven's eternal rest;
Watch, christian, watch and pray;
Thy Savior watched for thee,
Till from his brow there poured
Great drops of agony.

Take Jesus for thy trust;
Watch, watch forevermore;
Watch, for thou soon must sleep
With thousands gone before:
Now, when thy sun is up,
Now, while 'tis called to-day,
Now is accepted time;
Watch, christian, watch and pray.

PORTENTS.—NO. 7.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity. He that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword."—REV. 13. 10.

In the above chapter we are presented with a symbol of a beast with "seven heads," rising out of "the sea." He is eventually the recipient of the seat, power and authority of an antecedent ruler. This predicted transfer by the pen of inspiration, can be ascertained as having been literally accomplished, by referring to Philips and Sampson's edition of Gibbon's Hist., p. 512, vol. 3, and has been referred to in a former article.

This transaction was consummated between the last Roman prince, Romulus, and Zeno, the emperor of the east, in order to simplify what to our mind appears to be the truth, with respect to this beast and the seven heads. I will refer the reader to a universally acknowledged admission, so far as my knowledge extends. In the prophecy (Dan. 7: 6), a "beast like a leopard, which had upon the back of it four wings of a fowl." The beast had also four heads. See chapter 2: 4. The beast symbolized the Greek empire. The four wings the subdivision of Alexander's empire into four parts, and the "four heads" the four regal families or rulers that succeeded the bacchanalian emperor. By the same parity of reasoning we are led to the conclusion, first, that the beast of Rev. 13 symbolized the emperor of the east, as he was the recipient of the transfer made by the last representative of dragonic authority, and the seven heads were his successors.

Justinian commenced this "war upon the saints." Upon this fact historic testimony is positive. This war was doubtless set on foot and urged to its bitter end by the papacy, designated by the metaphor of "a mouth that spake very great things"; and "a mouth speaking great things." Dan. 7: 8, 20. It is declared by the revelator that "there was given unto him [the leopard beast] a mouth speaking great things and blasphemies, and power was given unto him to continue [or, as margin reads, make war] forty and two months. And he opened his mouth in blasphemy against God, to blaspheme his name, and his tabernacle, and them that dwell in heaven."

For the speaking "of very great things" and utterances of blasphemies, I have failed thus far to find the fulfillment of the prediction in any other instance than in the utterances of the papacy. The metaphoric mouth of the leopard beast alone has blasphemed against God's saints and his tabernacle. For instances of this character translated from Latin anathemas, maranathas, see Dowling's History of Popery, pp. 485–534. I count the Latin curse there forty-eight times. "Anathema sit": "Let him be accursed." The pope was a mouth for the emperor in an adjunctive sense, as was Aaron to Moses. See Ex. 4: 13–16.

In A. D. 800, "the pope separated from the eastern empire, and became supreme bishop of the western." Putnam, p. 74. The same year the "new empire of the west is founded by Charlemagne, who is crowned at Rome by the pope, king of Italy, Germany and France." p. 74. France now becomes the first "head" of the leopard beast.

"It was after the Nicene Synod, and under the reign of the pious Irene, that the Popes consulted the separation of Rome and Italy by the translation of the empire to the less orthodox Charlemagne. By this decisive measure they would finally eradicate the claims of the Greeks. The majesty of Rome would be restored; the Latin churches or Christians would be united under a supreme head in their ancient metropolis; and the conquerors of the west would receive their crown from the successors of St. Peter. The Roman Church would acquire a zealous and respectable advocate. Under the shadow of the Carlovingian power, the Bishop might exercise with honor and safety the government of the city."

"On the festival of Christmas, Charlemagne appeared in the church of St. Peter, and to gratify the vanity of Rome, he had exchanged the simple dress of his country for the habit of a patrician. After the celebration of the holy mysteries, Leo suddenly placed a precious crown on his head, and the dome resounded with acclamations of the people, 'long life and victory to Charles, the most pious Augustus, crowned by God, the great and pacific Emperor of the Romans!' The head and body of Charlemagne were consecrated by the royal unction, after the example of the Cæsars; he was saluted or adored by the pontiff; his coronation oath represents a promise to maintain the faith and the privileges of the church."—Gibbon, Vol. 5, p. 48.

It was predicted that "power was given him over all kindreds, and tongues, and nations." "During a reign of forty-six years he [Charlemagne] extended his frontiers beyond the Danube, imposed tribute upon barbarians of the Vistula, made his name a terror to the Saracen tribes, and added northern Italy to the dependencies of France. Notwithstanding these successes, it appears that the conversion and the conquest of the Saxons (a nation of German idolaters, whose territories bordered closely upon his chosen capital of Aix La Chapelle), formed the darling enterprise of this powerful monarch. From 770 to 804 his armies were constantly directed against them, and in Wittikind, their heroic leader, he encountered a warrior as fearless if not as fortunate as himself. The brave Saxons were, however, no match for one whose triumphs procured him the splendid title of Emperor of the west, and who gathered his daring hosts from dominions which comprised the whole of France, Germany, Italy, Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Prussia, and were bounded on the east by the Carpathian mountains, and on the west by the Ebro and the ocean. Year after year he wasted their country by fire and sword, overthrew their idols, levelled their temples to the ground, erected fortresses amid the ruins of their villages, and carried away vast numbers of captives to the interior of Gaul. To this forced emigration succeeded unwelcome thousands of reluctant Saxons, who were compelled to subscribe to the ceremony of baptism. Their principalities were partitioned off among abbots and bishops, and Whittikind did homage to Charlemagne in the Camp de Mars."—Hist. of France, by A B. Edwards.

This line of kings terminated with the abdication of Charles the Fat, or may be considered a vacancy to the establishment of Otho I. See Gibbon, vol. 5, p. 55.

The Saxon the second head.

"Otho was of a noble race of dukes of Saxony. His father, Henry the Fowler, was elected by the suffrage of the nation to save and institute the kingdom of Germany. Its limits were enlarged on every side by his son, the first and greatest of the Othos. . . . In the north, christianity was propagated by the sword. . . . At the head of a victorious army he passed the Alps, subdued the kingdom of Italy, delivered the Pope, and forever fixed the imperial crown in the name and nation of Germany. From that time or memorable era, two maxims of public jurisprudence were introduced by force, and ratified by time.

First, that the prince who was ELECTED in the German diet acquired, from that instant, the subject kingdoms of Italy and Rome.

Second, but that he might not legally assume the title of Emperor and Augustus till he had received the crown from the hands of the Pontiff."—Gibbon, vol. 5, p. 122.

This imperial line terminated with the death of Otho III.

The House Franconia the third head.

This imperial line commenced by the election of Conrad of Franconia, and terminated with the death of Henry V. See Kohlraush's History of Germany, pp. 137, 229.

The House of Swabia the fourth head.

On the death of Henry V. (1125) "the Franconian emperors were at an end."

"Accordingly in 1125, the German tribes again encamped on the banks of the Rhine, in the vicinity of Mentz. Ten princes were selected. The archbishop persuaded them to make choice of Lothaire, duke of Saxony, who was elevated to the throne. Lothaire was seized suddenly ill and died in the year 1138. On the death of Lothaire, in 1138, the partisans of the House of Swabia made a hasty and irregular election of Conrad, in which the Saxon faction found itself obliged to yield."

This line of kings terminated with the death of Frederick Barbarossa.

Spain the fifth head.

Taylor, in his Manual of History, speaking of this imperial power, on page 512 testifies:

"Charles the first of Spain, and the fifth of the empire, possessed greater power than any sovereign that had flourished in Europe since the days of Charlemagne."—Coxe, in his House of Austria, vol. 3, p. 87, states that Charles, "on his arrival at Milan, the 16th of October, the joyful tidings of his unanimous election to the imperial throne. After a short stay at Milan, where he was congratulated by the Italian powers, the new Emperor proceeded to Frankfort, and was crowned on the 22d of Dec. In addition to the usual titles of emperor and king of the Romans, and to those Hungary and Bohemia, he styled himself king of Spain."

It was this nation that at an immense expense fitted out what is termed in history "The Invincible Armada," to exterminate Protestantism. It met its deserved fate. It was nearly all destroyed. Doubtless the Almighty interposed in behalf of his cause. Philip, king of Spain, and his Jesuit Queen Isabella, with Pope Sixtus seeking for the blood of Protestants, gnawed their tongues in furious chagrin at the disposition the Almighty had made of their inquisitorial and bloody intended expedition. As the result, the historian has said: "This glorious success was deservedly regarded not so much as the triumph of England, as of the Protestant cause throughout Europe. It virtually established the independence of the Dutch, and it raised the courage of the Huguenots in France. It completely destroyed the decisive influence that Spain had acquired in the affairs of Europe. Ever since the shipwreck of the Armada, the Spanish state and people seem to have lost all energy, and sunk into almost hopeless decay."—Taylor's Manual of History, p. 534.

Thus passed away the power of the fifth head. It continued to wax weaker, until the Pope sought another imperial head.

THREE NECESSITIES.

FAITH.

There are some attributes in the christian character that are not only convenient, but actual necessities, absolutely indispensable. Faith is of this character. Now "faith is the substance [the marginal reading is ground is confidence] of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." When we realize that "without faith it is impossible to please God," we feel the necessity of possessing to our uttermost capacity a living and abiding faith.

Faith is the key-stone in the arch over which all must travel who expect to enter in through the gate into the city of the New Jerusalem. Dwight has beautifully said, "The faith of the gospel is that emotion of the mind which is called 'trust,' or 'confidence,' exercised toward the moral character of God, and particularly of the Savior." If there is one word that will bring a blessing; if there is one word that will bridge the space from earth to heaven, that word is faith.

A living faith must rest implicitly on the veracity of God, and confidingly in Christ as the pattern of christian character and faith. If we would be eminently successful in running the christian race, we must be "clothed with faith as a garment. Now the just shall live by faith;" that is, their spiritual life will feed upon it, and they will have a practical love for the Bible and belief in Jesus, who is the "author and finisher of our faith."

Faith is a beautiful garment to wear, and without it none shall enter in to the marriage feast of the great King. If you would have a heart full of grace, have a heart full of faith. Faith is to the christian what the light-house is to the mariner; in the day time he gets along very well, but at night he must watch the light-house. A clear and extended definition off faith as an element of christianity may be found in the eleventh chapter of Hebrews. A. L. ADAMS.

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES.

This commandment came from Him "who when he was reviled reviled not again." And again he hath said, in whose mouth was no guile, "Bless them that curse you, do good to them that hate you, and pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you." Why do this? That ye may be the "children of your Father which is heaven."

Dear brothers and sisters, are we saying, I cannot do this? Let us listen to the sweet promise that follows: "For if ye forgive men their trespasses, your heavenly Father will also forgive you." Are we still saying, How can I? Let us read further: "But if ye forgive not men their trespasses, neither will your Father forgive your trespasses."

Dear, tried and persecuted children of God, the peace that passeth all understanding is ours, when we have forgiven, fully and freely forgiven our enemies. It is then we feel our sins forgiven, our transgressions blotted out, our names written in the Lamb's book of life. Let us heed the words of the dear apostle, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil speaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

SOUTH LIVERMORE CONFERENCE.

This meeting was one of much interest to those who attended. It is a place where there has been much preaching, of the gospel of the kingdom, and there are a few faithful believers and workers in Christ. The conference began and went on in the spirit of Christ. Brethren and sisters from various places came in ready to work, and it was a joyful greeting in the Lord. Love and union predominated. It was a precious season. The preaching was mostly done by Bro. Jesse Gay. Bro. Wellcome and Haggett also preached. The word was listened to with much attention. Some of the unconverted seemed deeply convicted of sin. The saints rejoiced in the hope of soon seeing Jesus, and to be made like him. We could say of a truth it was one of the best of our conferences. We think all felt that it was good to be there. Some fifty gathered at the table of the Lord to break bread, and celebrate the dying of our Sacrifice.

This was a truly precious season, and while reluctant to part, we rejoiced in the hope of soon meeting with all the family of the redeemed, to part no more forever.

MAN THE IMAGE OF HIS GOD.

The fact that man was originally made in the image of his Maker, in the likeness of his God, is very emphatically stated in his word. "And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness. . . . So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them." This was not a moral or spiritual image, or likeness, for the language says, "God created man in his own image;" and in the next chapter, only a few verses afterward, when speaking on the same subject, it is said that "the Lord God formed man out of the dust of the ground." So it is the man of dust that is in the image of God.

Materialists agree on this point; that the earthy man was the image, the likeness of God in creation, and in the garden prior to the fall. But the great mass aside from these (and perhaps some of these) believe and teach that when Adam sinned and God cursed him, he lost that image, that likeness, and that he does not at the present time possess it. This, however, is mere assertion, as no testimony from the Bible can be deduced to prove that man at the fall, or at any time since, lost, or became dispossessed of this image, this likeness. And as man was created with this image, and as it cannot be proved that he has lost it, we have a perfect right to conclude that he possesses it to-day.

We know that when man sinned and God cursed him, when he became subject to disease and decay, to death and corruption, that this image was marred and impaired, and its beauty and brightness were dimmed and diminished. But this does not prevent its still being an image of its God. The statue of George Washington may be thrown from its pedestal into the dust and mire of the street; it may become scratched and marred, rusted and badly corroded, but who will say it is not the statue, the image, the likeness of George Washington? A diamond may become rusted and corroded until its beauty is covered, and its brightness hid, but it is still a diamond.

And so it is with man, the image of Deity; he may have experienced all these vicissitudes, but is none the less an image of deity.

Everything about man teaches this. What is it that gives him such a superiority above the brute creation? What is it that inspires dread and terror in the beasts of the forest? What is it that causes the noble lion, the king of beasts, to quail before him? or the ferocious tiger to pause before making the fatal spring upon its intended victim? It is the image of his Maker, the likeness of his God stamped on his face of clay, and reflected from the features of mortality. Yes, man does even now possess this image, this likeness.

I know that sin may have rusted it, iniquity corroded it, time lined it with sorrow, and toil and care ploughed deep furrows there, but it is still the image of its Maker, it is still the likeness of its God. And when the long night of woe is past, and the glad morning of life-giving comes; and when the dark, heavy, threatening cloud of sin and sorrow, sadness and death, that now hangs like a funeral pall over old earth, is forever swept away by an omnipotent hand, revealing the beatific brightness of God's presence, then the rust of sin will cease, the corrosion of iniquity will be removed, the lines of sorrow erased, and the plastic hand of a loving Father will smooth down the furrows of toil and care. Then man, in the vigor of eternal youth, and the spring-time of eternal strength and beauty, shall be in the image of his Maker, in the likeness of his God as never before, since sin marred it so, or since iniquity caused it to become so rusted, so corrupted.

And then when old earth is made new as when she came from the hands of her Creator; when the morning stars sing together once more, and the sons of God shout for joy again, the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and God shall be with them and be their God, and they shall be his people. Then the hopes of mortals will be consummated, the aspirations of humanity realized, and the cravings of the heart of man satisfied; yes, the longings of his heaving breast will forever be stilled. Man will then behold the face of Christ in "righteousness," and be satisfied when he "awakes" in his "likeness," in his Father's image. Dearest Lord, speed the time. Amen.

STORM AT SEA.

A naval officer being at sea in a dreadful storm, his wife, who was sitting in the cabin near him, and filled with alarm for the safety of the vessel, was so surprised with his composure and serenity that she cried out, "My dear, are you not afraid? How is it possible you can be so calm in such a dreadful storm?" He rose from his chair that was lashed to the deck, supporting himself by a pillar of the bed-place, drew his sword and pointed it to the breast of his wife, saying: "Are you afraid of that sword?"

She immediately answered "No."

"Why?" said the officer.

"Because" rejoined the lady, "I know it is in the hands of my husband, and he loves me too well to hurt me."

"Then," said he, "remember, I know in whom I believe, and that he holds the winds in his fists and the waters in the hollow of his hands."

FEELING AND FAITH.—There are two classes of christians—those who live chiefly by emotion, and those who live chiefly by faith. The first class—those who live chiefly by emotion, remind one of ships, that move by the outward impulse of winds operating on sails. They are often in a dead calm, often out of their course, and sometimes driven back. And it is only when the winds are fair and powerful, that they move onward with rapidity. The other class—Those who live chiefly by faith—remind one of the magnificent steamers which cross the Atlantic, which are moved by an interior and permanent principle, and which, setting at defiance all ordinary obstacles, advance steadily and swiftly to their destination, through calm and storm, through cloud and sunshine.

REFORMATION ALONE CANNOT SAVE.—Cutting off the tops of weeds in a garden, does not destroy them, though it may make the garden look clean and tidy for a while; the next shower of rain will make the cheat appear.

A snake may change its skin, but yet preserve its sting.

"If thou art not born again, all thy outward reformation is nought in the sight of God; thou hast shut the door, but the thief is still in the house."

SOUTHEY says in one of his letters: "I have told you of the Spaniard who always put on his spectacles when he was about to eat cherries, that they might look the bigger and more tempting. In like manner I make the most of my enjoyments; and though I do not cast my cares away, I pack them in as little compass as I can, and carry them as conveniently as I can for myself, and never let them annoy others."

THE RICHEST BOY IN AMERICA.

The papers are telling about a boy in New England, now fourteen years of age, who is supposed to be the richest boy in the United States, because he has a great deal of money. To our mind the richest boy in America is the one who is good-hearted, honest, intelligent, ambitious, willing to do right. He is the one who loves his mother, and always has a kind word for her; who loves his sister or sisters, and tries to help them with true affection. He is the boy who does not call his father the "old man," but who loves him, speaks kindly to and of him, and tries to help him as the signs of old age gather fast upon his brow.

The richest boy is the one who has pluck to fight his destiny and future. He is the one who has the manhood to do right and be honest, and is striving to be somebody; who is above doing a mean action—who would not tell a lie to screen himself or betray a friend. He whose young mind is full of noble thoughts for the future, who is determined to win a name by good deeds. This is the richest boy in America. Which one of our readers is it?

This boy we like, we would be glad to see, would like to take him by the hand and tell him to go on earnestly, that success might crown his efforts. And if he is a poor boy, we should meet him at the threshold, bid him enter, and give him good advice, well and kindly meant. That other rich boy, in New England, we don't care anything about, for there are fools and snobs enough to worship, flatter and spoil him.—Bee-Keeper's Jour.

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

"What would you do, dear children, if Christ stood here in your midst to-day?" asked a lady of a Sunday-school class. The little girls gave various answers. One thought she would ask him for a "new heart," while another said very decidedly that she would "ask for a new set of furs." Some persons would smile at this reply. But I am sure there is nothing wrong about it. "The earth is the Lord's and the fullness thereof," and all things that help to make life comfortable and beautiful, and it is quite right to ask God for furs, or shoes, or dresses, or books, or anything else we need. Only keep your desires so pure and right that you won't be ashamed to go to God with every one of them; and, with all your asking, do not forget to ask him for the greatest of all gifts, forgiveness of sins, and everlasting life.

But, as the question went around the class, one little girl, a beautiful child of five years, lifted her brown eyes full of solemn rapture, and clasped her tiny hands. "I would not ask him to give me anything," she said, "but oh, how I would love him!" Is it strange that Christ took little children in his arms and blessed them?

WHAT LITTLE ONES CAN DO.

Mamma was sick. What could little Alice do for her? She could not be the doctor, and tell poor mamma what medicine to take. She could not be nurse to make mamma's bed, or lift her into the arm-chair. She could not go errands down the street; because she was a very little girl, and had never been in the street alone. She could not take mamma's work-basket, and finish her sewing, because she could only do patchwork. She could not sit in dear mamma's chair, and pour out tea for papa. What could little Alice do for her dear sick mamma? She could walk softly about the room, and not make a noise. Little Alice could do that, and she did it; and it made her mamma's head better, and did her heart good.

PROMPTED BY LOVE.—One morning I found little Dora busy at her ironing table, smoothing the towels and stockings.

"Isn't it hard for the little arms?" I asked.

A look like sunshine came into her face, as glanced toward her mother, who was rocking the baby.

"It isn't hard work when I do it for mamma," she said, softly.

How true it is, that love makes labor sweet. So, if we love the blessed Savior, we shall not find it hard to work for Him. It is love that makes His yoke easy and his burden light.

KILLED BY TOBACCO.—A youth of sixteen fell dead with a cigar in his mouth in a dram-shop. What caused his death? The coroner's inquest said "it was a mysterious act of God." The minister at the funeral consoled the friends in the same way. Physicians said it was "heart disease." A sensible woman, knowing the boy's habits, said "tobacco killed him." It deranged the action of the heart: it ceased to beat, and the victim fell.

"I CAN'T DO IT," is often a very silly speech. One trial more, and the thing perhaps may be done. But should this fail, it may be done in another way. The crow who could not open the shell with its beak, broke it by a fall, and so got the muscle; and the little boy or girl who is told to do anything, should not give it up till all ways are tried.

BEWARE! BEWARE!—Young persons should beware of evil beginnings, and by no means parley with temptation; their greatest security is in flight, and in the study to avoid all occasions of evil; for the cockatrice, which may be easily crushed in the egg, if suffered to hatch and grow up, will prove a deadly serpent, hard to be destroyed.

STRAY THOUGHTS.

We are watching, ever waiting
For our Savior to return,
But are we forever living
With our lamps all trimmed to burn?

Can we bid our Master welcome,
When he comes on earth to reign?
Do we love our Lord's appearing—
He who was for sinner's slain?

Will he meet us with a welcome
When on earth he comes to reign?
When the saints all rise to meet him,
Oh, shall we with them remain?

Shall we hear the joyful summons,
Well done, faithful servant, come?
All the joys of God inherit
In a Savior's endless home?

Let us strive to live for Jesus,
Live as Christ has marked the way;
Ever looking for and watching
For the coming of that day.

Many sad ones we may comfort,
Many sinners point to God;
Many who for loved ones languish,
Teach there's love that guides the rod.

Yes, there's work for every christian,
Work for every one to do;
And we'll strive to do our duty—
To our Master we'll prove true.

Then he'll bid us to inherit
That dear home for us prepared;
And forever with the ransomed
We'll be free from every care.

THE ARAMAIC, SADDUCEEAN, AND PHARISAIC FAITH AND DOCTRINE OF A FUTURE LIFE.

BY O. R. FASSETT.

(Concluded.)

Having thus endeavored to define the Sadduceean, Pharisaic, and Aramaic views of the future, and established the scriptural foundation of the latter as the only hope of the faithful, we proceed to remark that the three classes exist in our day, advocating their antagonistic faiths, and they are becoming more and more defined and separated as we near the advent of the Redeemer and the resurrection of the dead.

1. There is the Sadduceean class, who believe that "there is no resurrection," nor any future state whatever after the present life; while they also reject the Platonic philosophy, that "souls live without bodies throughout all time," or during the intermediate state, as advocated by the "Hellenistic" party of the present age. Adventists are called "modern Sadducees" by those who are either ignorant of their faith and hope, or what was that of the Sadducees; or who wickedly and maliciously misrepresent them. There is quite a difference in believing that there is "no resurrection," and in "the resurrection from the dead"; that there is no future existence to man of either soul, body, or spirit, and that there is a future existence of "spirit and soul and body." 2 Thess 5: 23.

I am fearful that those who malign the Adventists, by this false charge of being "Sadducees," will themselves fall into the error they falsely accuse others of entertaining, unless they repent and "believe the gospel." 1 Cor. 15. Thousands are un-anchoring from the scriptural faith and hope in this age. The advent of Christ to reward men (Matt. 16: 27 and 25; Rev. 11: 15–18, and 22: 12); the "day of judgment" to judge men (Acts 17); the resurrection from the dead, to "enter into life eternal," and an "eternal inheritance" (Matt. 25, John 5), are being ignored and rejected for a substituted faith of a judgment, resurrection and rewards immediate on death. This being the case, there is but one alternative; either they must become Spiritualists or Sadducees. Spiritists are running their faith into the ground by conflicting absurdities, so that Sadduceeism is inevitably the goal of every enlightened and intelligent mind who rejects a future life by a resurrection. Hence Sadduceeism is rapidly increasing in the world; and where a few years ago professors and non-professors of religion dared not to express doubt in respect to a future existence, they are numbered by the thousands, who are bold to affirm such a belief.

2. There are those who are "Hellenistic" in their faith,—those who incorporate the doctrine of the immortality of the soul into their system of theology; a doctrine no where taught in the Scriptures, but which has been taken from Greek philosophy. But the great trouble with those of this class is to locate the place of souls, and determine what is the state of them in the intermediate period between death and the resurrection. While it is known that all the "the ancient nations, Egyptians, Jews and Pagans, of all superstitions, located the souls of all the dead under the ground" (Alex. Campbell); yet it is claimed that "we may dissent from their notion of place and other circumstances without impairing the weight of the evidence in favor of such a state, as was indicated by the word hades" (Alex. Campbell). To this we demur, so long as an appeal is made to the parable of the "rich man and Lazarus," as proof of rewards in death. If Christ taught doctrine relative to the intermediate state, or rewards in and after death to spirits, or souls, independent of the bodies of men, then it is incontrovertible that he taught the same doctrine with the ancient faith of "all superstitions"? There is no possibility of evading this conclusion. Then the "receptacle of human spirits is deeper than the ground." But few if any will admit this theory concerning the departed dead, in this our day, especially in reference to the righteous dead; and it is subversive of the science of theology! It is maintained by others, that the spirits of the good arise and ascend to "A beautiful home beyond the starry sky!"

And it is again sung:

"Beyond the bounds of time and space
Look forward to that heavenly place."

Where such a place could be found outside of the universe, we cannot conceive; and the theory betrays an ignorance of the universe inconsistent with christian intelligence, and it wholly ignores the science of astronomy.

"The space between the earth and the sun is so vast, that a cannon ball flying with a velocity of five hundred miles an hour would not reach it in twenty years. Between the earth and the nearest fixed star, a space intervenes so vast and incomprehensible, that a ball would not reach it in four million and five hundred thousand years. These are considered the centre of a hundred worlds, as our sun is the centre of the solar system. Of these there are vast numbers; eighty millions of them are visible in the firmament by the telescope."—Dr. Dick.

To maintain that human souls fly instanter beyond these to a "heavenly place," immaterial, betrays stupid ignorance, becoming only that which prevailed in the dark ages. Let christian intelligence expose the error and vindicate its knowledge against infidel scoffing.

Again, it is claimed that human spirits "go to heaven" when men die; even into the immediate presence of God and of Christ; and yet at the same time it is said, that "every man attends his own funeral."—Credo. And how often is it preached that the spirits of our dead are hovering around the mourning circle, while at the same time they are far distant in the regions of bliss. This theory is inconsistent, unless it can be proved that the spirits of dead men are omnipresent. And there is another difficulty with this theory: if the spirits of good men are in heaven, are they not infinitely happy? Can they be more so? "If the souls be in heaven, tell me why they be not in as good a case as the angels be? And then what cause is there of a resurrection?"—Wm. Tyndal. But not only is it subversive of the doctrine of the resurrection, but it is unscriptural as well. "It is indeed very generally supposed that the souls of good men, as soon as they are dislodged from the body, go directly to heaven; but this opinion has not the least foundation in the oracles of God."—Wesley. This being found to be the truth, souls are put in a "separate state" somewhere; but no person knows where to locate them, or in what condition, until the resurrection. There is progress in knowledge upon the matter of the intermediate state, as the following extract will show; and this will illustrate the dilemma in which our professedly orthodox friends are in, as they more and more critically examine the Scriptures relative to the future of man.

A DILEMMA.

"Whether, when our Lord died, his soul actually descended into hell itself, we will not assert, or deny. The elder theologians all asserted that he did, and hence they inserted in the 'Creed' the sentence—'He descended into hell,' meaning hell itself. It was not till Puritanic times that the doctrine began to be questioned. It is asserted now, he went into the world of separate spirits, but not into the region of the damned. At any rate, it was but a passing presence, for we know that swiftly he sped to the gate of heaven, taking with him the repentant thief, to be with him that day in Paradise."—Credo. It is amusing to see how this professor of one of our theological institutions, like "the chief priests and elders of the people" (Matt. 21: 23–26) in the days of Christ, refuses to commit himself, where his theological views and the Scriptures cannot be harmonized, or where he sees that to "assert or deny" would lead him to entanglement. And then to make the 'Creed' agree with the theological interpretation given to the reply of Jesus to the penitent thief, is certainly ingenious. We should like to have these theologians explain how the dying thief could reach heaven, or paradise, anywhere in a "world of separate spirits" that day, when he did not die until the day following his petition, and Jesus' answer to him on the cross. For it is certain that he did not die until "the evening," and, according to the Jewish reckoning, that began another day. "The evening and the morning were the first day," etc. Gen. 1. See Mark 15: 42–45; John 19: 31–34. Also, how could Christ's soul take the penitent thief with him, when, according to the Scriptures, that was in "hell" until the "third day"? "As Jonah was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth."—Matt. 12: 40. "Thou wilt not leave my soul in hell, neither wilt thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." David, being a prophet, "spake of the resurrection of Christ, that his soul was not left in hell, neither his flesh did see corruption. This Jesus hath God raised up, whereof we all are witnesses."—Ps. 16: 10; Acts 2: 25–32. It is very evident, according to this interpretation, that Peter affirms that Christ's soul was in hell, wherever that is, and where the Creed says he went, until the resurrection "the third day."

And, finally, how will they explain the language of Jesus to Mary the third day after his crucifixion, with the idea that "he sped to the gate of heaven, taking with him the repentant thief to be with him that day in Paradise": "I am not yet ascended to my Father"?—John 20: 17. To obtain a correct knowledge of the meaning of our Lord's answer to the dying thief, we have only to connect it with his petition: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom."—Luke 23: 42. It is very evident that he prayed according to the Scriptures. Christ's coming into his kingdom is fixed in the chronological book of the Old Testament (Daniel) at "the Ancient of Days," when the judgment is set and the books are opened; for Daniel says, "I saw one like the Son of man come with the clouds of heaven; . . . and there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom."—Dan. 7: 9–14, 27. Also in the chronological book of the New Testament (Revelations), at the epoch of the judgment: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever. . . . And the nations were angry, and thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldst give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great."

To this agrees St. Paul's charge to Timothy: "I charge thee before God, and the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall judge the quick [living] and the dead at his appearing and his kingdom."—2 Tim. 4: 1. And this, too, is in accordance with the public teaching of Jesus. Luke 19: 11–27.

When, therefore, the thief prayed: "Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom," he prayed understandingly. A clergyman once asked me, "How could he understand these things?" I replied, His prayer was indited by the Spirit, no doubt. Another clergyman said before a public audience, "The thief was a blockhead,—he used come for go; he should have prayed, "Lord, remember me when thou goest into thy kingdom." This, no doubt, would have been more in accordance with his own theology. And another minister said before his congregation: "It is true the thief prayed, 'Lord, remember me when thou comest into thy kingdom'; but the Lord immediately corrected him by saying to him, "You need not wait until then; this very day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." Here half of the truth is confessed, namely, that the thief prayed correctly; and we think the other will yet be admitted when the church begins to understand the Scriptures more perfectly, and when our translators are willing to punctuate the passage as it should be, thus: "Verily I say unto thee to-day, thou shalt be with me in paradise." This would be in accordance with his prayer; for at the coming of Christ in his kingdom, "Paradise" will be restored. Rev. 21 and 22.

"Meanwhile the earth shall burn;
And from her ashes spring new heavens and earth,
Wherein the just shall dwell;
Then all the earth shall be paradise,
Far happier place than this of Eden,
And far happier days."—Milton.

3. There are those who hold to, and contend for, the Aramaic faith and hope. That is, all their hope of future existence and rewards is centred in "Jesus and the resurrection"; and as "the pious Hebrew was always in the attitude of expectation of the coming One," so are they "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."—Titus 2: 13.

They regard death an enemy, and its infliction a terrible calamity, from which no part of man escapes; that the curse for sin lays man in complete and fearful ruin; and that, but for the redemption in Christ our Redeemer, there would have been no future to our race. Instead of their hope being founded and based upon an "immortal entity," or "life element" in man, which survives in death, they reason as did Paul (who was of the Aramaic school, and not of the Hellenistic): "We have the sentence of death in ourselves, that we should not trust in ourselves, but in God who raiseth the dead."—1 Cor. 1: 9. That if "the dead rise not, then is Christ not risen; and if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain. . . . Then they, also, which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished."—1 Cor. 15.

Alas! if the hope of the resurrection from the dead fail us (for in that is our only hope of future life), then, indeed, "we are of all men most miserable." Our departed dead are gone never to return to life. They are gone to be seen by us no more. We have bidden them a long and eternal farewell. And as to ourselves, we have no hope beyond this life. We eat and drink, and then die, and that is the end of us. Sad, sad fate! But, thanks be to God, Christ is risen from the dead, and he has "the keys of death and the grave"; and will ransom from its dominion our loved ones hid in dust and darkness. The torch of hope lights up the graves of our dead; and while we weep over them, and our tears fall on the green sod which covers their precious remains, and our hearts are riven with anguish and grief, our sorrow is assuaged with the cheering hope that they "shall rise again" and "live again" by Him who is "the resurrection and the life."

How this endears our Redeemer to us. How this creates within our hearts the desire for his coming again. How this honors him in making all our hopes dependent upon him and his saving grace alone. To him shall be all the praise of our salvation from sin, death, and the grave. "Amen; even so, come, Lord Jesus," and complete the work of redemption.

For this doctrine we will earnestly contend, and not only "fill Jerusalem," but the world with it, as did the apostles; and in all boldness commend ourselves to every man's conscience in the sight of God. And God our Savior is with us by his Spirit, to aid us in the proclamation of "the gospel." 1 Cor. 15. "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air: and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore, comfort one another with these words."—1 Thess. 4: 16–18.

LIFE IS FADING.

Time is drawing nearer, nearer,
While our heads are turning gray;
Tears are falling on life's mirror
Every day!

Time is closing beauty's portals,
Flowers are blooming to decay;
Fate is delving graves for mortals
Every day!

While our pleasure-boat is rolling
Over life's eventful spray,
Funeral bells are tolling, tolling
Every day!

While the laurel wreath is shading
O'er the fame-lit brow of clay,
Sad we see the garlands fading
Every day!

Love, then take your promised treasures,
Fame is dazzling to betray;
Life is fading with its pleasures
Every day!

Hence, while all things are declaring
Death a seeker for his prey,
Let us be ourselves preparing
Every day!

For the World's Crisis.

PORTENTS.—NO. 8.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"He that leadeth into captivity, shall go into captivity. He that killeth with the sword, must be killed with the sword."—Rev. 13: 10.

(Concluded.)

Austria the sixth head. The following testimony appears to be sufficient evidence of this fact:—

"The elevation of the Archduke Joseph to the dignity of king of the Romans, was the immediate consequence of the peace. On the 27th of May, 1764, the election took place without opposition, at Frankfort, and this successful event secured to the family of Maria Theresa the imperial crown, and prevented the evils of an interregnum, in the which the sudden death of the Emperor Francis might otherwise have involved the empire."—House of Austria, by Wm. Coxe, F. R. S., F. A. S.

Austria ceased to be longer the protectorate of Rome by an imperial edict in A. D. 1781, Oct. 13.

France the seventh and last head of the leopard beast. Louis XVI. or Lewis Caput descended from a line of kings, of whom the Rev. D. Simpson in a foot note in his work (p. 372) states: "There is no royal family in Europe which has shed, in the support of popery, half the blood which the Caput's have shed, who deluged the earth with the blood of the Waldenses and Albegenses." His work was written in 1795, while France was smoking with the blood of nearly three millions of victims, immolated upon the same soil by the beast from the abyss, where these royal monsters had massacred millions. The Bartholomew massacre butchered in cool blood seventy thousand helpless victims. King Charles himself fired upon the fugitives from the window of the palace, shouting with the fiend-like fury of a devil or an inquisitor: "Kill them! kill them!" "The parliament publicly eulogized the king's wisdom," "which had effected the effusion of so much heretical blood. His majesty also went to mass, and returned solemn thanks to God for the glorious victory over heresy. He ordered medals to be coined to perpetuate its memory. A medal accordingly was struck for the purpose, with this inscription: 'Piety excited Justice.' The pope and cardinals went in procession to the church of St. Louis, to return solemn thanks to God [oh, horrible impiety!] for the extirpation of the heretics. Te Deum was sung, and the firing of cannon announced the welcome news."—Dowling, pp. 589, 590.

The days of national retribution for national cruelty in God's appointed time at last arrived; those "golden odors" of which the revelator speaks (chap. 5: 8) came into remembrance before him.

"On November 29th, 1791, the assembly decreed that the Roman ecclesiastics who would not comply with the requirements of the civil constitution, should be subject to the penalties of their disobedience. To that measure Louis XVI. affixed his veto; to which acts Pius VI. in his brief of March 19, 1792, added his sanction, eulogizing the prelates and priests for their disobedience, and Louis for the royal protection which he gave them. Among all the causes of dislike to Louis, probably not one produced more alienation to his government than that attempt to sustain the refractory monks."—Bower, vol. 3, p. 413.

On the 10th day of August, 1791, Louis XVI. "was tried, sentenced, deposed, and all was consummated between him and the nation." "On the 29th of Sept., 1792, he was separated from his family, and led into captivity in the great temple."

"On the 21st of Jan., 1792, he was led forth to the place of execution. Santerre called to the executioner to do his duty. Then it was that despair seized upon the mind of the unfortunate monarch. His countenance assumed a look of horror. Twice with agony he repeated, 'I am undone! I am undone!' and in one moment he was delivered from the evils of mortality. The executioner held up the bleeding head, and the guards cried 'Vive la Republique!' The body was conveyed in a cart to the parish church of St. Madaline, and laid among the bodies of those who had been crushed to death on the Place de Louis XV., when Louis XVI. was married, and those who had fallen before the chateau of the Tuilleries on the 10th of August. The grave was filled with quick lime, and a guard placed over it till the corpse was consumed. The ground was then carefully levelled with the surrounding earth, and no trace or vestage remains of that spot, to which, shrouded by the doubtful gloom of twilight, ancient loyalty might have repaired, and poured a tear, or superstition breathed its ritual for the departed spirit."—Impartial History of France, p. 408.

The Jacobins on that fatal day beheld at the foot of the guillotine the sacrifice they had so long desired. "There is no victim more agreeable to the gods than an immolated king."

Lamertine, in portraying the complicity existing between the political and ecclesiastical elements in France previous to the revolution, remarks:

"The king was the visible God of the nation, and it was religion to obey him; honors, dignities, influence, power, rank, all descended from the king. Esteem gave nothing; favor every thing. Moreover, an alliance as old as the monarchy united religion to royalty, and to destroy one was to destroy the other. France had two secular habits: Royalty and Catholicism, opinion and conscience, were alike on their side; and it was impossible to root up one without disturbing the other. Did royalty fall, Catholicism, as a sovereign and civil institution, fell with it, and instead, one ruin caused two."

"Lastly, the royal family in France, who considered royalty as their inalienable apanage and sovereign power, as the legitimate right of their blood, were allied by marriages to all the kings of Europe, and to attract the rights of royalty in France was to attract or threaten them all over Europe. The royal families were but one family, and the crowns dependent on them."

"The above testimony of the eloquent French historian is very pertinent; it in reality seems to constitute an exposition of our subject. Royalty fell, and Catholicism fell with it; and most evidently instead of one it brought two ruins. The prestige that had previously existed between the Roman harlot and her seven royal paramours, terminated with its victims during the days of the "Terrible Republic." "General Denican, a French officer, declared that three millions of the French perished within five years of the revolution in 1789."

"This execrable power (says Mr. Kett), which alone can steel the hearts of its votaries against every feeling of nature, has dared to sanction treason, parricide, lust, massacre; and to infuse into the breasts of its subject multitudes, a new passion, which has sunk them beneath the level of the brute creation—a passion for the sight of their fellow creatures in the agonies of death—a literal thirst for blood.

This is the power that, first enthroning seven hundred tyrants in the place of one king, ruled twenty-five millions of slaves with the iron sceptre of terror, and for five years made France a slaughter-house.

This is the power that, calling evil good, and good evil, putting darkness for light and light for darkness, has thought to change times and laws, for the express purpose of destroying every vestige of true religion; and that has deified reason, after having degraded it to madness; that has fettered its vassals in the chains of requisition, a tyranny before unheard of; that has transformed the artizans and peasants into a mass of banditti, deluged the country with torrents of their blood, and marked the frontiers with the vast piles of their bodies; that, throwing away the sword of justice, made the guillotine keep pace with the slaughter of the field of battle, and crowded the prisons with numbers greater than the captives of war. That, mingling priests and nobles, women, children, and peasants, with indiscriminating barbarity, made them the victims of its fury, tortured their feelings with the most exquisite and sportive cruelty, and made them drink the cup of misery to the dregs. That, pillaging alike the church, the palace, and the cottage, banishing thousands of the inhabitants from their country, destroying villages, towns, and cities, seizing every monument of art, and drying up every source of commerce, sets up the standard of desolation in in its own dominions. This is the power which, concealing the dagger of terror under the olive-branch of peace, and, pretending also to plant the tree of liberty in every country conquered by its arms, or deluded by its professions, invariably profanes their altars, exiles or murders their priests, abolishes their most sacred laws and institutions, and avails itself of their riches and resources to increase the instruments of its own dominion. This is the power, which, not content with hurling defiance at every sovereign upon earth, has raised its voice against the Majesty of heaven, has reviled the Savior of the world, destroyed his churches, persecuted his ministers, forbidden his worship, and, to complete the measure of guilt, has declared, in terms surpassing the boldness of all former impiety, 'That there is no God.'"

We have now traced, with as much brevity as the subject will admit of, the history of the bloody foot-prints of this seven-headed monster, from the beginning of his war upon the saints, till the hour arrived when the last head was led into captivity, and his power killed by the sword of the beast that ascended out of the abyss. The "forty and two months" it seems terminated then, and since that time the two have been effete institutions in the war elements pertaining to God's saints.

The Roman Catholic emperor's edict, at the commencement of the forty and two months, breathed war to all who would not embrace the Romish faith in three months." Concerning his faith history testifies:

"But in the creed of Justinian the guilt of murder could not be applied to the slaughter of unbelievers; and he piously labored to establish with fire and sword the unity of the Christian faith."

I will now present a brief summary of the decrees of the beast out of the bottomless pit.

"On August 20, 1789, the National Assembly of France appointed a committee on ecclesiastical affairs, who were directed to present a system of laws relative to religion and the priesthood. The first act adopted was that which cancelled the tribute then paid to the court of Rome."

"On Feb. 13th, 1790, the suppression of the monastic orders were decreed."

"On May 26th, 1792, they passed a decree commanding the immediate banishment of every ecclesiastic, without exception, who would not take the civic oath."

In that decree of banishment (article X.) it demands that "they who remain in the kingdom, or return to it after their banishment has been adjudged, shall be condemned to imprisonment for ten years."

In referring to the horrid atrocities of the savage monsters during the triumph of the "Terrible Republic" in the citadel of Romish imperial and ecclesiastical power, the Hon. Girard Noel, of England, an eminent writer, queries:—

"Can the overthrow of the monastic orders, plunder of the church property, the destruction of religion by legislative enactment, and the massacre of a hundred thousand of her clergy, be consistent with any reasonable estimate of domination and power? Under such terrific judgments upon the persecutors, can we refuse to admit that the period of the 'twelve hundred and sixty years' has terminated its course?"

Dear reader, one more prophetic act, as predicted in the unerring word of God, and then the top stone of the church's redemption will be brought forth amid the shoutings of the resurrected sons and daughters of the living God, and the cherubic melody of angelic choristers. Through faith we can antedate the reunion of love's long separated ones. As we meditate a holy fervor glows within, and a heavenly prelibation takes us away into the sacred groves of living pleasure, where "thanksgiving and the voice of melody" will swell the gushing strains of an unending chorus to Him who has loved us, and redeemed us by his own blood. Halleluia! halleluia!

Come, Lord, in thine own good time, and call thy dear ones that have laid down to rest until the youngest heir is of age, and prepares his bridal robe for the grand coronation of the King and his beautiful bride.

"Our heart strings groan with deep complaint,
Our souls lie burdened, Lord, for thee,
And every limb and every joint Stretches for immortality," and to participate in the consummation of the promise—"The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing." Amen. Even so let it be.

REMARKABLE INSTANCES OF PRAYER.

INCIDENTS IN THE EARLY HISTORY OF NEW ENGLAND.

"Blessings," says Dwight, "have in many instances been given, after fervent prayers have ascended to God, when none but God could have contributed to their existence; when they were utterly unattainable by any human efforts, and after all hope of obtaining them, except by prayer, had vanished. I am bound, as an inhabitant of New England, solemnly to declare that, were there no other instances to be found in any other country, the blessings communicated to this, would furnish ample satisfaction concerning this subject to every sober, much more to every pious man.

And have we the same encouragement to present our supplications before the Lord that our fathers had? Most assuredly. His power and grace are still the same. The Lord's hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither his ear heavy, that he cannot hear. Do any say that they are sinful and unworthy? So were our fathers. They felt and confessed themselves to be so. But they did not on this account neglect to call on the name of the Lord. Neither did the Lord turn away their prayer or his mercy from them.

An Indian of superior rank, on Martha's Vineyard, and his wife, having buried their first five children successively, each of them within ten days of their birth, notwithstanding all their use of pow-wows and medicines to preserve them, had a sick child, a son born about the year 1638, which was a few years before the English settled on the island. The mother was greatly distressed with the fear that she should lose this child also; and utterly despairing of help from the means she had formerly tried without success, as soon as she was able (which, among the Indians, is within less than ten days), with a sorrowful heart she took up her child, and went out into the field, that she might there give vent to her feelings in flowing tears. While she was here, musing on the insufficiency of all human aid, she felt it powerfully suggested to her mind, that there is one Almighty God who is to be prayed to; that this God created every thing we see; and that the Being who had given existence to herself, and to all other people, and who had given her this child, could easily continue the life of the child. This poor blind pagan now resolved that she would seek unto this God for the life of her child, which she did accordingly. Her child lived, and her faith (such as it was) in Him who answered her prayer, was greatly strengthened. In view of the goodness and mercy she had received, she was led to dedicate this child to the service of the Being who had preserved his life, and resolved to educate him, as far as she could, to become the servant of the Most High.

Not long after this, the English came and settled on Martha's Vineyard, and the Indians who had been present at some of their meetings, reported that they assembled together frequently, and that the man who spoke among them often looked upward. From this report, this woman concluded that they assembled for prayer, and that their prayers were addressed to the same God to whom she had prayed for the life of her child. She was confirmed in this opinion, when, not long after, Mr. Mayhew came and preached the gospel to the Indians on the island; which gospel she readily and heartily embraced. On her admission to the church, she stated her experience in public, when she gave an account of the preparation for the knowledge of Christ, wherewith God in this wonderful manner had favored her. And what adds to the interest of this wonderful story is, that this very child, whose name is Japhet, has become an eminent preacher of Christ to the Indians. He is living at this time (1696) a very pious man, and a laborious minister, and not only pastor of an Indian church on Martha's Vineyard, consisting of some scores of regenerate souls, but has taken pains to preach the gospel to the Indians on the main land, and his labors have been attended with wonderful success."—Selected by Mrs. M. Arnold.

PASSIONLESS MEN.—Passionless men doubtless usually take more credit to themselves for goodness than they deserve, while fiery men are sometimes judged over-harshly. An old divine says that the grace which would have converted John, would hardly have kept Peter from knocking a man down.

For the World's Crisis.

OUR SACRED RELATIONSHIP.

The Savior said of one class of men, "Ye are of your father the devil," in consequence of their having imbibed the spirit of the devil; and on the same principle another class are pronounced the "children of God"; that is, in consideration of the fact that they have imbibed the spirit of God. We are not to deduce the conclusion that men are only prospectively the children of God, or of Satan, but they are already such in a moral sense. But how do we become children of God, in any sense, except by being born into the Divine family?

In order to become the children of God in a moral sense, we must experience a moral birth; and in order to become the children of God in a physical sense, we must experience a physical birth. And the Scriptures often bring to view a change from sin to holiness under figure of birth. This position is sometimes controverted, some claiming that we are "born of God" at the resurrection; while others claim that we are "born of God" at our conversion. Which claim is right? Both positions are correct.

It is true that a resurrection birth awaits the saints of God, which will constitute them the "children of God" in a physical sense; but it is also true that the moral change which constitutes us saints in this life, is introduced under the figure of being born: "Which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God" (John 1: 13), thereby becoming "children of God by faith." Much testimony of similar import might be adduced.

But the claim is set up that we are only begotten, and not born in this life, remaining in embryo till the resurrection morn; and that all these texts that speak of our being born in this life, might have been translated begotten; but if we invariably translate this original term begotten, instead of born, it would destroy the argument in favor of a resurrection birth, and make the Savior simply say, "Ye must be begotten again." "Except a man be begotten again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." "That which is begotten of the flesh is flesh; and that which is begotten of the spirit is spirit"; not born, but begotten. So this effort to blot out a moral birth, as really blots out a resurrection birth also. If the argument is good against one, it is equally as good against the other. We had better let both positions stand without amendment, for they are both Bible truths, and are in harmony with each other; and there is no need of blotting out one to make place for the other.

Says John, "Beloved, now are we the sons of God [that is, in a moral sense], and it doth not yet appear what we shall be"; for there is to be a future "manifestation of the sons of God" in a physical sense; "the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

But the question may arise, whether to be "born again" would not be the second birth, and whether the second is not the next after the first; and also, if the first is the natural birth, and the second is the resurrection birth, how can we get a birth in between the first and second? We reply, that being "born again" implies the second birth of the same order as itself, and the next after the first of that order, but does not militate against the fact of another birth of another order between the two, any more than the "second death," being the next literal death after the first, would blot out an intervening death "in trespasses and sins," because it would make more than two deaths in the count. All is plain when we notice that there is a first and second death of one particular order, and a spiritual death of another order, not in the same line of deaths; and on the same principle there can be a first and second birth of one particular order, and also a moral birth of another order, not in the same line of births. This moral birth cannot be set aside; we are "born of God" in this life.

Those who tell us that we are only begotten, and not yet born, being only embryo children till the resurrection, make the Scriptures sound strangely; for God's children are said to suffer "chastisement." Does God chastise embryo children? Paul represents some christians as being "babes," and feeding on "milk"; whereas they "ought to be men and women" in Christ, and subsist on "meat." Can embryo children eat meat or be men and women?

God's children, in this life, are said to exercise love, to "fight the good fight," to "run the race," to offer up "spiritual sacrifices"; which could not be affirmed of unborn children. But we are "born of God," in a moral sense, in this life. "Whosoever is born of God doth not commit sin [why?]; for his seed remaineth in him."—1 John 3: 9. But if "the wicked one cometh, and catcheth away that which was sown in his heart," of course then "his seed remaineth in him" no longer, and then he can sin. We cannot trace a blood-relationship to God, but our relationship is traced on the principle of faith—being "the children of God by faith"; and when that principle is lost, our relationship is lost, and must be regained by regaining this principle.

But at the resurrection we are to be physically the children of God, by virtue of a change from mortality to immortality, or a resurrection birth, when a "nation shall be born at once."—Isa. 66: 8. Christ was the "first born from the dead" to immortality, "the first born among many brethren" that still sleep, and soon they too will be born into immortal life, and all be "born at once," and be physically the "children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

OUR NEW OFFICE.

About the first of April, we purpose to move into our new office, corner of Hanover and Salem Streets, directly opposite our present situation. We have secured very pleasant rooms over the Boston drug store. We have reason to thank the Lord that we are able to obtain such a desirable location.

FAST.

As the approaching Boston Conference will be of much importance, we would invite those who feel a special desire that it may be a happy success, to set apart Friday, April 1st, as a day of fasting and prayer, asking the Lord to make the conference the best one we have ever held in Boston; and that its heavenly influence may be widely extended.

RUTLAND.

The meetings in Rutland, Vt., continue to increase in interest. We have rarely been in better meetings. The Spirit of the Lord is truly striving with the people in great power. Some who would have been the last to be selected as persons to be moved by a religious feeling, are seeking the Lord. New ones start every evening. Last Sabbath (March 20th) was a blessed day. We attended eight meetings during the day and evening. There were three sermons, two-prayer meetings, love feast, and two meetings in the jail, besides baptism. These meetings were all excellent. In compliance with a request of the parishoners, and others, we had a meeting at four P. M. in the jail; first with the men, and then with the women. Fifteen in the jail requested prayers. We were locked in with the prisoners, and enjoyed the occasion. We have strong expectations that some of them will be converted.

A great crowd assembled at the chapel in the evening; and some twenty or thirty rose for prayers. Six were baptized at noon; and quite a number of others intend to be buried in baptism next Sabbath, March 27th.

NAPOLEON.

It will be seen among the news from Paris, under date of March 22nd, that Napoleon is modifying his system of government so as to make it the most popular on the eastern continent, if not in the world. He is a well-known Spiritualist, and is arranging his political matters in harmony with the teaching of the spirits, whose evident aim is to make Napoleon III. their head man in the closing conflict between Christ and Belial. Vast preparations are being made by "the Prince of the power of the air" to overturn all religious systems and governments, that will not support Spiritualism, and the doctrine of the natural immortality of man. This is no time for christians to be asleep, and dreaming of a good time to come; but when they should be girded with "the whole armor of God," that they "may be able to stand against the wiles of the devil.' Perilous times are upon us. Shall we be armed for the conflict? While Satan is rallying his forces, the friends of Jesus should be fully armed for the conflict, and enter the contest, determined to conquer or die fighting the "good fight." Let there be no talk or thought of a compromise with the devil in a single thing. For ever let us stand against what is wrong.

FRANCE AND ROME.

Evidence begins to appear that France and Rome are not harmonious. The Pope's situation is becoming more critical. He is like a worm surrounded by a ring of fire. No matter which way the worm goes, there is no way out of his perilous condition. The fire awaits him on every side. So it is with the Pope. He can contrive no way of escape from his critical condition. The greater his effort, the more apparent is his weakness. The fire surrounds him. He cannot get out of the ring, and must die if he does not escape. The combined wisdom of the Ecumenical Council is not sufficient to find a way of escape.

The following is from the New York Times, March 15th:—

"We translate the following highly important extracts from letters of Count Daru, the French Minister for Foreign Affairs, to one of the French Prelates now in attendance at the Ecumenical Council: 'I have seen with regret,' says M. Daru, 'some things that have occurred, and yet I cannot give credence to too serious imprudences on the part of Rome. Rome cannot so blind herself as to suppose that the maintenance of our troops there would be possible on the morrow of the day on which the dogma of infallibity would be agreed upon. Did we desire to leave them in Rome we would not be able to do so. An irresistable movement of public opinion in France would occur, and it would be impossible not to yield to it. The Holy Father undoubtedly knows, sees and believes this. He will follow, I hope, the most moderate counsels of the most illustrious members of the church of France.

I fear that the majority in the Council wishes to misuse its advantages and allow itself to sweep onward madly toward the object in view. It is more difficult to direct religious than political passions. I honor much the resistance made against them by the firm attitude of the minority of Bishops, and I aid it with all my efforts. I have several times sent the instructions of the Government to M. de Bauneville, who keeps me informed of every thing, and through him I have spoken the truth to Cardinal Antonelli. It is very evident that all things can be brought into question again by the conduct of the Italian and Spanish prelates, missionaries and apostolic vicars, who seem to live in another world. It is very evident that it may be made impossible for us to keep our garrison in Rome, and to occupy ourselves with the settlement of the financial affairs of the Holy See (which I was so well disposed to look into) that the engagements of the Concordat may be greatly weakened—the Propaganda not taking these into any account—and that the compact uniting us may be broken. I have warned the Cardinal to this effect. I shall not cease representing to him the danger in which he places himself and us; but I am not sure my assurances are heeded; men do not reason, but allow themselves to be led by the ardor of the hour. If the minority can gain time, its members will do what is best at this moment.

The revolutionary party, which has lately been active here, causes us a little trouble. It conspires, and seems to wish to act soon. How blind they are in Rome, not to see that they supply it with arms, and that the danger is there; that to break the conservative strength in presence of such a peril is to do a deed of insanity; that to compromise religion by syllabi is to play the same game as they who without masks attack it daily in speech and writing! I think the revolutionary plots will fail and that the attempts of the revolutionists will be repressed, but they are symptoms of the condition of men's minds, and should as such be heeded in Rome."—New York Times.

A GOOD STEP.

Sr. Carlee had an interview with a preacher of the gospel, when she informed him that she was poor, and could not pay for the Crisis. He said, "Go to your heavenly Father, tell him all about your trouble, and he will provide means to pay for your paper." Sr. C. says: "But I could not, I dare not beg of Father, so long as I smoked tobacco. So I have thrown the old pipe away; and now I can ask for any thing with confidence, and expect to get the money soon."

Would it not be well for others to treat their pipes in the same manner?

DAMP BEDS.—We would call the attention of our good sisters, who entertain preachers, to an article in another column, on "Damp Beds." Is is a matter that needs attention. The picture is not over-drawn.

NEW CYCLOPEDIA.

We learn that a "New Cyclopedia of Illustrations, adapted to Christian teaching, embracing Mythology, Analogies, Legends, Parables, Emblems, Metaphors, Similes, Allegories, Proverbs; Classic, Historic, and Religious Anecdotes, etc." is about being issued by W. C. Palmer, Jr. & Co., 14 Bible House, Astor Place, New York. Judging from sample pages, we think it will be a work of much value to the preacher and the Bible student.

THE AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKER FOR PARENTS AND TEACHERS, is the title of a new monthly, published by S. W. McIntyre, St. Louis, Mo. Price $1.50 a year. We have received the March number, which is the third in the series. We are much pleased with the devotional spirit of the articles, and their practical bearing on the subject of Sabbath schools. From a hasty examination, we think it is the best work we have seen on the subject.

SPIRITUAL ART.

Painting by a blindfold Medium—a curious exhibition of clairvoyance.

An exhibition of clairvoyant powers was given at the corner of Broadway and Thirty-second street, yesterday afternoon. Mrs. Blair, of Lawrence, Mass., while blindfolded, painted flowers and foliage in a manner that surprised her visitors. About twenty persons were present, among whom were Parker Pillsbury, S. S. Packard, half a dozen reporters, and also several ladies of spiritualistic tendencies. A small table stood near the window partially covered with paint cups. Twenty-four thicknesses of white cotton sheeting were placed upon each of her eyes and fastened with a handkerchief. The lady has but one arm. When all were satisfied that there was no trickery, she leaned back in her chair, and in a few moments the attendant pronounced her unconscious. A card was then called for and the artist commencd painting a rose with great rapidity and skill. In the meantime she conversed in broken English. The gentleman in attendance said that her hand was controlled by Henarii Aselderaerii, an Italian artist, and her brain by a Mohawk Indian known as Black Eagle.

When the reporters began to take notes, she said that she did not understand anything about booktionary, but there was just as much sense in what she said as in the notes of the reporters. All this time she was painting pictures of roses and other flowers. One of her paintings, she said, represented a species of flowers unknown in this country. A "medium" found the other day that it grows on Mount Vesuvius, in the vicinity of the Hermitage. Dipping the brush into the paints, she called attention to a bud of three colors, which she was laying on at one time. Her materials, it was claimed, were only common writing ink, powdered indigo, a stick of gamboge, and one or two other simple colors. She read, in a broken manner, some of the names on the cards that were handed her. When the paint pots were covered with slips of paper, she instantly took them off, as though the bandages were not on her eyes. She reads and paints backward, and also writes in the same manner.

It was said that she knows nothing of painting when in her natural condition, and it is only when under the influence af the Italian, that she can paint at all. Her work in ink closely resembled pencil sketching, and all of her paintings showed a marvelous knowledge of the beautiful art. After painting flowers on several cards, including those of the reporters, a Tribune reporter handed out his reporting book. She began to paint on the cover, saying that it was checked, (which was true) and after making a leaf she said that the paints were tired. The bandages were then removed, and after a minute or two she opened her eyes and walked out of the room. The audience lingered to see if further light could be gained, but they were obliged to depart at last, leaving the mystery to be solved on a future occasion, if ever.—N. Y. Tribune.

THE MYSTERY.

We would like to say a word about "the mystery" of painting when blindfolded by having "twenty-four thicknesses of white cotton sheeting" placed over the eyes. When Moses Hull was in Winsted, giving lectures last winter, he sent for this same Mrs. Blair to come and assist him in convincing the people that the spirits of our deceased friends were present. A committee chosen by the audience blindfolded Mrs. Blair according to the regulations prescribed by Mr. Hull and other Spiritualist friends; when to the surprise of the people, it was found she could paint rose buds and roses with much rapidity, and with ordinary skill. It was claimed that her hand was guided entirely by the spirit of some deceased artist; inasmuch as it was not possible for her to see through so many thicknesses of cloth as were placed over her eyes. This wonderful performance convinced some that Spiritualism is true. A handsome income was secured from the sale of the spirit-painted roses. But it happened that some intelligent Spiritualists went home, and had their eyes bandaged in the same way as were Mrs. Blair's, hoping that some kind spirit-artist might come and use their hands to paint rose-buds. They soon astonished their friends by what they could do, although they could not paint roses, because they had never learned to do such work. But they did sketch pictures, read, add up figures, etc., showing beyond all controversy, as was supposed by the beholders, that the spirits had taken possession of them, and would, no doubt, in a short time, be able to produce things as wonderful as Mrs. Blair's rose-buds.

After all were satisfied that these persons could do wonders, like Mrs. Blair, they were honest enough to say that they could see under the bandage, and performed all the mysteries by the aid of the natural sight. This we received from their own lips. Many others repeated the same experiment, and with the same results. We had two men blindfolded in a very rigid manner by one of the committee who blindfolded Mrs. Blair, and who believed Mrs. B. was sincere, and that her hand was actually guided by a spirit in painting the rose; when it was found that these men, like the Spiritualists to whom we have referred, could also read and do other things that could not be done without sight. But like the others, they could see under the bandages.

"The mystery" is this: Before the bandages are put on, the eyes are tightly closed; afterwards they are opened, which gives a chance to see, provided the bandage be arranged like Mrs Blair's.

After we had gathered a good supply of facts on this subject, we laid them before the audience, during our discussion with Moses Hull, in Camp's Hall, West Winsted, evenings of Feb. 7th, 8th, 9th and 10th, 1870, earnestly inviting Mr. Hull to have Mrs. Blair return to Winsted and satisfy the people that the whole thing of painting roses and rose-buds was not a trick. He said he did not wish to cast pearls before swine, referring to those who doubted Mrs. Blair's sincerity. We replied, we are not all swine, who are satisfied that Mrs. B. saw with her natural eyes under the bandage, when she did her painting; but if we were mistaken, the thing could be easily settled, and our position overthrown, if he would get Mrs. B. and have her eyes bandaged so that all would be satisfied that she did not see under the bandage. When thus pressed to the wall, Mr. Hull said, "I would not have her come if I could." Thus the bubble exploded.

CORRECTION.—In my article in last Crisis on "Adultery, or clinging to Moses and Christ too," where it reads, "The schoolmaster came, we did not need it any longer," it should read "Christ came. The schoolmaster's time expired." A. P. MOORE.

HAVERHILL, MASS.—The Bro. in Haverhill, Mass., wish us to state, for the benefit of preachers who may send appointments there, that they have had to give up their hall, and cousequently their meetings for the present are suspended.

TRACTS---TRACTS.

FOUR NEW TRACTS.—$200 WANTED.

I have four new tracts nearly ready for the press, designed for free circulation in new fields, provided friends will aid me in their publication. I think these documents are adapted to our present wants in missionary fields, as they set forth the cardinal doctrines in our faith in as strong and clear a manner as their author's ability would allow. One will contain about 64 pp., one about 48 pp., one 12 pp., and one 8 pp. Who will aid me in publishing them for free distribution, by sending me $1 or $10, to be refunded in tracts in part or wholly, at wholesale prices, when published? Or who will send pledges, payable as soon as the works are printed? I wish to have them ready about the first of May. It will require funds to do the work; and having been so long kept out of the field by sickness, and not being overstocked with funds, I have no delicacy in asking aid in this enterprise. Please write me at Brodhead, Green Co., Wis., or send to Bro. Grant, if more convenient. WM. SHELDON.

[We hope this call of Bro. Sheldon will receive prompt attention. He deserves a hearty lift. Are there not some noble souls who will aid him liberally?—ED.

GLOVED RELIGION.

BRO. GRANT:—Not long ago, nor a thousand miles from Philadelphia, I saw a S. S. S. actually conduct the whole af a S. S. morning session with a pair of very nice kid gloves on, tightly buttoned around his wrists; and they looked so nice! It seemed quite a novelty to me, and I thought perchance the gentleman may be a business man, and has, by accident, got his hands badly soiled with something not easy to remove; yet, by and by, I found my surmises to be groundless. Thinks I to myself, there is a good moral in this incident, too good to be lost.

Although this S. S. S. gave ample evidence of piety and earnestness in his work, yet I confess I really felt sorry for him, he looked so effeminate, and anything rather than workmanlike. Thinks I, soldiers on dress parade may wear gloves, but what could they do with gloves on in the field of battle? I at once thought of GLOVED RELIGION; that is, this innocent incident suggested that subject to my mind, not implying at all that such is his religion, for I should not think so; yet, there is a sort of religion, very popular, that may appropriately be so styled. I don't mean that of the sheer hypocrite, because he has no religion at all, simply an apology for the want of it. I refer to such religion as that which allows a true christian to shirk his full duty; duties performed with gloves on, either wanting inclination to take right hold, or wanting force to cope with pending obstacles and self-denials in its prosecution. I mean, in a word, all sorts of apologies, instead of a bare-handed taking hold.

Example: when special calls are made on a man's purse, who is really able to "lend to the Lord," and he merely gives a trifle to get rid of the case, instead of being "a cheerful giver," such as "the Lord loveth"; this is what I mean by gloved religion, because it is so different to a taking hold with a bare hand and a warm and willing heart.

The same remarks, in substance, are equally applicable to the great difference between a life of christian devotedness, and one of daily uniformity and general stereotyped routine. The former is a daily taking hold, not with kid gloves, but with clean hands, waxing stronger and stronger. But what is the other? It is a religion of form and custom, just as inseparable from its forms as the lobster is from its shell. Take formal preaching, praying, giving. Thousands preach (if it is indeed preaching) because they are preachers, ministers, pastors; having been ordeined, consecrated, set apart to that business, as the work of their lives; but the preaching is all in the glove. They are preachers, and must follow their calling.

So with the formalist saying his prayers; the millions of Romanists, whose whole salvation is in stated confessions, repeating ave Marias, counting beads, eating fish, fastings, etc. Such are the Romanist's gloves. Nor Romanists alone; such is "High Churchism" in all its phases—its gloves are Roman; and so, too, of "Low Churchism," whether in Roman gloves or Oxford. Formality is all the same in all churches, Methodist as Episcopalian, and Baptist as Roman Catholic. Gloves are but gloves, whether manufactured at Rome, Oxford, or Jerusalem. So the man who gives his five or ten dollars, because he cannot have a face to do otherwise; he does not give it to the Lord, but to save his character and preserve his cast. GLOVED RELIGION! I have done. J. M.

SIGNIFICANT ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

"When thy judgments are in the earth, the inhabitants of the world will learn righteousness."—ISA. 26: 9.

God will not be without his witnesses. Even amid the greatest corruption and degeneracy, there will still be some, who will not bow the knee to Baal, and who will boldly confess the Lord Jesus Christ and his kingdom. And, no doubt, the nearer we approach the end, the greater the corruption and degeneracy will become, and the more will those who love the Master, but have not accepted the doctrine of his speedy personal coming, be made to see and feel that the time is at hand.

This idea was forcibly suggested a few days ago, at a conference of ministers, as a certain brother, who would not see previously any merit in this momentous subject, and who still hoped that there would be a turn in human affairs, when things would grow brighter and better, made the following acknowledgment: "Although I cannot subscribe to the prophetic views put forth by Dr. Seiss and others, yet I firmly believe there is much more truth in their teachings than many of us have believed. For it cannot be denied, that things all around us, in the church and out of it, are growing worse and worse, and darker and darker, every day; and I see no earthly hope that they will get any better. Things are becoming truly awful." To this another brother, who had been still more bitter against these Advent views, replied: "This dreadful state of things is only fulfilling the Savior's words: 'Broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat: because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it.' And 'as the days of Noe were, so shall also the coming of the Son of man be;' and thus it will continue up to the time of the end when the Master shall come."

These brethren have thus been forced to confess the truth against their own theories and hopes. God grant that many more ministers of the gospel may be led to discern the signs of the times, and to give the trumpet a sound which shall not be mistakable!—Prophetic Times.

For the World's Crisis.

IT TAKES ALL TO KNOW IT ALL

We learn from each other what instinct has not taught us by nature; and as I am not satisfied with any position yet taken on the first start of man's obligation to the law of God, I will open a few thoughts for investigation, as truth cannot suffer by examination. Can there be a law without first having legislation to make the law binding? Adam was under a law which had its penalty after the law was broken. The investigation took place, and the Lord inquired into the cause of the disobedience. Three persons were implicated—the devil, or serpent, Adam and Eve. The Lord found the devil the most guilty, he being older and wiser. He gave him his sentence without mercy; then brought the seed of the woman—Christ—to view in the new, or second plan of salvation, before pronouncing sentence on the two less guilty. Here was a different sentence from the first, as Christ had been introduced into the plan of salvation before they got their sentence. Christ was slain from the foundation of the world, or this point of time, and tasted death for every man. Adam was included, and had a right to a new trial, or a continuation of the old, by substituting Christ for the tree. Now if the most guilty are at liberty, how is it that the two less guilty have had the execution administered first, and before the day of execution appointed has come, or the executioner comes to do work, which is Christ at his second coming.

It seems to me, that as Christ was offered in the second plan for all, except the devil, Adam and Eve understood the plan, and acted accordingly by their sacrifices, typifying Christ, the seed, and teaching their children to obey this second command, as we see they did; and Abel's lamb slain shows clearly this fact, and Paul so interprets it. In Gen. 4: 25–26, we see that Adam's family and relatives had a prayer meeting, when Enos, Adam's first grand-son was born, the first son of Seth. This shows that they worshiped God long before Adam suffered the penalty for his first transgression; and there is as good reason to believe Adam was a religious man as any one under the old law, and can claim eternal life through Christ as truly as we, or any other. VERMONT TENT.

Dear brethren in Vermont, greeting: Last fall, at our campmeeting at Bethel, Camp Brook, we agreed to purchase a tent, to be called "Vt. Advent Christian Mission Tent." At that time we took pledges to the amount of $146, if my memory serves me right. Since that time, we have had pledged $75 more. Now, brethren, we want you to send in your pledges as soon as possible. We want $100 more, or about that. If there should be a trifle more than just enough to pay for the tent, it will be needed to pay expenses in getting the tent into the State.

We have not heard anything from the president or the secretary of the conference since its organization. For my part, I don't want this State forgotten; and I hope the brethren will not throw the responsibility upon me. Bro. Mathewson, will you do something for us on your side of the mountain? Bro. Stetson, what have you done since the campmeeting? I expect to go to Boston, to the conference, the fifth of April. I shall see what the tent will cost. We wish to have the tent now. Who will help? Who will give $10, $15, or $20? If you cannot give so much as that, give what you can. Cast in your mite, and God will bless you. Come, let us wake up to this subject. Brethren, the Lord is soon coming. Let us do what we can. Please report to Bro. Newell Stetson, of West Hartford, Vt. If you will do anything, let some one in every place get what he can, and send it to him. Take right hold of it. It is almost time to have the tent in the field.

FOUR IMPOSSIBLE THINGS.—First, to escape trouble by running away from duty. Second, to become a Christian of strength and maturity without undergoing severe trials. Third, to form an independent character except when thrown upon your own resources. Fourth, to be a growing man when you look to your post for influence, instead of bringing influence to your post.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

BRO. GRANT:—It is now four weeks since I left my home in Marshfield, Vt. My first meeting was in East Montpelier. Commenced on Thursday, and continued through the week, and over the following Sabbath. They were very much revived during the meeting; some were converted, and some reclaimed. The meeting was a success. From there we went to Braintree. Here we found any amount of Spiritualists of the deepest dye; nevertheless, the truth produced a good effect. There was not a dog to move his tongue against it. We commenced our meetings at this place on Wednesday evening, and continued through the week and over the following Sabbath. The way is opened here for the truth. The people are very anxious to get preaching one half of the time. There is a good opening for some one to preach. We are destitute of help in the ministry. I would like to have some of the preachers from N. H. and Mass. come up and help us. There is a very great call for help in this State. Who will come?

From this place we went to Canaan, N. H., where we found the little church in good working order, and on the way to the kingdom. This little church has had much to contend with ever since its organization; but we believe they are on the right track. They have a good Sabbath School, which is a great blessing to the children and parents. Their numbers are increasing every week. How any one can oppose well conducted Sabbath Schools, I am not able to see. For my part, I am very much in favor of them; and may God bless them, the teachers, superintendent, and all connected with the school and church.

From there we returned to Bethel, Camp Brook, Vt., where we held our campmeeting. We found the little church here on the wing for glory. God has wonderfully blessed the people in this place. A goodly number have been converted within the last year. I have preached here one fourth of the time for the last year. Last Sunday evening, there were six or eight forward for prayers. We had a full house. We never attended a better meeting than we had at this place on Monday evening, Feb. 7th. We came from Bethel to Braintree, and spent the evening there. We had a full house, and good attention. We left them Tuesday morning for East Roxbury, where we are now, well blocked in with snow. We had a very hard snow-storm. The snow fell from fifteen to eighteen inches deep. The wind is playing with it at a great rate to-day. We had a meeting with the brethren here last evening. There are a few faithful souls here, and they love the truth more than any thing else.

I am glad in the Lord that we can find some in every place that love the Lord. We find good homes all through the country. I bless God to-day that we have got almost through to the kingdom. Brethren, be faithful. Go on your way rejoicing until Jesus comes. Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly, is my prayer. J. A. CLEAVELAND.

East Roxbury, Feb. 8th, 1870.

From Bro. S. Ayres.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just returned from Millward, Charlton, after spending three or four days in the highways and hedges, trying with Bro. Wood to stir up the people by the word of God to attend to salvation and redemption through the blood of the Lamb; and, thanks be to God, we have seen the fruits of our feeble labors, for the hills and valleys are all astir, and ready to bear upon the blessed hope of life and immortality through Christ and the speedy coming kingdom, and confess that they have never heard on this wise before.

We have been there two or three times, and spent three days at a time with them; and, blessed be God, four have made a start in the service of God, and others are anxiously searching their Bibles like the noble Bereans, to see whether these things are so. Our meetings are held in private houses, and seventy-five to one hundred congregate together, and listen attentively to the Scriptures as we try to present them. It is a pleasure to see such interest manifested to hear the word explained in so simple a way. People that have neglected to read the Bible for years, are now buying and searching them with pleasure. Backsliders, infidels, and all classes, are now in the work. The people come for miles around to hear what these babblers can say. God is with us and blessing our efforts, and to his name be all the glory.

Brethren and sisters, let us be awake to this work in the highways and hedges, that God's house may be filled. Then will our Jesus come and save us. His coming is at the door. All nature speaks, together with signs in the heavens above and upon the earth beneath, and the state of things in the church and in the world, all proclaim that it is even so. Are we ready? Is our work done? Have we on the wedding garment, ready and waiting? If so, then joy and peace are ours; and if found faithful unto the end, a crown of righteousness will be given us. May God help us to endure hardness as good soldiers of the cross, knowing here is no rest, no continuing city, but we seek one to come.

It is with much fear and trembling that I go to preach, or rather to teach, the word of God to dying men. Pray for me. When I have felt the weakest, I have proved to be the strongest; and yet not I, but Christ who is formed in me the hope of glory. Your brother, waiting in hope, SAM'L AYRES.

Worcester, Feb. 7th, 1870.

From Sr. M. M. C.

BRO. GRANT:—Sabbath, March 6th, was a memorable day to the lovers of the truth as it is in Jesus in this city. Our meetings were held in the City Hall, day and evening, for the first time, and the hall was well filled by friends from other churches, and citizens generally. Our love-feast in the morning was a sweet and precious season to the lovers of Jesus; the Holy Spirit was felt in the meeting, and God's blessing rested upon his children as they testified to his love and goodness, and spoke of the "blessed hope." At the close of the morning service we repaired to the riverside, where Bro. Hook administered the ordinance of baptism. Four happy souls were "buried in the likeness of his (Christ's) death, and raised in the likeness of his resurrection," two young couples, husband and wife, both together going into "the liquid grave," and receiving together God's blessing upon his obedient children,—a most interesting and impressive scene.

In the evening, at the close of the sermon, we gathered around the Lord's table to partake of the emblems of his broken body and spilled blood, that precious blood which alone has efficacy to cleanse from all sin. How blessed to obey the command thus to do in remembrance of him till he comes again, when all his children of every age and nation, from Abel down to the last saint who shall be sealed in the forehead, shall meet in the kingdom around the table of the Lord at the "marriage supper of the Lamb."

Bro. Hook has been with us some three weeks, and the Lord has blest his faithful and earnest labors among us; sinners have been convicted, and some we trust have resolved to be the Lord's. Backsliders have been reclaimed, eight in all have been baptized, and all have been strengthened and encouraged in the good way. The cause of truth is gaining ground in the minds of the people, as it must whenever and wherever it is faithfully upheld to the world. The people of Dover showed their interest by coming to hear. The hall, capable of seating comfortably a thousand or more, was filled with an intelligent and appreciative congregation, as was attested by close attention to preaching; and many in all parts of the house were seen to weep.

God grant that those of us in Dover who have got the love of God and his truth in our hearts, may so let our light shine, that others seeing our good works may be led to glorify our Father who is in heaven. O let us do all we can to save sinners for whom Christ died. It is time to be awake and in earnest about this matter. If we want to hear the words "Well done," we must do all we can to hold up the light of Christ's speedy coming to this judgment-bound people. M. M. C.

Dover, N. H.

From Sr. M. E. Streeter.

My dear, yes, more than dear brethren and sisters in the Lord:—Permit me to pen you a few lines through our dear paper, the Crisis, in this hour of deep and heart-felt affliction. Pity me, oh pity me, my dear ones, for the hand of affliction has fallen heavily upon me. Our dear, and almost idolized brother, the youngest of the family, and the pet one with the whole of us, has been suddenly and unexpectedly snatched from our fond and loving embrace, and our hearts and homes are filled with sadness, loneliness, and bitter, bitter grief.

This heavy affliction has almost crushed the tender, loving heart of our dear sick sister Thera; for he was one of the most affectionate and loving brothers that ever lived, and loved us all so tenderly; and poor sick Thera he loved and pitied so very much, her lot being such a hard one, and her sufferings so severe, he felt the deepest love and tenderest affection for her. Her heart is breaking with very grief, and her eyes are drowned with tears, and she almost refuses to be comforted, because our dear brother is not. O my God, help us to bear it without murmuring. The circle is broken; our fairest flower is gone, and gloom and sadness have been left in his stead. My pen refuses to describe the terrible scene through which we have passed, and the awful fits and spasms our dear Thera has had in consequence of this dreadful affliction.

O, if it was not for our blessed Jesus, what could she or any of us do at this time. Dear ones, do write to this poor child of affliction, and comfort her now if you possibly can. Some of the letters she has received could not have been written more comforting, had they known the awful trial through which she is passing. It is a terrible shock to her poor suffering body, and for awhile it was feared that she would die under the heavy blow which so suddenly came upon her. But we hope and pray that God will keep her calm, and help her to cast it all on him, as she ever has done. Don't forget to pray for her, and write her words of comfort. Remember us all in your prayers. "Weeping endureth for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." O hail that blessed morning, when all these trials and sorrows will be past and gone forever.

O Jesus, pity us, and hasten thy coming, and bring our loved ones from the tomb, and make this earth like Eden bloom. How true the language of the poet—

> "When we see a precious blossom,
> That we tended with such care,
> Rudely from our bosoms taken,
> How our aching hearts despair."

Never were these words more truly and feelingly expressed by any one than by this mourning household. Everything wears a gloomy appearance; but oh, this blessed hope! what could we do, where should we go, if we had no Jesus? MARY E. STREETER.

BRO. GRANT:—The good work in this town is still going on. A few have taken hold of the blessed truths of the Bible, and are rejoicing greatly in the light and liberty which the gospel brings. And, as is always the case, Satan and a worldly church are busy scattering darkness, and crying "peace and safety." But thank God, they can do nothing against the truth, but for it; and the more they try to put it down, the more people are looking into it. This town has been pretty well stirred, and many are searching the Scriptures to see if these things are so.

Thursday, Feb. 3d, we took stage and crossed the mountains—the coast range—to Santa Cruz, about forty miles. We found a good road, had a pleasant drive, and saw many wonderful things—as this great country abounds in wonders. I will mention but one, and that a kind of tree that grows on these mountains, called Red-wood. They are from ten to twelve feet through, and some two hundred feet high, straight as a line, and will split out like boards for building or shingling. The wood is red clear through, very durable, standing for years in the soil or water without rotting.

Santa Cruz is an old town, on the sea-board, and was settled by Spanish Catholics. They have a large property at the present time. There are about four thousand inhabitants. It is a summer watering place for the State. It has five orthodox churches, and quite a brisk shipping port. We knew no person in town, and stopped at the Pacific House. Next morning we started out with tracts, and scattered them all through the town, talking with people as opportunity presented. About a mile from town, on a thickly settled road leading to another village, we found a large, new school-house, which we obtained to hold meeting in on Sunday afternoon. I wrote notices, and took them to the pastors of the different churches in town to read. The Congregationalist eyed me sharply, and asked if I was a Mormon? They all read them, however, and we had a good, intelligent congregation, that listened with tearful eyes and deep attention, and joined heartily with us in singing our songs. I spoke on the kingdom of God, touching on the state of the dead, no immortality out of Christ, and the destruction of the wicked.

A few words about my experience. Those who labor in this State must go as strangers into a strange place, stop at a hotel, scatter tracts around, and look up a place to preach; and if the school-houses and halls are not owned or ruled by church members, you can secure one. Give your own appointment, pay your bills on leaving, and give away your tracts. Whoever can labor in this way will find plenty of room and work in this State; and a few that love Jesus and his appearing will bid you welcome, but the great body will say all manner of evil against you falsely, and wish you anywhere else but here. We spent one day very pleasantly on the coast, gazing on old ocean with its ever-varying and changing beauty. Our love for the ocean is intense, as it was our companion in childhood, and the home of maturer years was by its waters. After two years of wandering missionary life, I gaze upon the broad Pacific with a heart swelling with love and gratitude to God, who hath guided my feet and preserved me thus far. God grant some fruit may be found from this visit in the great harvest day.

I arrived home safely, and found the little church in good condition, as it was left in the hands of Bro. Newton, who stands like a granite boulder for the truth.

Feb. 11th, we left home again for Melpetus, on the railroad to San Francisco. Scattered tracts, and held meeting on Sunday. Good attention, and some listened with eagerness. We met with an English family at this place, who had formerly been members of Dr. John Cumming's church, in London, for five years. They believed the Lord was soon coming, and longed for his appearing, and believed they should reign on the earth. Our interview was pleasant, for we find none of like precious faith as we journey in this land. We are strangers, and among strangers, but the Lord is with us, and is our strength and shield. If we continue faithful, we shall all meet in the kingdom soon, for the Lord is soon coming. God help us to endure. In hope,

D. D. Reed.

Santa Clara, Cal., Feb. 14th, 1870.

Bro. J. Willfong writes from Dubuque, Iowa:—"Within the last year I became acquainted with your doctrine in relation to the future destiny of man. I must confess that I have never seen before any doctrine that harmonizes with the Bible—that is, to take it all through—as the doctrine which you advocate. I have been a Roman Catholic, but I could not find any Bible doctrine in that church. About one year ago I left that faith and went to the Lutherans, thinking perhaps that I would find the true Bible doctrine there. I went to their theological seminary to study for the office of the ministry, but I was not satisfied, so I left them and went to Strawberry Point, Iowa, and there I got hold of a book entitled, 'A Discussion between Elder Grant and Elder Clayton, upon the intermediate state of the dead, and the destruction of the wicked.' Then it was that my eyes began to be opened. Passages which were dark and mysterious to me before, became as plain as a, b, c; and to-day the Bible seems to me an entire new book. Now I say to my Catholic and Lutheran friends, lay aside your prejudice, take up your Bible, and do as St. Paul says, 'Prove all things; hold fast that which is good,' and you will be a Catholic or Lutheran no longer. You will find that the Bible does not teach that men go to heaven, or hell, or purgatory, at death. I am willing to face any priest, bishop, or pope, upon that doctrine."

Bro. J. B. Paine writes from Suncook, N. H., Feb. 7th, 1870:—"My heart is made glad every week by reading the Crisis. The doctrine it advocates, I believe with all my heart. It cheers me to hear from those of like precious faith, and I often sing—

"How sweet the christian's hope to me
While here I'm called to roam;
It points me to a better land,
That I may call my home."

No wonder Paul should call it that 'blessed hope.' May the Lord help us all to be ready to hail the glad day."

Bro. A. Warren writes from N. Islesboro, Me., Feb. 15th, 1870:—"I thank God that the Crisis ever came to me; that it was ever put within my reach. It has been the means of giving me more light on the Bible than any thing else I ever read. I can now understand it. It is as plain as the A. B. C.'s are to me. I love to read of the coming of my Lord. I believe the time is very near."

Bro. C. D. Kentfield writes from Brandon, Vt., Feb. 17th, 1870:—"The Crisis has come to hand to-night, and I have got my feast out of it, as I generally do; for in the midst of the moral darkness that is all around me, it affords me much comfort. That and the blessed Bible give me bright light on our nearness to the port of peace."

NEWS FROM ALL THE WORLD.

Here is an item showing the baneful result of wrong ideas touching the state of the dead:

Some remarkable statements are made in the Sitka Times about the prevalence of slavery in Alaska territory. Slaves can be bought to-day from any Indian tribe in Alaska. Parents will sell their children for three or four blankets or a few dollars, and have no compunction of conscience for the use they may be put to in the future. When one tribe goes to war with another, all the prisoners taken by either tribe are called, treated, and used as slaves. When a chief or any of his family dies, it is the custom to kill one or more of these slaves, so that the chief or his deceased relative may have a servant in the other world to wait upon him. As soon as the chief dies the slave is compelled to wash the body of the corpse, and is then taken out and thrown flat on his back and held there, when a stick of wood is placed across his throat and the two Indians sit down on each end of it, and in this way strangle him to death. His body is then placed inside a large pile of wood and burned to ashes. Quite recently an old chief of the Sitka tribe died, and his relatives selected as a victim for the usual sacrifice a young, healthy, good-looking fellow whom the tribe had taken prisoner while at war with one of the tribes down near Queen Charlotte's sound. Nothing but the interference of Gen. Davis prevented the putting of him to death.—N. Y. Sun.

A Recalcitrant Divine.—Rev. George Gilfillan, well known to literature, is to be tried before his presbytery, in Scotland, for impugning the confession of faith and the shorter catechism. He has told his congregation that he claimed for himself that he held all the vital doctrines of christianity, such as the existence of God, the trinity, the divinity of Christ, the atonement, etc., but admitted that there were certain doctrines in the confession, such as the eternal reprobation, the damnation of non-elect infants, to which he could not subscribe. But he was not, he said, singular in denying these statements. Dr. William Anderson, in the presbytery of Glasgow, and Dr. Peddie, in the presbytery of Edinburgh, had each avowed their dissatisfaction with portions of these venerable documents. Why, then, he asked, should he be pounced upon, and forced to plead while these other offenders were allowed to go unpunished? It was proposed to institute inquisitorial proceedings, and to ask him to point out the doctrines in the confession, besides those stated in his book, to which he took exception. That he would not do.

A Gigantic Military Experiment.—The Russian government is making a very important experiment. The Oxus now flows into the Sea of Aral. It once flowed into the Caspian, its old bed being still visible enough to be a feature in maps. If it could be brought back the Russians would have an unbroken and impregnable water communication from the Baltic to the heart of Khiva, and with further improvements to Balkh would, in fact, be able to ship stores at Cronstadt for central Asia, and send them without land carriage. The addition to their power would be enormous; for instance, they could send 10,000 riflemen almost to Afghanistan by water, and without any sound audible to the west, and their engineers think it can be secured. An energetic officer, with 1,800 men, is already on the south bank of the Caspian; the natives are reported "friendly,"—that is, we suppose, quiet—and the Russian government has the means, through its penal regiments, of employing forced labor on a great scale. We shall hear a great deal more of this engineering enterprise.—London Spectator.

A Speaking Machine.—A German genius has invented a speaking machine, which is now on exhibition in Leipsic, and is a masterpiece of inventive art. It is in imitation of all the parts of the human organs of speech, executed in India and wood. A keyboard, played like that of a piano, puts the parts in motion, while by a pedal and bellows the required air is sent through the windpipe. The keyboard has only fourteen keys, representing the sound of a, o, u, i, e, j, r, w, f, s, b, g, d, sh; the other sounds of the alphabet are produced by the same movement, and the admission of more or less air. The sounds of m and l are produced by closing the lips, and by pressing the tongue against the roof of the mouth, &c. The French nasal sounds are produced by a separate contrivance. The laughing, it is said, sounds truly diabolical, and the crowing of a rooster very comical.

A speaking image is prophesied in Revelation.

Crime in New York.—A morning paper admits that there is no kind of security for life or property now remaining in the city. It immediately follows this admission with a declaration that the police are not to blame. The responsibility for all the prevailing lawlessness rests, according to that paper, upon coroners, magistrates and judges. This is in direct opposition to an abundance of evidence to the contrary. No doubt magistrates and judges have had their share in promoting the reign of immunity for criminals of a certain class. But for the devilish effrontery, and almost inconceivable safety, with which villians of every grade perpetuate their offences here nobody is to be blamed but the police. Indeed, so corrupt is that body that we believe there would be less crime among us if it did not exist.

She says "she will sit a queen." From the correspondence of the London Times:—

Rome, Feb. 18. All sides are now buoyant with hope. The Italians—that is, the perfidious enemies by whom the Pope's own organ declares his throne to be surrounded—say that Rome is about to stultify herself past all cure. Rome herself says that she is about to unite all nations, and establish her reign forever. The wondrous birth of time which is to do this has not yet been seen by eyes profane, but the exultation is unbounded. Already all the supposed failures and mishaps are more than repaired; they are justified, and declared to be the very best things that could have happened.

The Scarlet Woman.—The vestments worn at Rome are described as beautiful beyond conception, and the ladies say the lace upon them surpasses anything in the world. So dazzling are the colors of the dresses that the bishops are likened to a bed of tulips in appearance.

What does this mean?—Charles Sumner, Horace Greeley and B. F. Butler have been elected honorary members of the French "Universal Peace League."

Bishop Simpson's Charge.—Bishop Simpson recently gave a unique charge to several young Methodist ministers who were ordained at Philadelphia. In the course of it he said:

"Talk neither too long nor too loud. The measure of our duty is the measure of our ability. You must use the tone and power of your own voice and nothing else. Be as God made you and what he has given you. Guard yourselves strongly and thoroughly, both mentally and physically. By your care you can work for years. An earnest heart with thought reaches the people. The more natural we talk the more effective will we be. Take time for speaking. Speak naturally and earnestly, and stand erect in the fear of God. Be careful about your diet. Don't eat late suppers. I have found that nine out of ten ministers who eat after preaching die early. Endeavor to live long and try to do as much good as you can. Oh! if, after we have learned to live, we could live a thousand years, what a great amount of good we could do here! I am more anxious now to live than I ever was."

Obituaries.

Hill. Died, in Lakeville, Conn., March 11th, 1870, of consumption, John S., son of James M. and Mary E. Hill, aged nineteen years.

A few weeks after he was baptized, in a meeting at his father's house, he said, "I am glad that I was converted and baptized before I was taken sick. When friends stood weeping at his bedside, he said, "Weep not for me; Jesus will make me live again." Without a struggle he fell asleep in Jesus. The funeral was attended by the writer, in the M. E. Church in Sharon. C. W. Baker.

Foster. Died, in Victoria, Knox Co., Ill., March 10th, 1870, of consumption, Sr. Clarissa, wife of Eld. Geo. W. Foster, aged fifty years.

Sr. Foster was born in Grafton, N. H., in which State she resided some thirty years before coming west. She embraced the "blessed hope" about 1840, and was a firm believer in the time question of '43–4; consequently much disappointed because her Savior did not then come. Nevertheless her mistake in the time did not weaken her faith in the fact, and though the vision tarried, she patiently waited for it until the enemy death claimed her for his victim. But she sleeps in Jesus—

"Blessed sleep!
Fom which none ever wake to weep."

By her life, her example, her godly walk and conversation, she won the esteem of the pure in heart wherever her lot has been cast, and let her light so shine that others seeing her good works might be led to glorify her Father which is in heaven. A faithful wife, a kind and loving mother, she leaves a bereaved family circle, husband, children, father, and sister to mourn her loss. But they sorrow not "even as others which have no hope," for by "patient continuance in well doing" they hope to be prepared by a grace divine to meet her again at the resurrection of the just.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, March 22. The Journal Official to-day contains a letter from the Emperor to the Prime Minister, Emile Ollivier. He says: "It would be expedient in the present condition of affairs to adopt all reforms which will restore constitutional government to France in order to put an end to that immoderate desire for change which possesses certain spirits who disturb the public mind by their belief in the instability of the present regime." Among the reforms which he has instituted the Emperor places in the first rank those which touch the Constitution and the prerogatives of the Senate. He urges M. Ollivier to concert with his colleagues for the submission to him (the Emperor) of a project for a Senatus Consultum which will fix invariably the fundamental provisions—dispositions fundamenteles—growing out of the plebiscitum of 1852, divide the legislative power between the two chambers and restore to the nation a part of the representative power which had heretofore been delegated.

London, March 24. The cable from Aden, Arabia, through the Red Sea to Suez, Egypt, has been successfully laid, thus completing a direct submarine line from Bombay to Suez. The completion of the Indo European line was announced a few days ago.

This is still another route and is destined to be the thoroughfare of the far East business. The line will be open to the public in a day or two.

It is asserted that the American bishops at Rome refuse to assent to the proclamation of Papal infallibility, and that every effort to conciliate them has proved futile.

March 25. Cholera has reappeared in St. Petersburg.

Rome, March 25. In the Ecumenical Council great excitement was caused to-day by a motion of Bishop Strossmer that the assent of the entire Episcopate be necessary to the definition of an article of faith.

Florence, March 25. Tumults have taken place in Pavia between the military and citizens. Some were shot on both sides. In Parliament last night Signor Lausea said that the Government would do all in its power to prevent the recurrence of the lamentable event.

Paris, March 27. Prince Pierre Bonaparte has been acquitted in spite of the strong appeal by the Procureur General for a verdict of guilty with extenuating circumstances.

It is believed at Rome that the French Government is discussing with the English Government the political aspects of the question of Papal infallibility. The publication of the Bishop of Strossmayer's protest against the proclamation of the dogma is hourly expected. A manifesto on the subject from Count Daru is also looked for.

DOMESTIC.

A Phenomenon in Maine.—A correspondent of the Lewiston (Me.) Journal says a singular phenomenon occurred last week in the field of John Gould, Jr., in Lisbon. A loud noise was heard in the vicinity on the same day the shock of earthquake was experienced at Richmond. People rushed out of doors, and looked around to discover the cause of the noise, but nothing unusual was to be seen. Since then it has been found that a large mass of earth has been lifted from its place, in Mr Gould's field by some unknown power. The earth removed is nearly in the form of a parallelogram on the surface. It is about twelve feet long and four feet wide, and is fully a foot thick, or to the depth of the frost. It is as regular, and the corners as well defined, as though cut by a saw, and was thrown out, apparently, by some tremendous power exerted on all parts alike, and it was deposited, "right side up," half its width from the place it formerly occupied. The ground on one side of the hole is puffed up about six inches to the rising land, about a rod distant.

Important Subterranean Discoveries at Athens.—King George of Greece is excavating the ancient Panathenaic Stadium at Athens. He has purchased at his own expense the land supposed to have been occupied by the race-course on the right bank of the Illyssus, and workmen are engaged in removing the deposits of earth. At a depth of several feet a perfect semi-circular wall of compact marble has been exposed, and a corresponding interior wall of perfect masonry. Between these the spectators passed, ascending through marble entrances—two of which have also been discovered—to the seats in the amphitheatre above. These walls are supposed to have extended around the entire length of the race-ground, and may be still existing. The upper end is in perfect preservation. Parts of columns have been found with carved work at the bases, and other marble fragments forming portions of the doorways and seats. It will not be surprising if King George's discoveries equal those made along the shores of the Acropolis, which are now only second to the Parthenon and the Tharum. The length of the Stadium was six hundred yards, the semicircle end was artificial, and the natural slope of the banks formed the amphitheatre, where some forty thousand spectators seated themselves on the turf. Herodes Atticus constructed the marble steps and seats, and this is the work now brought to light. It is described by Parsanius as having been "of white marble and wonderful to behold." The King intends to upturn the earth over the whole extent of the plain and hill-sides, so that whatever exists in the way of stone work may be revealed.

A Sad Affliction Connected with the Loss of Steamer City of Boston.—Seven merchants, all doing business on the same street in Halifax, were lost in the steamer City of Boston. They had gone out to purchase their spring supply of goods and will never more return. This is a sad affliction, indeed.—Boston Traveller.

Religious Items.

☞ Rev. Mr. Earle's recent labors of ten days in Salem, Mass., were greatly blessed, and large and earnest meetings are still in progress. In every church there are manifest tokens of the presence of the Spirit, and the interest seems on the increase. The Congregationalist says, "The state of things is such that the Unitarian ministry have abandoned a course of lectures on church history which they had in progress, and have commenced a series of Sabbath evening discourses on topics that are being largely discussed in the community."

☞ The Congregationalists, Baptists and Methodists of Kalamazoo, Mich., are holding interesting Union meetings.

☞ On Sunday, the 5th inst., seventy-five were added to the Beach street Presbyterian church of Boston; of these many were heads of families.

☞ The five Evangelical churches in Portsmouth, N. H., have held a series of union meetings in connection with the labors of Mr. H. F. Durant and several clergymen. On Sabbath afternoon, February 27, Mr. Durant spoke at the North meeting house, being aided by one of the pastors, while at the same time the four remaining pastors attended a crowded union prayer meeting in the Methodist church. Thirty neighborhood prayer meetings were announced for the following Saturday night.

☞ The Welsh C. M. church of Cincinnati have lately had a very refreshing visitation of the Holy Ghost. For a few weeks past they have been holding special meetings of prayer and exhortation, which have been attended by deep religious feeling. Forty-one members have been added to this church during the past month, most of them being children. Whole classes are now called Christians, every member being consecrated to Christ.

☞ On Sunday morning, March 6, seventy-six persons were received into the Second Presbyterian church, Zanesville, Ohio. A large number have been received into the other Presbyterian churches of that city, as well as into the churches of other denominations. In the judgment of Christians the work is only beginning, services being only fairly entered upon in all the churches, with encouraging results.

Passing Events.

☞ It is told of a lady in Maryland, born a mute, that on the day she attained her fiftieth year, to the great surprise of her family and friends, she began talking fluently, and from then to the hour of her death, which occurred on the following day, she prayed almost unceasingly in an audible voice and understandingly. The lady had two sisters and a brother also mutes.

☞ Sir Moses Montefiore publishes in London an appeal which he received from Jerusalem. It is signed by the representatives of several Jewish congregations. They state that dire distress has fallen upon the city. All help from without is closed. Hunger rages within, and water cannot be obtained for money. Hosts of locusts encamped on the borders destroyed every blade of grass, consequently all kinds of provisions are daily increasing in price. The appellants earnestly cry for assistance in this time of sorrow and affliction.

☞ The greatest discontent with the new ministry prevails in France. Ollivier is cursed from morning till night, and men heretofore inactive are now roused into action by a desire to dethrone this second Emperor.

☞ The highest point reached by man, without the aid of a balloon, is 19,600 feet.

☞ Salt Lake, in Utah, is seven feet higher than it was ten years ago, and is constantly rising.

GENERAL CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ worshiping at Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting:

Beloved in the Lord, believing that yet a little while and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry; and that the signs of the times indicate that we are among the predicted perils of the last days; and that we are rapidly approaching those scenes of final trouble such as never was, which shall convulse the world with sorrow and distress; we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ, and the preachers of his word who are interested in these momentous themes, without distinction of sect or name, to meet us at our place of worship, at the corner of Lowell and Causeway Streets, Boston, on Tuesday evening, April 5th, 1870, and to continue with us over the coming first day of the week:

To unite with us in worship and thanksgiving to God for his abundant mercies to all men, and to us who have learned his will, and tasted that he is gracious:

To listen to the proclamation of the truth of God for the edification of the church, and the preaching of the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand:

To exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching:

To invite sinners to Christ, the refuge from approaching wrath, pointing them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world:

To encourage each other in the great work, committed to us as a people, of proclaiming life and immortality through Christ alone, the resurrection of the dead, and the speedy coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For these objects we invite our brethren and sisters, and the servants of the Lord, and shall make them welcome to our worship, our homes, and our hospitalities, trusting that we may thus be blessed and comforted together. And we desire the prayers of God's people that our gathering together may be to the praise and glory of our heavenly Father. And when the mighty voice shall be heard, saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready;" may we all be found arrayed in that righteousness which alone will insure admission to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

That our preachers may be at liberty to attend the Boston Conference, our next conference will be held at West Gloucester, R. I., commencing Wednesday, two o'clock P. M., March 30th, 1870, which is one week earlier than our adjournment. Those coming on N. and W. R. R., leave cars at Putnam. From Providence come to Chepatchet, and be met by team. A team will probably run to Putnam depot Wednesday and Thursday.

Per order of Moderator,
H. F. Carpenter, Clerk.

To my Friends.

In response to my advertisement in the Crisis, desiring a home for my little girl, I have received some eighty applications. A pressure of business prevents my replying to all by letter, and I take this means of informing those to whom I have not written, that I have obtained a place. Brethren and sisters will please accept my thanks for their kind offers and words of sympathy.

C. H. Sweet.

I have removed from Millville, Mass., to Natick, R. I. Correspondents will please address me at the latter place. C. H. S.

Notice.

As I am intending to publish the new and enlarged edition of "Spiritual Melodies" in the first part of April, I hereby would notify those who are owing me for hymn books, that I shall need all there is due me to use in publishing. Please send to me at 167 Hanover Street, Boston, till April 15th. I. K. Lombard.

Notice.

As the piece of music entitled "Sweet by-and by" cannot be obtained in sheet form, I will send the book containing words and music, post-paid, for 35 cents. "The Pilgrim's Harp," 60 cts., post-paid. George E. Lee, Brimfield, Mass.

Notice.

Our conference at West Gardiner will be postponed until settled traveling. A. H. Walker.

OVER AND OVER AGAIN.

Over and over again
 No matter which way I turn,
I always find in the Book of Life
 Some lesson I have to learn.
I must take my turn at the mill;
 I must grind out the golden grain;
I must work at my task with a resolute will,
 Over and over again.

We cannot measure the need
 Of even the tiniest flower,
Nor check the glow of the golden sands
 That run through a single hour.
But the morning dews must fall,
 And the sun and the summer rain
Must do their part, and perform it all
 Over and over again.

Over and over again,
 The brook through the meadow flows;
And over and over again
 The ponderous mill-wheel goes.
Once doing will not suffice,
 Though doing be not in vain;
And a blessing, failing us once or twice,
 May come, if we try again.

The path that has once been trod,
 Is never so rough to the feet;
And the lesson we once have learned,
 Is never so hard to repeat.
Though sorrowful tears may fall,
 And the heart to its depth be driven
With storm and tempest, we need them all
 To render us meet for heaven.

EVENING HOURS.

BY

E. P. WOODWARD.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11:6.

WHO IS MISTAKEN?

The atonement was not the pre-eminent doctrine with the early Christians. The resurrection held that place. This was the "hope" for which Paul was judged—the hope that "there shall be a resurrection of the dead." He taught that their preaching and faith were vain if there be no resurrection.

I have mentioned one of the happy turns given to the death of Christ. Another, and no less honest one, was that which made his death lead to a triumphant argument for the resurrection. If Christ had risen, then there would be a rising of all, "both of the just and the unjust." His resurrection was held to be the earnest,—the "first-fruits" of the general resurrection.

With the believing Jews, the Messiah's reign—a visible and literal reign—was second in importance to the resurrection only. They were sure of it. So, TOO, WAS JESUS. The difference between himself and them on this point was, they believed he would set up his kingdom then, and he, that he must first pass through the gates of death. Soon after his death, however, they believed he had risen, and the effect of this was to renew their confidence in his kingdom. Confident were they that he would soon "reign in righteousness." Full of this confidence was Paul. He doubted not that "the end of the world has come;" though he did not think it to be quite as near as the Thessalonians did. Peter doubted not that "the end of all things is at hand." So, too, James, "that the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." And John adds, "We know it is the last time. And Christ did himself assign a very early date to his return. See Matt. 16: 28; 24: 34; Mark 9: 1; Luke 21: 32. * * * Yes, Jesus believed not only that the Jewish nation would within a few years be overwhelmed and scattered, but that "then" would his kingdom be set up, and "with power and great glory." The temple, Jerusalem and Judea did all meet their fate before the generation to which Jesus spake had passed away. But his kingdom has not yet been set up, nor have the signs appeared which were to precede it. * * * He lived and died the Messiah of the Jews; and not only did he believe, in common with his disciples, that he would return to earth, but it is somewhat probable that he also believed he would return to earth in no wider capacity than that in which he left it.—GERRIT SMITH, in The Religion of Reason, pp. 46–60.

Here we have the testimony of a man who has read the Bible, with at least no prejudice in favor of the truthfulness of its claims. And we can hardly decide which to consider the most strange, the fact that he can admit as much as he does in the extract above, and then deny the rest, or the fact that those who acknowledge the divine mission of Christ, can ignore, explain away, and even deny the facts by which he proved beyond all question that he was sent from God. Christian ministers say very little about the CENTRAL FACT of Bible history, and care little for the CENTRAL FACT of Bible prophecy,—without which facts Christianity becomes a mighty drama, thrilling us with its power, cheering us with its hopes, but soon to vanish, and leave us alone in the dim twilight of Nature's unending night, wandering on, groping for light, and life, and strength, and none to be had,—while around us are playing forces, mighty beyond our feeble strength, and subtle beyond our narrow wisdom,—forces which use us as playthings,—and in the distance we hear the murmuring surges of oblivion's waters, whither we are slowly and surely driven by an unseen, resistless power, there to lie beneath the chilling flood, and be forgotten:—is it any wonder, when Christ's ambassadors forget these facts, that his enemies should go further, and say he was mistaken?

The fact is, there is no honest way to avoid the conclusion that Christ and his apostles did expect his return at some period of time, to raise the dead, and reign over the whole earth; and also that this hope was based on the assumed FACT that he had been raised from the dead by the power of God. There is no way to dodge this. If language means anything, it means this. And although his followers may have little to say of their great hope, and have no words of rejoicing over the glorious fact on which those hopes rest, we will remember these facts, and keep our eyes fixed on the "hope." And though men may say Christ and his disciples were mistaken, though admitting they were honest, we know that if they were honest, they were not mistaken. We know that mistake was an impossibility. If Christ was raised, they told the truth; if he was not, they lied. And we can stake our all on that fact; and then calmly and confidently say with One who sealed his testimony with his blood, "If Christ be not raised, YOUR FAITH IS VAIN." And so, resting our faith on this unparalleled, incontrovertible fact, and by our faith reaching forward to the "glorious hope," we may become "rooted and grounded in love"; and by these three, faith, hope and love, we may come to "know the LOVE OF CHRIST, which passeth knowledge." And he, in his own time, will show a rebellious world that the mistake they been made by those who deny or ignore his claims.

For the World's Crisis.

JESUS OF NAZARETH.

What a remarkable life was that of our Savior while on earth! It was, and ever will be, unparalleled in purity, meekness, patience, and suffering. In contemplating the earth-history of this holy one, we are lost in wonder at his miraculous conception, and his lowly birth-place, which was none other than a manger where oxen fed. Nevertheless, on the very day of his birth he was pronounced by the angel who appeared unto the shepherds, "a Savior, which is Christ the Lord." In this same humble place, the "wise men," sent by Herod, the king, and guided by a star which went before them till it came and stood over where the child king lay, fell down and worshiped him, and opening their treasures, presented him with costly gifts. After their departure, in obedience to the command given by an angel of the Lord to Joseph in a dream, his parents fled with him into Egypt; while the wicked Herod, in his chagrin and anger at having his purpose to destroy the holy child thwarted, ordered that all the children in Bethlehem, from two years old and under, should be slain, thus causing lamentation and bitter weeping throughout the land. He doubtless thought the child Jesus would share the fate of the others.

According to the requirement of the law, Jesus was carried by his parents to Jerusalem, to be presented to the Lord, where he was taken in the arms of good old Simeon, who, being filled with the Holy Ghost, blessed God, and pronounced the child Jesus "a light to lighten the Gentiles, and the glory of thy people Israel." No wonder that Joseph and Mary "marvelled at those things which were spoken of him." For a short time thereafter Jesus remained in comparative obscurity; but when he was twelve years of age, he accompanied his parents to Jerusalem, to attend the yearly feast of the passover. On their return they missed him, for he tarried behind. After anxiously seeking him three days, they found him in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors asking them questions. Truly they must have been "amazed" at beholding him there in the midst of those savans, who, with "all that heard him, were astonished at his understanding and answers." But the meek, submissive Jesus, returned to the little town of Nazareth with his parents, "and was subject to them," thereby teaching all children a lesson of obedience to their parents.

About eighteen years afterwards, we find Jesus at the river Jordan, where he came from Nazareth to be baptized of John. As the holy Lamb of God came up out of the water, the heavens opened, and the Spirit of God like a dove descended upon him, while a voice is heard saying, "Thou art my beloved Son; in thee I am well pleased." O wondrous Prince of Peace! what need is there of further evidence that thou art the very Christ, the Son of the Living God! But, alas! dear Lamb of God, who taketh away the sin of the world, thou art doomed to a life of suffering. Persecuted even in thy infancy, thou hast now become "a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief." O blessed One, "who did no sin, neither was guile found in his mouth; who, when he was reviled, reviled not again; when he suffered, he threatened not; but committed himself to him that judgeth righteously."

We now follow him directly from this glorious manifestation of his divinity, which was witnessed at his baptism, into the wilderness, where he remained with the wild beasts, fasting forty days and nights, being tempted of the devil, who tried to induce Jesus to worship him; but Jesus answered, "Get the hence, Satan; for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve." "Then the devil leaveth him, and behold, angels came and ministered unto him." After this severe trial, Jesus returned to Nazareth, where he was brought up; entered the synagogue and began to teach the people, "and all bare him witness, and wondered at the gracious words which proceeded out of his mouth." But they of the synagogue were filled with wrath, and thrust him out of the city, and would have killed him, but he passing through their midst, went his way.

The first of Jesus' miracles was in Cana of Galilee, where he turned water to wine. He afterwards cast out devils, healed the sick of the palsy, and forgave his sins; cleansed the leper; to the timid woman, who thought if she could but touch the border of his garment, she should be healed, he said, "Daughter, be of good comfort, thy faith hath made thee whole. Go in peace." To another, who had an infirmity eighteen years, he said, laying his hands on her, "Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity," and immediately she was made straight and glorified God. To the impotent man, who had an infirmity thirty-eight years, he said, "Rise, take up thy bed and walk," and the man did so. He restored the withered hand, made the blind to see, the dumb to speak, the deaf to hear, the lame to walk. He at one time cleansed ten leprous men, who had besought him to have mercy on them, but out of them all only one "returned to give glory to God." Jesus healed Peter's wife's mother, and the centurion's servant. He never refused help to any who called upon him. He took our infirmities and bore our sicknesses. He fed the multitudes; walked on the sea in the night to save his disciples, saying, "Be of good cheer. It is I, be not afraid," and bade Peter come to him on the water. He stilled the waves of the sea of Galilee at the time of a great tempest. Well might the men marvel, and exclaim, "What manner of man is this, that even the winds and the sea obey him!"

Jesus noticed the poor. He said of one who cast into the treasury, "Of a truth I say unto you, that this poor widow hath cast in more than they all, for all these have of their abundance cast in unto the offerings of God, but she of her penury hath cast in all the living that she had. Could he say the same of any in our day, who cast into the Lord's treasury? Who among us casts in all our living?

This loving Jesus did not despise or neglect little children, but took them fondly in his arms and blessed them, saying, "Of such is the kingdom of heaven." He raised to life the little girl of the rich ruler, and also the only son of the widow of Nain. At the grave of another, "he cried with a loud voice, Lazarus, come forth, and he that was dead came forth, bound hand and foot with grave clothes, and his face bound about with a napkin. Jesus saith unto them, Loose him and let him go." It can truly be said of him, "He went about doing good." This seemed to be his mission. He came to seek and "save that which was lost." He told his disciples that he "came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Still the good deeds of this sinless being were evil spoken of. It was said of him that he cast out devils through Beelzebub, the prince of the devils. He was called a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber, a friend of publicans and sinners. He was "despised and rejected of men," and was esteemed "stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted." At one time he said, "The foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests; but the Son of man hath not where to lay his head." He was despised and set at naught in his own country; but he knew no revenge; he only wept over Jerusalem as he beheld it, and thought of its rejecting him, and of its downfall. His betrayer was one of his professed friends and followers. Judas well knew his Lord and Master was innocent of any crime, and yet for the paltry sum of "thirty pieces of silver," he sold him to those who sought his life, and was so lost to all sense of shame, as to betray "the Son of man with a kiss;" but afterwards, remorse for the awful deed seized upon him, and he "went out and hanged himself."

A little before his persecutors came to take him, we find Jesus alone in agonizing prayer in the garden of Gethsemane, sweating, as it were, great drops of blood, and saying, "O my Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me; nevertheless, not as I will, but as thou wilt." He is willing to do his Father's pleasure, ever though it cost him his life. Are there any such sons in the world now? Three times he went by himself alone in earnest prayer, and on each return found his disciples asleep. They felt not the Savior's agony. He asks, "What, could ye not watch with me one hour?" but immediately excuses them by saying, "The spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak." And while he yet spake, lo, Judas, one of the twelve, came, and with him a great multitude, with swords and staves from the chief priests and elders of the people." Now comes the saddest part of all. It seems not enough that he should have been betrayed by one of his disciples, but now "all the disciples forsook him and fled," even to Peter, that one who said, "Lord, I am ready to go with thee, both to prison and to death," and "Though I should die with thee, yet will not I deny thee." O how weak a thing is men's boasted strength! yet how many trust in it, forgetting it is vain, until they are pierced through with many sorrows, as was Peter, when he "went out and wept bitterly." Jesus was left in this trying hour without one friend to sympathize with him, and in addition to all his burden of sorrow, he had the pain of being forsaken and denied by those in whom he had trusted. He suffered alone. They took away his own raiment, and put upon him the scarlet robe and crown of thorns, spitting upon him, and mocking. At length there seems to be one who has some sense of justice and right. He wishes to release Jesus, and remonstrated with the mob, saying, "I find no fault in this man." But they prefer Barabbas, a notable prisoner and murderer, to the guileless Jesus, and cried out "Away with him, away with him, crucify him!" and after further insulting and mocking him, they crucified him, for "the voices of them and of the chief priests prevailed." By wicked hands, the "Savior of the world" is nailed to the shameful cross, between two thieves, as if he were as vile as they. It seems as if his cruel persecutors had sought out every way and means their evil minds could devise to insult and wound their innocent victim. Does Jesus retaliate, and threaten vengeance on those who so justly merit it? Nay, verily; but long-suffering, forgiving and merciful to the last—hear him pray—"Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do." Could anything be more touching than this prayer of the suffering Jesus for his murderers, while they are carrying out their fiendish purpose, and doing all in their power to augment his anguish? But, alas! the hardened hearts of those around the bleeding Savior remain unmoved; they continue to mock and deride, until the dear dying Lamb of God, with a loud voice cries, "Father, into thy hands I commend my spirit," and a dead Savior is presented to the gazing multitude. They cease reviling now for very fear, for, behold, the sun is darkened, the veil of the temple is rent in the midst, the earth quakes, the rocks rend, and the graves are opened. When the centurion and they that were with him beheld these things, "they feared greatly, saying, Truly, this was the Son of God." Well might they say it, for it was none other than he. Blessed be that Joseph, of Arimathea, who with Nicodemus took the dear body of Jesus, wrapped it in linen, and laid it in the new sepulchre that was in the garden. It is said of him, "he was a good man," and "waited for the kingdom of God."

This "Holy One" was not left in the grave, neither did his body "see corruption," but he rose again the third day, according to his promise. He appeared first to the two Mary's, who were early at the sepulchre on the morning of the first day of the week, and said to them, "Be not afraid; go tell my brethren, that they go into Galilee, and there shall they see me." O how favored, to be the bearers of such tidings from their risen Lord, to the sad, lonely ones, who "mourned and wept." Their words seemed as "idle tales" to these dejected ones; for "they believed them not." Jesus next appeared to two of his disciples, as they walked to Emmaus, "and they went and told it unto the residue," yet they would not believe. He afterwards appeared in their midst, and said, "Behold my hand and my feet, that it is I myself; handle me and see; for a spirit hath not flesh and bones, as ye see me have;" then their doubts were removed, and their hearts were filled with joy. Three times he showed himself unto his disciples, instructing them more perfectly in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God." Finally, he led them out to Bethany, and lifting up his hands blessed them, and "while he blessed them, he was parted from them and carried up into heaven," which will receive him "until the times of the restitution of all things, which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began." He has been away now nearly nineteen centuries, and ere another shall begin, we expect the great stone will smite the feet of the image, king Nebuchadnezzar saw, and become a great mountain, filling the whole earth, then will begin the reign of the Prince of Peace, and "the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea"

When our Savior was on earth, he prayed for his disciples thus: "Holy Father, keep through thine own name those whom thou hast given me, that they may be one as we are. . . . Neither pray I for these alone, but for them also which shall believe on me through their word." Jesus prays for us still. He is our Priest; not "after the order of Aaron, ... for it is evident that our Lord sprang out of Juda; of which tribe Moses spake nothing concerning priesthood." He is not a priest "after the law of a carnal commandment, but after the power of an endless life," for "The Lord sware and will not repent. Thou art a priest forever after the order of Melchizedec. . . . . Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him, seeing he ever liveth to make intercession for them." The man Christ Jesus is now "the one mediator between God and men." He "gave himself a ransom for all," and says, "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden light." Again he says, "Whosoever . . . . shall confess me before men, him will I confess also before my Father which is in heaven." Blessed Jesus, I love thee, and will confess thee. Help me to be good. S. R. GILMAN.

THE LORD WILL PROVIDE.

In some way or other the Lord will provide;
 It may not be my way,
 It may not be thy way;
 And yet in his own way,
 "The Lord will provide."

At some time or other the Lord will provide;
 It may not be my time,
 It may not be thy time;
 And yet in his own time,
 "The Lord will provide."

Despond then no longer, the Lord will provide;
 And this be the token—
 No word he hath spoken
 Was ever yet broken—
 "The Lord will provide."

March on then right boldly, the sea shall divide;
 Thy pathway made glorious,
 With shoutings victorious,
 We'll join in the chorus,
 "The Lord will provide!"

BEARING THE CROSS.

To this world we must become crucified. Crucifixion is a hard death; but very few persons are willing to die such a death; but this is the only way of entering the kingdom of God. We must be "crucified unto the world, and the world unto us." Some professed christians have made a covenant with the world, not to part with it; and Satan satisfies them that speaking in meeting sometimes, and giving a little something to support the gospel, they may keep good their hold on the world. But "if any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."—1 John 2: 15.

If you would bear your cross, remember, every trial of your life, whether spiritual or temporal, from friends or enemies, great or small, or whatever be the character of it, is by the appointment of our heavenly Father, who willeth not the death of the sinner, but who is seeking by trials to crucify you unto the world, and fit you for a home in glory.

What is it to bear the cross? It is to suffer all the trials, of which we have spoken, patiently. You are not to indulge in fretfulness under it. If you do, you do not bear the cross. And although you may speak like an angel in meeting, yet if you fret and complain under the trials of life, by which the Lord is seeking to crucify you unto the world, it is no use for you to talk about your bearing the cross; you are but deceiving your own soul. God hath said, "All things work together for good to them that love God."—Rom. 8: 28.

Said the Savior, "In your patience possess ye your souls." We are not to pray for the cross to be removed, but pray for grace to endure every trial; for submission to the will of God. We may say, If God had taken any other means to try me, any other cup but this one, I might have endured it with better fortitude. The Lord knows full well what we best need; the cup he provides for us is just the one we need most. The affliction is so heavy, and the trial so severe sometimes, we think it is impossible to bear it. But hark! "My grace is sufficient for thee." If we knew as much now as we shall hereafter, we should praise God for every trial and every cross we have to bear.

The apostle James says: "My brethren, count it all joy [the world count it all sorrow] when ye fall into divers temptations, knowing this, that the trying of your faith worketh patience. But let patience have her perfect work."—James 1: 2, 3. By faith we praise God now, while in the furnace of trial.

As an example of bearing the cross, see the Lord Jesus Christ, who became poor; was despised of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; endured reproach; resisted temptation; when he was reviled, reviled not again; murmured not, though wounded, bruised, put to death, his soul made an offering for sin; scourged, spit upon; his hands and feet pierced with nails; his soul in agony;—all this he bore, and no lisp of impatience ever escaped him. Would you be crucified unto the world? Go and learn of him. Contemplate his poverty, his life, his sufferings, his patience, his forgiving spirit. Think of these things, and then realize this truth—"If so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together."—Rom. 8: 17.

Let us be patient in all things, at all times: this is bearing the cross daily; and "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."

Fair Haven, Ct. J. E. CLARK.

ENCOURAGING WORDS.

"Be not afraid, only believe."—MARK 5: 36.

These are the words of Jesus. Have you been afraid that you might fall out by the way, or that you might be left to fall into sin, and bring reproach upon the cause of Christ, and ruin upon yourself? You would doubtless do so if left to yourself. But Jesus says, "I will never leave, nor forsake thee." "Lo I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world." "Be not afraid, only believe." You will not be left to yourself, unless you trust in yourself.

As long as you trust in Jesus, you are safe. But some are afraid they will be left to suffer for want of temporal things. Learn a lesson from the little child. Ask him if he is afraid he shall suffer for want of food or clothing? How quick the answer comes, "my father will take care of me." If our children have such confidence in us, surely we ought to have confidence in our Father who is in heaven. The birds of the air, and even the grass of the field, and the very hairs of our head are all numbered. Then cast your care upon him, for "He careth for you. He has brought us safely thus far, and we can say, "hitherto the Lord hath helped us." "Be not afraid, only believe."

PRAYER OF THE CHURCH.

O, Lord God of all grace, mercy and truth, thou who inhabitest eternity and dost constantly look down upon the children of men, and take cognizance of all their actions, look in mercy on us as a people, and help us in our extremity. We believe this church is one planted by thine own right hand, and we pray that thou wouldst therefore water it, and cause it to flourish.

We need not tell thee, O Lord, what our extremity is, for thou knowest it altogether. Thou knowest we agreed to pay thy servant, our minister, so much money for preaching thy gospel unto us, and that we have not been able to do it. Therefore, we pray thee, help us. Last year we raised the price of the seats in thy house, hoping thereby to avoid the unpleasant necessity of having a festival, which most of us deprecate. But, after the price was raised, some bought only half a slip, so that our expectations were not realized. And this year, rather than resort to a festival, some of the more liberal and able ones offered quite liberal extras to make up the deficiency, but failed to get the necessary amount. Now, Lord, under these circumstances, what can we do? Is not a festival our only resort? We pray that thou mayst see it in this light, so that thou canst sanction our doings, and sanctioning help us. It has been raining for several days, and it is getting very muddy, so that unless thou shalt order a change before to-morrow night, but few will be able to attend. And then if we should have to postpone on account of the weather, our turkies and oysters may not keep, especially the oysters. So thou seest our dilemma. Thy servant may fail of getting his dues, unless some of the more wealthy brethren pay from their own pockets. We therefore pray thee to overrule the weather for the best good of the festival, so that many shall come from the east and the west, the north and the south, that our present deficiency shall be met, and enough more received for a similar deficiency next year. Then we shall escape the painful necessity of having another festival.

Some are telling us that, if these three little churches in this village would only unite and become one, our burdens would be much lighter, and we should have no occasion for festivals. This we know full well, O Lord, but how shall it be done? We know our Savior did pray that we might all be one as he and the Father are one. But what can we do to bring about so desirable an end? Thou would'st not have us become Congregationalists, and so endorse that very dangerous and evil doctrine of "once in grace always in grace," which doctrine we believe has shipwrecked thousands of souls. Nor do we believe thou would'st have us become Baptists, who not only hold to the just-named doctrine, but also exclude from the table of the Lord all who have not been immersed and joined them. We believe all thy children who have been sprinkled or immersed, and have joined any evangelical church, are entitled to a place at thy table. Notwithstanding the errors of these churches, we cannot deny that we have in some way acknowledged them to be churches of thine own planting. Ministers have acknowledged it by their exchange of pulpits, Sunday Schools by their union pic-nics, and the church by a very few union prayer-meetings. Now, if thou hast planted them, as we acknowledge, who dare pull them up? If the errors of these two neighboring churches could be rooted out, and they become of our order, nothing could more rejoice our hearts. If thou, O Lord, hast any plan for the accomplishment of so desirable an end, we pray thee reveal it to us.

Some strenuously claim, O Lord, that, even on the ground of economy, it is best to have three churches in this little village, notwithstanding the prayer of Christ that we all might be one. They claim that some sinners may thus be reached who otherwise could not be. If it be best, O Lord, thus to remain separate, as some believe, we pray that nothing may transpire to unite us. But if, on the other hand, it is best to be united, according to the prayer of our Lord, we pray that the means to that end may be speedily used. But until then, we pray thee to grant us favorable weather for festivals, so that we may not wrong our minister, thy servant, in his wages. Amen.

WHAT PROFIT.

"For what will it profit a man, if he shall gain the whole world and lose his own soul?"

Reader, do we ever think of this passage of Scripture as we ought to think of it? Have we secured our soul's salvation? or are our minds so much absorbed in the things of this life, so intent on making money, and gaining worldly fame and honor, that we find no time to think of this all important subject, the salvation of our own souls?

Now it is right for us to be industrious, for God has said man shall earn his bread by the sweat of his brow; and again he says man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God; and Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all other necessary things shall be added unto you.

But how many are saying in their own heart, I will seek first to accumulate all the wealth that I can, and gain fame and honor, and then after I have done all this, I will have plenty of time to seek my soul's salvation. Ah! my friend, you do not know that you will have plenty of time then; you may not live to accomplish all these great things; and if you should, you may not feel like coming to the Savior then, any more than you do now, nor half as much. "My Spirit will not always strive," saith the Lord. And would you, my friend, insult the Lord by indulging in sin and wickedness all the best part of your life, and when you get to be old and feeble, say, "Here, Lord, I have enjoyed myself all I want to; I have gained worldly fame and honor. Now I am old and feeble, and not good for much, so you may have the rest of my life."

Do you think the Lord wants such conversions as that? My impenitent friend, he wanted you to give your heart to him in your young days, while you will have time to work for him. O how much more noble it is to give our hearts to the Savior first, and be satisfied with just what earthly blessings he sees fit to bestow upon us. For what will it profit us if we shall gain the whole world, and lose our own souls?

O what an important subject is this! Dear sinner, can you say with an honest heart that your soul is at rest? Do you not at times, when you come down to your sober moments, think—O this unrest in my soul? I have worldly prosperity attending me all the time. I have enough for this life, but still I am not satisfied, for what have I for the life to come? Nothing at all; no hope for my soul. Ere long, at the longest, I must die and leave it all, and then how poor I shall be without Christ. O what will it profit me if I shall gain the whole world and lose my own soul?

I beseech you, dear sinner, to attend to your soul's salvation first of all. Religion is a precious treasure to have in our hearts; it sweetens all our pleasures; it makes us feel that we are safe resting in Christ; and if our worldly possessions should all be taken from us (for we are not sure of anything in this life), yet our possessions in the life to come are secure—forever ours.

What a beautiful thought that we can have such great possessions without money and without price. Let us be wise and seek these great possessions offered to us so freely, remembering that it will profit us nothing if we shall gain the whole world and lose our own souls. M. E. CHUTE.

"SUCH AS I HAVE, GIVE I THEE." Acts 3: 6.

We can give only what we have received. We must be true ourselves, if we would teach the truth to others. God can make us true. No man is perfect by nature, for all men inherit from Adam a depraved nature. This evil heart of unbelief must be taken away, and a new heart, full of love and faith be put in its place.

I find the following verses, which are copied without the author's name, but they express so completely what I wish to say, that I will insert them here:

"Thou must be true thyself,
 If thou the truth wouldst teach;
Thy heart must overflow, if thou
 Another's heart wouldst reach;
It needs the overflow of soul
 To give the lips free speech.

Think truly, and thy thoughts
 Shall the world's famine feed;
Speak truly, and each word of thine
 Shall be a fruitful seed;
Live truly, and thy life shall be
 A great and noble creed."

The best of us are but "earthen vessels"; yet we all may have a "treasure," and such as we have we may give. God has given to every man a measure of faith. And by that faith we may benefit others, and thereby be blest in return. O, for more of that spirit of faith and love which will not "pass by on the other side," but will rather seek to reclaim and restore our fellow men.

DAMP BEDS.

BRO. GRANT:—I feel a little delicate about writing this piece for the Crisis, but I really feel it a duty; so I will not stop to confer with flesh and blood, but will out with it.

To all whom it may concern: Do not put our poor preaching brethren in cold, damp beds to sleep. Many of them leave their happy, humble homes, and ride miles in the cold and snow to preach the word of the Lord to us; and perhaps some of them preach three times in one day, and get all in a state of perspiration, being so in earnest, then we invite them home with us to stay all night, and we give them our best beds, and forget that no one has slept in them for weeks. The bed is cold and damp, and the man of God goes to bed not to sleep, but to shiver all night. And what is the result? Why a severe cold, perhaps fever, or a lung difficulty comes on, and a long fit of sickness. None of us meant to do this, only we did not think. May the Lord help us to think and act, and warm and air and dry our spare beds, that become damp, and so do good as we have opportunity, and not have our poor brethren get their death cold. We need all our preaching brethren in the field yet. May the Lord help us all to do right, is the prayer of your Sister in Christ. C.

— Understandings are almost always misunderstandings. Therefore, it is wise and prudent to leave nothing to be imagined, or inferred, or supposed, but have everything expressed plainly. Human reason is very imperfect; memory is not infallible, and the best friends are often separated because one understood the thing one way and the other another.

— Books are masters who instruct us without rods and ferrules, without words of anger, without bread or money. If you approach them they are not asleep; if you seek them they do not hide; if you blunder, they do not scold; if you are ignorant they do not laugh at you.

— There is a thread in our thoughts as there is a pulse in our heart: he who can hold the one, knows how to think; and he who can move the other, knows how to feel.

— Men's lifes should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or like the summer, aglow with promise, and the autumn, rich with the golden sheaves, where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

— The man who, whether in his habits or his actions, in great things or in small, separates himself from his friends, seems to set every evil and envious feeling of our nature in array against him. Distinction is purchased at the expense of sympathy.

— There is no sin we can be tempted to commit, but we shall find a greater satisfaction in resisting than in committing.

— Hard councils avail but little; they are like the hammer which always recoils from the anvil.

— You can no more exercise your reason if you live in constant dread of ridicule, than you can enjoy your life if you live in constant fear of death.

— Engage not hastily, as a party, in a difference between others, but reserve thyself impartial and unengaged, that thou mayst moderate between them.

— Truth is immortal; the sword cannot pierce it, fire cannot consume it, prisons cannot incarcerate it, famine cannot starve it.

— Every object has so many different sides that we should always examine, never dispute.

— The abundance of a miser is but poverty to him.

— Many men are led by the fear they have of being led.

— Cleanliness is the elegance of the poor.

TO DRY UMBRELLAS.—I obtained this item years ago from a friend who was an umbrella manufacturer. Most people dry their umbrellas handle upward. This concentrates the moisture at the top where it is close, rusts the wire which secures the stretches, and rots the cloth. It is better, after the umbrella is drained, to simply invert it, and dry in that position. This is better than spreading it to dry.

FOR TATTLERS.—Some folks are prodigiously penitent over other people's sins, and seem to think they have a special call to confess them before the whole world. They would gouge their brother's eyes out rather than leave a single mote in them. At the same time they are singularly blind to their own failings.

CHILDREN'S ARMS AND LEGS.

Nude arms are the means of the premature deaths of many of the little innocents. We often see these little mites, the darlings of their parents, with thick, substantial clothing about the body, mufflers around the throat, and caps on their heads, with their arms bare to their elbows, and their legs in a similar condition nearly up to their knees.—These extremities of a child, in which the blood is never of so high a temperature as it is in the adult, and in which it is of the greatest importance that it should be kept in a circulating medium, ought to be warmly clad. Every parent, and especially every mother, should see that the clothing of a child comes down to the wrists upon the arms, and to the feet upon the legs. It may be fashionable, it may be gratifying to the mother's vanity and to the father's pride, to see the clear skin of their children; but it is often death to the children. Every practising physician could tell a tale upon this subject that should make the ears of all such indiscreet parents to tingle.

A distinguished English physician, who had practised forty years, stated that he believed he had known several thousands of children brought to an untimely grave by going with their arms and legs naked; and a distinguished physician who died some years since in Paris, declared, "I believe that during the twenty-six years I have practised my profession in this city, twenty thousand children have been carried to the cemeteries a sacrifice to the absurd custom of exposing the arms naked." As lovers of children, we warn parents against adopting such a deleterious custom.

Many have wondered why so many children die. We wonder that any live. Soon after birth they are crammed with food, dosed with medicine, and steamed with bed-clothes and stoves; then they are sent out in cold weather, clothed warmly upon all parts of the body, except where the clothing is the most needed. Their legs, arms, and necks are bare, and thus are they exposed to a temperature that makes a strong man shudder, though gloved, overcoated, stockinged and booted. But we want to harden the children; yes, and soon you find they are gone.

Put the bulb of a thermometer in a baby's mouth, and the mercury will rise to ninety degrees. Now carry the same to its little hand; if the arms be bare, and the evening cool, the mercury will sink to forty degrees. Of course all the blood which flows through those arms must fall to within thirty to forty degrees below the temperature of the heart. Need we say, when these currents of blood flow back into the chest, the child's vitality must be more or less compromised? And need we add that we ought not to be surprised at its frequent recurring affections of the tongue, throat, or stomach? Many children, with habitual cough and hoarseness, or choking with mucus, have been entirely or permanently relieved by simply keeping their arms and hands warm. Every observing and progressing physician has daily opportunity to witness the same cure.—Good Health.

EXPANSION OF THE LUNGS.

To prevent consumption has been the laudable endeavor of many scientific physicians, as well as many quacks. That more can be done to ward off this fell destroyer is beyond a doubt, than can be effected to cure the malady when fixed.

Our object in referring to this disease now is, not to repeat or lay before our readers all the hygienic means that may be used in such cases, for they are legion; but simply to call attention to a single one that may be useful in preserving the lungs in a healthy state. It is simply expanding them. Consumptives are usually narrow-chested. Asthmatics are usually broad-chested, and become so very much from the difficulty they have in breathing when attacked with asthma. Hence, asthmatic persons are seldom the victims of consumption.

Many inventions have been sought out for expanding the lungs; but the following simple means will accomplish the work as well as it can be possibly done. Go into the air, stand erect, throw back the head and shoulders, and draw the air through the nostrils into the lungs as much as possible. After having thus filled the lungs, raise your arms, still extended, and suck in the air. When you have thus forced the arms backward, with the chest open, change the process by which you drew in your breath, till the lungs are emptied. Go through this process several times a day, and it will enlarge the chest, give the lungs better play, and serve very much to ward off consumption.

If the lungs are tender, or blood-vessels weak, due care must be used, at first, not to overstrain them.—Ibid.

CUTTING TEETH.

Children who are cutting teeth should have the clothing distributed evenly over the body, not having too much about the waist and always having the arms, legs and feet well covered. The food should be very plain, consisting simply of unleavened Graham bread and milk or Graham gruel, or oatmeal gruel, or something as bland and nutritious as these articles. Three or four times in twenty-four hours is as often as any child should take food who is old enough to be cutting teeth. The child should live in the open air as much as the weather will admit, should have its regular sleep, and be free from all influences which tend to irritate the nervous system. If children are thus treated, in no more than one case in a thousand will there be any necessity for scarifying the gums. I don't say but the necessity may sometimes occur. In such case be sure to ask the advice of some physician of age and experience who is at hand to examine the patient.

"TELL JESUS."

Go to Jesus, child of sorrow,
 Kneel, and watch, and humbly pray;
Sin hath brought a darkened morrow
 To thy brightly opened day.
Dry those fastly flowing tears,
 That no mortal eye doth see;
Throw aside all worldly fears,
 Jesus died and bled for thee.

Ere the weary day is past,
 And the evening shadows fall;
At the cross thy burdens cast,
 Jesus will receive them all.
With the morning's earliest breath,
 Bow the head, and bend the knee;
From the toils of sin and death,
 Jesus stands to set thee free.

When the day's long tasks are done,
 And its cares and toils are o'er;
Count thy errors, one by one,
 Then arise, and sin no more.
O'er the tide of human woe,
 Beams the eastern star for thee;
Turn thy gaze from all below
 To the cross of Calvary.

SALVATION OF THE SPIRIT.

Those who advocate the doctrine of the salvation of the spirit of man, independent of the body, frequently quote 1 Cor. 5: 5,—"To deliver such an one unto Satan for the destruction of the flesh, that the spirit may be saved in the day of the Lord Jesus." Let us briefly examine the text, and learn its true sentiment.

1. The advocates of the salvation of a spirit entity in man, at death, separate from the body, cannot aid their cause by quoting this text; for, instead of supporting their theology, it proves too much for them, if it proves anything concerning the destiny of a disembodied spirit; for the spirit here spoken of, instead of being saved at death, is not to be saved till "the day of the Lord Jesus;" and when that day arrives, spirit and body will be united as really as now, as they themselves also believe, even if the spirit had existed between death and the resurrection in a conscious state. So this text does not prove the salvation of the spirit out of the body.

2. "The destruction of the flesh" here referred to, indicates a reformatory chastisement of some kind, to ultimately lead to the salvation of the person,—not to the damnation of the body, and the salvation of the spirit without the body; and in order to this chastisement, this person, like Job, was to be delivered over to Satan for the infliction of some physical disease. "Destruction," from the Greek term olethron, is a correct rendering, but does not indicate the modus operandi, whether by pining sickness, leprosy, Job's boils, or some other scourge. The apostles certainly possessed power to deliver men over to a state of chastisement for their sins, that they might be made sensible of their folly, and be induced to reform, as in the case of Hymeneus and Alexander, whom Paul "delivered unto Satan, that they might learn not to blaspheme" (1 Tim. 1: 20), as in the case of Elymas, whom Paul made "blind" for a year (Acts 13: 8, 12); and they also had power to inflict death, as in case of Ananias. But in this instance, Paul being unable to be present in person, and only present in spirit, delegates this apostolic power to the Corinthian church, and bids them, in his stead, to deliver this person over for "the destruction of the flesh," that the might thereby be brought to repentance, and finally be "saved."

3. "That the spirit may be saved." The term "spirit" is doubtless here used as a synonym of person, in which sense it is sometimes used, as in 1 John 4: 1,—"Believe not every spirit, . . . because many false prophets are gone out into the world." Here the term refers to persons. And this use of the term is applicable to the resurrected saints, who are to be raised with spiritual bodies; for, in speaking of Christ in his resurrected state, it is expressly affirmed that he was "made a quickening spirit" (1 Cor. 15: 45), though, unlike an angelic spirit, he had "flesh and bones" (Luke 24: 39); and it is also declared that we shall "bear the image of the heavenly;" so we are to be "saved in the day of the Lord Jesus" as personal spirits, with spiritual bodies, but not as bodiless spirits. The salvation here promised is not to be realized independent of the body, for (1) it is not to be experienced till "the day of the Lord Jesus," and that is the time when the body will be saved, and when body and spirit will be united; and (2) that is the time when the spirit body will be saved, but not a spirit without a body; and if a whole man is to be saved at that time, a part cannot be saved separately.

Wm. Sheldon.

The christian is commanded to "pray without ceasing." He cannot always be engaged in the positive act, but he should have what I call a holy aptitude for prayer. The bird is not always on the wing, but he is ready to fly in an instant; so the believer is not always on the wing of prayer, but he has such a gracious aptitude for this exercise, that he is prepared in a moment, when in need or danger, to fly for refuge to his God.—R. Hill.

THE CONQUEROR'S REWARD.

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Rev. 3: 21.

Surpassing honor! amazing dignity! incredible exaltation! And yet it is strictly true. It is neither to be "spiritualized" nor explained away as meaning something not literally represented by the words. "The Truth" says it, and he will do it. It is the great Conqueror's promise to those who conquer by and for him; the Chief Victor's reward to the victors that follow in his steps, and exhibit his spirit, and fight his battles, and remain steadfast to his truth amidst the whirlwind of opposition which loyalty to the coming King occasions in an unholy world, the language of whose heart is, "We will not have this man to reign over us." And what a reward it is! No king of earth ever bestowed such honor upon his favorite.

No poetic flight of imagination ever placed classic hero upon such a lofty seat of empire.

Look at it, as steadily as its dazzling grandeur will permit, ye who daily groan being burdened with the infirmities of the mortal state; ye who are sometimes half-tempted to give up all in despair because of the difficulties of the conflict, and the severity of the discipline; ye who experience the pain of being suspected, shunned, and evil spoken of by fellow christians, because the tradition of the elders and the theology of the schools are nothing to you if the Holy Scriptures have taught you something higher, nobler, more glorious and God-like; ye who are oppressed with a sense of your utter unworthiness to bear the name of the glorious occupant of Jehovah's throne; and ye who are bewildered by the miserable heartlessness in Christ's service of thousands who call him Lord, and the utter failure of all religious organizations, not only to establish righteousness in the earth, but also to prevent the voice of truth from being silenced in many places where she has a nominal home, by the din of militant theologians, the champions of rival creeds, and the defiant shouts of the goliaths of unbelief. Yes, look at it until the magnificent reality fill the field of vision, and the surpassing love of the royal Promiser compel you to fall at his feet in wonder and worship, and to determine, then and there, that you will conquer for his dear sake—throne or no throne the issue, just as he pleases! Let the text interpret itself. It needs no illumination from men. Surely it is bright enough to satisfy the loftiest aspiration without any word-painting of ours. The Lord means just what he says; and we do not think he feels at all indebted to us for making him in a thousand instances—in our great wisdom—mean what he does not say.

The very thought of being enthroned with Christ, "the King of kings," when he ascends his own glorious throne in the coming kingdom, is enough, and more than enough, to stir a christian man's heart to its very depth, and to nerve him with holy heroism amidst the severest trials and sorrows of this preliminary life. The shadowy, flimsy, intangible heaven of common theology is surely a self-condemned absurdity; but the inspired representation of the resurrection-life of the christian "conqueror" gives us something real, substantial, grand, with which the sanctified mind can fully sympathise—work, space, position of which we can form a distinct idea, while all has the unutterably precious commendation of being holy and permanent, and of being flooded with the glory of the Chief Conqueror's presence. He who ascended to the Father in his perfect humanity, will so come as he went—the blessed, beloved, glorious Jesus; and when he sets in order the affairs of his great kingdom, the overcomers for his sake shall have dominion with and under him, and "reign on the earth." Be glad, then, ye patient sufferers for Christ and conscience; hold on; be faithful; fear not. Your reward is great. "If we suffer, we shall also reign with him."

That God should elect the kings and princes of the "world to come" from among some of the sons of men whom, by grace, he has already made sons of God and co-heirs with Christ, is very wonderful, and calls for special adoration and praise; but it is, after all, only in harmony with his revealed character, and his eternal purpose to glorify the Redeemer with a peculiar and transcendent glory. Every available tribute to his unequalled worth and work is not only right and proper in itself, but is also a public recognition of the services he has rendered to the moral universe. Of his followers, then, some are being qualified by peculiar discipline for the principalities and royalties of the predetermined kingdom and dominion. Daring all for Christ, they shall reign with Christ. Faithful in a few things, they shall be made rulers over many things. Bold to confess the rejected one in the face of all opposition, by him they shall be confessed before his Father and the holy angels, when he ascends the throne of the empire that awaits him. The high qualities of holiness, fidelity, self-denial, zeal, wisdom, and moral courage in which they are trained by the Spirit of Christ, will find ample field for exercise in the grand future; and the immortality they derive from their risen Lord will sustain them without weariness in the discharge of their princely functions. They are now at school, and if they knew what God intends by the trying tasks he sets them, they would neither murmur nor grow impatient. Every privation has its meaning; every trial, its import; every bereavement, its lesson; every disappointment, its significance; every storm, its interpretation; and every cross, its result in the world to come. The Father has no pleasure in any one of these things for its own sake. To put his little ones in pain is no joy to him. If it were possible to make them fit for what he means them to be, and do, and enjoy, without the rough but most salutary school of personal experience, into that school he would not send them; but to take a beggar from the dunghill and set him with the princes of God is not the work of a moment. Such rapid transitions are not according to the mode of working which the Allwise has adopted. A man called from sin, pollution, ignorance, shame, and degradation, with the purpose on God's part to make him a king—not in name, but in truth and in glorious reality—must have much done in him and for him before he can possibly be fit to enter on such a high office. He must be pardoned, justified, adopted, cleansed, educated.

Men are trained for the trades and professions of the present life, and the training in each case has, of course, strict respect to the trade or profession which the individual intends to follow. This is simply the dictate of common sense. The necessity of adaptation is its essence; and the recognition of this necessity is intuitive. Men do not reason on such a subject: the true common sense, logical sequence of the premise is reached in a moment. But shall that universally recognised necessity in the affairs of threescore years and ten be ignored as unnecessary in the immeasurably higher affairs of a millenium? "Not a novice" is one of the laws in relation to the christian ministry; shall its principle be dispensed with in relation to the co-assessors of the Son of man during the thousand years of righteous judgment? O that christian men would think in the light of revelation!

Another word, not by way of exposition, for that we have already disclaimed in this paper, but of suggestion. "To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne." Who speaks? He who, though he is Lord of all, had not where to lay his head; he who, though he is the Father's beloved, was despised and rejected of men; he who, though he is the dispenser of the water of life to all who shall live forever, asked a draught of water from the woman of Samaria; and he who, though he is worshiped by the angels of God, had a couple of wretched thieves as his companions in a shameful death. This is he who distributes thrones, and assigns to the conquerors their different ranks in the royalty of heaven. Now mark the lesson; it will richly repay the thought it demands. Follow Christ, in the life of faith, through humility, and patience, and reproach, and rejection, and death; and when he comes he will give you honor and glory, and immortality. Follow Christ in the spirit of earnest, thorough consecration, and the day of his revelation will be the day of your recognition. Follow Christ, with the settled conviction that the trials of the present are, in reality, tests of the qualifications that will be necessary for high post-resurrection office; and when he chooses the high officers of his kingdom he will say, "Sit with me in my throne."—The Rainbow.

SEEK THE LORD.

"Seek ye the Lord while he may be found, call ye upon him while he is near."—Isa. 55: 6.

There is a time in every one's life when the Lord calls them to seek him; when he comes to the door of each one's heart and knocks for admittance; and, reader, did you at that time open the door of your heart, and say, Yes, my dear Savior, come in; I bid you welcome? O how gentle were his knockings, how sweet the precious words he whispered to your hardened conscience. "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest, take my yoke upon you, and learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart," "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Did you listen to that still small voice, and take his easy yoke upon you, and learn of him? Did you call upon him while he was near? or did you listen to the other voice—that wicked voice of Satan, that was speaking to you at the same time, and telling you to say, Lord, "go thy way for this time; when I have a more convenient season, I will call for thee?" You did not say those cruel, wicked words to the Savior, did you, after he had borne the cross of shame and suffering, and shed his precious blood to save you? Follow him in your imagination to Calvary; see him nailed to the accursed tree, bleeding, groaning, dying, for your sins. See the look of agony in his countenance, and at the same time the look of love and pity as he says (by this act), Sinner, I shed my blood for you, that you may live.

O, did you reject such a dear loving Savior as this? If so, did you think, perhaps this is the last time the Lord will call for me? What a dreadful thought. You know God has said in his own word, My Spirit will not always strive. I hope it was not the last time. God grant to call for you once more; and, dear sinner, I plead with you to listen to that still small voice, and say,

"O Savior, I come to thee,
 Just as I am, without one plea,
 But that thy blood was shed for me."

Perhaps there may be some who read this with whom the Lord's Spirit is striving now. To such I would say, Seek ye the Lord now, while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near. "Now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Do not put it off until another day, for then it may be too late. You may be called away before another day shall dawn.

It may be with you as with the young man, who, a few weeks ago, started in business for himself, with bright hopes for the future in this life; but, alas! no hope for the life to come. He little dreamed that death was approaching so near; that it would come so suddenly upon him; but in a few days after he had commenced business, sickness came, and in a few days more death snatched him away with no hope beyond this life.

What a solemn thought! O sinner, God grant that this may not be your doom; for what excuse would you make in that last great day, when you will stand before the tribunal bar of God, to be judged? Will you say, Lord, I thought there was time enough to seek my soul's salvation; I thought I would wait until you called the next time? He will say, I called for you the last time, and you neglected my call. Now I say unto you, I know you not, depart from me, ye cursed. Sinner, let not this dreadful sentence be pronounced upon you, but "seek ye the Lord now, while he may be found; call ye upon him while he is near."

SUBMISSION.

When my heart is sad and weary,
 And trials press me down;
When it seems no friend is near me,
 And the world doth on me frown;
Let me feel the blessed witness
 To calm each rising fear,
And thy ever faithful promise,
 To reanimate and cheer.

O, give me true submission,
 And still my heart incline,
By faith and humble meekness,
 To trust a hand divine.
May Jesus' love constrain me
 To walk the narrow way,
Which points the weary pilgrim
 To realms of endless day.

The night's been long and dreary
 Since we had hoped to see
The King in all his beauty,
 To set his people free;
Yet, Lord, thou wilt remember,
 Nor let our hope be vain,
For, sure as earth's foundation,
 Thy promise will remain.

FACTS versus THEORIES.—No. 1.

Stubborn things they are, and a great many theories have been utterly spoiled and brought to shame and confusion by a simple array of facts in the case.

SAMPLES.

According to Paul (1 Tim. 1: 8, 11), it is a fact (1) that the law is good if a man use it lawfully; and that the end of the commandment is charity, out of a pure heart and of a good conscience, and of faith unfeigned;—"From which some having swerved have turned aside unto vain jangling; desiring to be teachers of the law; understanding neither what they say, nor whereof they affirm. But we know that the law is good, if a man use it lawfully."

(2). "Knowing this, that the law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient, for the ungodly and for sinners, for unholy and profane, for murderers of fathers and murderers of mothers, for manslayers, for whoremongers, for them that defile themselves with mankind, for men-stealers, for liars, for perjured persons, and if there be any other thing that is contrary to sound doctrine; according to the glorious gospel of the blessed God, which was committed to my trust."—1 Tim. 1: 9–11.

(3). "For as many as are of the works of the law are under the curse; for it is written, Cursed is every one that continueth not in all things which are written in the book of the law to do them. But that no man is justified by the law in the sight of God is evident; for, The just shall live by faith. And the law is not of faith; but, The man that doeth them shall live in them. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us; for it is written, Cursed is every one that hangeth on a tree; that the blessing of Abraham might come on the Gentiles through Jesus Christ; that we might receive the promise of the Spirit through faith."—Gal. 3: 10–14.

(4). "Tell me, ye that desire to be under the law, do ye not hear the law? For it is written, that Abraham had two sons, the one by a bondmaid, the other by a free woman. But he who was of the bondwoman was born after the flesh; but he of the free woman was by promise [i. e., by the Spirit]. Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage, which is Agar. For this Agar is Mount Sinai in Arabia, and answereth to Jerusalem which now is, and is in bondage with her children."—Gal. 4: 21–25.

(5). That inasmuch as this whole law question turns on a single pivotal point, viz: which did Christ abolish; the law of commandments, or of works? and whereas some men (and these described in 1 Tim. 1: 7, as above cited) do affirm that it was the law of works or ordinances, and not the commandments written and engraven in stones; therefore know ye and understand (6), that Paul says to all such—"You neither know what you say, nor whereof you affirm."

(7). That the law, by which some desire to return, was one that gendered to bondage (or death), and was the old covenant or law given on Mount Sinai (Ex. chaps. 19 and 20, also Deut. 5: 6–21), in which the decalogue is recapitulated, concerning which Moses says, "The Lord our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. The Lord made not this covenant with our fathers [Abraham, Isaac and Jacob], but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day."

Proof. Deut. 29: 13: "That he may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself, and that he may be unto thee a God, as he hath said unto thee, and as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob." He made the covenant of promise to Abraham four hundred and thirty years before the giving of the Sinaitic covenant. See Gal. 3: 17; Gen. 12: 3, 7; 17: 7. Having read this decalogue covenant to the people, Moses adds: "These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more: and he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me." Also 9: 5. "Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart, dost thou go to possess their land; but for the wickedness of these nations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that he may perform the word which the Lord sware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob."

Concerning the fourth commandment, Moses says in Deut. 5: 15,—"And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm; therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the Sabbath day."

From this fifth chapter Moses rehearses God's dealings with them, and reprimands them for a non-observance of the terms of the covenant, and admonishes them as to the future, until he reaches chapter 12, where he begins to rehearse the terms of the superadded ordinances, which Paul in Eph. 2: 15 likens to a vessel which contained this "law of commandments"; and these ordinances were designed only to elucidate and enforce the decalogue. This rehearsal is continued to chap. 26: 16–19, where Moses obligates the people, and the Lord avouched himself to them in these words:

"This day the Lord thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes and judgments: thou shalt therefore keep and do them with all thine ~~hearty~~ and with all thy soul. Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice: And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all his commandments; and to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honor; and that thou mayest be an holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken." Exod. 24: 7, 8: "And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. And Moses took the blood and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words."

Before we proceed further, let us here note the distinction which Moses made between the book of the covenant, and the book of the law of superadded ordinances. The covenant is specified in Deut. 4: 12, 13: "And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire; ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone." "And I made an ark of shittim-wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in my hand. And he [i. e., God] wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto you in the mount out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly; and the Lord gave them unto me. And I turned myself and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made, and there they be, as the Lord commanded me."—Deut. 10: 3–5.

Next we have the "book of the law," or the ordinances containing, comprehending, embracing and enforcing the decalogue. Deut. 31: 24–26,—"And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, that Moses commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee."

Four things in the foregoing demand particular attention. (1). God with his finger wrote the decalogue commandments, or covenants, on tables of stone. (2). Moses wrote "the law of ordinances" in a book. (3) The decalogue covenant was put into the ark. (4) The book of the law was placed in the side of the ark. Query: Which was first? Answer: The decalogue, or stone covenant; consequently answered to our Constitution of government, and was a God-given constitution to Israel, designed for their government in the flesh; and all laws in Israel must of necessity be framed upon and in harmony with that constitution, or be a nullity, having no binding force whatever because of unconstitutionality.

Now suppose every ordinance (law) contained in "the book" written by Moses annulled, set aside, and the decalogue left intact, and you undertake to make a new set of laws on that same decalogue covenant, or constitution; do you not perceive that your way is hedged up? Not one step can you go in your legislation, unless you reproduce the old in kind. What is the matter? What is in the way? What takes away all the power, force, and vitality of our enactments? What kills? The letter. The old constitution, the old covenant. Change that, make a new one, a new covenant (constitution), adapted to the wants, conditions, circumstances and emergencies of the present surroundings, and then frame your laws in harmony with the scope and spirit of your covenant, and you will directly find that your law is not a dead letter on your statute book.

Such was the plan adopted and the course pursued by the Divine Legislator when he abrogated the covenant for fleshly Israel, and introduced the covenant for a spiritual Israel, giving life.

THE HEAVENLY HOME.

The Characteristics of the "great city, the holy Jerusalem," are thus set forth by Rev. Horatio Bonar:

1. It is a great city. "That great city," said John, gazing on it. Its circuit is vast—beyond Babylon or Nineveh, or Paris, or London. That "mighty city," says John, speaking of Babylon the Great (Rev. 13: 10;) but this is mightier far. There has been no city like it. It is the city, the one city, the great metropolis of the mighty universe, the mighty city of the mighty God.

2. It is a well-built city. Its "builder and maker is God." Its foundations are eternal. Its walls are jasper, its gates pearls, its streets paved with gold. It is "compactly built together," lying four-square, and perfect in all its parts; without a break or flaw, or weakness or deformity.

3. It is a well-lighted city. Something brighter than sun or moon is given to fill its heaven. The glory of God lightens it. The Lamb is its "light," or "lamp;" so that it needs no candle, no sunlight. There is no night there.

4. It is a well-watered city. A pure river of the water of life flows through its streets, proceeding from the throne of God and the Lamb. What must its waters be! What must be the rivers of pleasure there! Who in it can ever thirst? Its inhabitants shall thirst no more.

5. It is a well-provisioned city. The tree of life is there, with its twelve variety of fruits, and its health-giving leaves. It has more than Eden had. It is Paradise restored. Paradise and Jerusalem in one; Jerusalem in Paradise, and Paradise in Jerusalem.

6. It is a well-guarded city. Not only has its gates, and walls, and towers, which no enemy could scale or force; but at the gates are twelve angels, keeping perpetual watch.

7. It is a well-governed city. Its King is the son of God; the King of kings, Immanuel; the King eternal, whose sceptre is righteousness; who loveth righteousness and hateth iniquity. No misrule is there, no disorder, no lawlessness.

8. It is a well-peopled city. It has gathered within its walls all generations of the redeemed. Its population is as the sands or the stars; the multitude that no man can number; the millions of the risen and glorified.

9. It is a holy city. Its origin is heavenly, and it is perfect as its Builder. Nothing that defileth shall enter—no spot or speck, or shadow of evil. All is perfection there—divine perfection.

10. It is a glorious city. The glory that fills it and encircles it is the glory of God. All precious stones are there; no marble nor granite, such as we boast of now; all about it is gold, and pearls, and gems. Everything resplendent is there.

11. It is a blessed city. It is truly the joyous city. It is the throne and seat of the blessed One, and all in it is like him. Its name is Jerusalem, the city of peace. Its King's name is Solomon, the Prince of peace. There is no enemy there, no danger, no darkness, no sickness, no curse, no death, no weeping, no pain, no sorrow, no change forever. They that dwell in it "shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more" (Rev. 7: 16, 17); for "the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to it with songs; sorrow and sighing shall flee away." Isa. 36: 10. Blessed city! City of peace, and love, and song! Fit accompaniment of the new heavens; fit metropolis of the new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness! How eagerly should we look for it! How worthy of it should we live!

DOING LITTLE THINGS.

Let us be content in work,
To do the thing we can, and not presume
To fret because it's little. 'T will employ
Seven men, they say, to make a perfect pin.
Who makes the head, consents to miss the point;
Who makes the point, agrees to leave the head;
And if a man should cry, "I want a pin,
And I must make it straightway, head and point,"
His wisdom is not worth the pin he wants.

"PREACH THE WORD."—2 Tim. 4: 2.

Yes, to be sure. Why not? Be instant in season, out of season, at all times, in all places, under all circumstances. "Preach the word"; not the doctrines and commandments of men, not church creeds, not Satan's lies, but preach and teach the word—God's word, the truth; the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Preach the word on all subjects; on doctrine, prophecy, and practice. Do not shun to declare the whole counsel of God.

"Preach the word." Tell men what the word says concerning them; that by nature we are all sinners; that "sin is the transgression of the law"; that "by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Tell them that "the wages of sin is death"; that "sin, when it is finished, bringeth forth death"; that "the soul that sinneth, it shall die."

"Preach the word"—that God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, the Lamb of God, that whosoever will believe on him shall be saved. Tell the wonderful story of redemption, how that Christ died for our sins, according to the Scriptures, not according to human creeds; but that Christ died, was buried, and was raised from the dead to die no more; that after forty days, in the which he established his resurrection by many infallible proofs, he ascended up to heaven, and there sits at the right hand of the throne of God, interceding for poor, lost, sinful man.

"Preach the word." Point sinners to the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world. Tell them that the blood of Jesus cleanseth from all sin. Tell to dying, perishing sinners that salvation is to be obtained only through Christ; that there is no other name given in heaven, nor among men, whereby we can be saved, except the name of Jesus; and if men will but confess the Lord Jesus with their mouths, and believe on him with their hearts, they shall be saved. Tell them that his yoke is easy, and his burden light; and if they will bear it, they shall find rest to their troubled souls. Tell them that if they will not believe in Christ; if they will not have him to rule over them; if they will not bear his cross, own his laws, and honor his name, then he will not own them, nor confess them before his Father and the holy angels. Tell them that if they refuse a present salvation, they will meet a future retribution.

"Preach the word"—that this same Jesus, that died, was buried, was raised from the dead, and ascended up to heaven, is coming again. Yes, coming again. Not as some vainly imagine, when they say that he comes disguised in the habiliments of death, or at conversion, or by his Spirit; but he is coming again personally, visibly, and gloriously. Preach the word upon this great and important theme. Give the trumpet the certain sound; let the truth ring out long and loud. Let its notes be in harmony with the testimony of the angels of heaven,—that this very same Jesus shall come again in the glory of his Father, with all his holy angels.

"Preach the word" as Paul preached it. Tell the people as he told them, how that "the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven, with his mighty angels, in flaming fire taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ." Comfort the mourners with the same words he spoke to the brethren of Thessalonica: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and the trump of God; and the dead in Christ shall rise first; then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them to meet the Lord in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord." Go tell the world that the Lord is coming "with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all; and to convince all that are ungodly among them of all their ungodly deeds, ... and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Preach the coming of the Lord as the great incentive to repentance, as Peter proclaimed it on the day of Pentecost, when he exhorted them to repent and be converted, so that their sins might be blotted out when the refreshing and renewing time should come from God, and when he shall send Jesus Christ to earth again, to restore all things.

Preach the coming of the Lord as the great incentive to godliness, self-denial, and holiness. "For the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men, teaching us that, denying ungodliness and worldly lusts, we should live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ; who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peuliar people, zealous of good works."

Finally, "preach the word" on the signs of the speedy advent of the Lord. Sound aloud the "midnight cry," Behold, the Bridegroom cometh! Pour it into the ears of the sleeping virgins; alarm the world, by pointing them to the sure word of prophecy, and then to the many wonderful events which prove its fulfillment. O keep this great and solemn truth before the people day and night, at all times, and in all places. Keep this advent proclamation moving.

O christian, watch the signs that surely prove the speedy appearing of your Lord and Master. Turn your eyes from the world and the things of the world, and gaze with open, watchful, hoping eyes towards heaven, that you may catch the first glimpse of the glory that shall herald his approach to earth. Open wide your ears to catch the first sound of music from the angelic choir which accompanies the Lord from heaven; and when his lightnings shall enlighten the whole world, and the earth reel to and fro like a drunken man, and tremble and shake beneath your feet, you can exclaim with joyful emotion, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us" with an everlasting salvation.

O sinner, you too want to be saved when Jesus comes. Then make haste; get thee quickly to the cross of Christ, and he will save you now; but if you delay till to-morrow it may be too late. The door of mercy may be closed, and closed forever.

ALWAYS NEAR.

"I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor."—Ps. 140: 12.

Dear sorrowing ones, whom the waves and billows have gone over, do you know it, too? When tongues like a serpent, and lips under which is the poison of adders are devising mischief against you; when the proud have hid a snare for you, and have purposed to overthrow your goings, can you say with the king of Israel, "I know that the Lord will maintain the cause of the afflicted, and the right of the poor"?

Can you say with the sweet singer of Israel, "In the day when I cried thou answeredst me, . . . with strength in my soul"? Can you say with David, when passing through the fiery trial that is to try you, "Though I walk in the midst of trouble, thou wilt revive me; thou shalt stretch forth thine hand against the wrath of mine enemies, and thy right hand shall save me"? Can you say, "The proud waters have gone over our soul," yet "our help is in the name of the Lord"?

Does your soul go out to God, who is your refuge, in this fervent, believing prayer—"Deliver me from my persecutors, for they are stronger than I," ending with faith's triumphant declaration,—"The righteous shall compass me about; for thou shalt deal bountifully with me"? Then can you sing, "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."

Dearly beloved, while we peruse the sublime Psalms of David, which are indeed food for the hungry soul, let us pray, "Set a watch, O Lord, before my mouth; keep the door of my lips"; "that our prayer be set forth before him as incense, and the lifting up of our hands as the evening sacrifice."

For the World's Crisis.

WHAT IS A LIVING SOUL?

Adam, as a body, who could be seen, handled, and touched, is termed a living soul (Gen. 2: 7); and thousands of men and women are termed souls in the Bible. Now turn to Rom. 6: 12, and find that which in the above passage is termed soul, is there termed mortal. From this, I think we have the strongest reason to conclude that it takes nothing less than a flat contradiction of the Bible, to uphold the doctrine that any part of man is immortal before the resurrection.

Wellersburg, Pa. B. Keeffer.

— "Thou art weighed in the balances" is as true of men to-day, as when its terrible import shot arrows of consternation into the hearts of the wise men of the east. We are daily and hourly being weighed—God holds the balance—man sees it poised, and reads the verdict.

RUTLAND.

Our meetings in Rutland, Vt., continue to increase in interest. We have never been in better ones. The last have surpassed all the others. Some thirty or forty requested prayers the last two evenings (March 28th and 29th), and some fifty or sixty spoke after the sermons. The Lord is doing a great work. A vast amount of prejudice has been removed, and many members of the different churches are rejoicing with us in the blessed hope of soon seeing Jesus. Our conference meetings are real christian feasts. Three and four rise at a time to speak. Sixteen have been baptized, and several others intend to be immersed next Sabbath. Pray for us.

EDITORIAL COMFORT.

We wish to say to those who write for the Crisis, and have occasion to quote from the Bible, that they afford us much comfort, when they are very careful to quote the Scripture word for word, just as it is in the Bible. It saves us much labor. If it is not done by the writer, then we have to spend much time in doing it ourselves. Turn to the passage, by the aid of a concordance, and be sure not to include a single word in the quotation only what is found in the Bible. If one or more words are left out, put three or four periods in their place. Whenever any author is quoted, always give his precise words. It is not proper to put within quotation marks a single word not found in the author quoted; nor to omit any thing within the quotation, without using the periods to indicate their absence. We would specially request all who write for the Crisis to observe these things.

HELP US.—We wish our readers would assist us in making "our paper" as good as possible. No doubt they often come across interesting articles in other papers, or some rare item of news, that would be read with much interest bo those who take the Crisis. Please send us such things, and thus help in the good work.

PRINCE BONAPARTE.—Telegrams from Paris inform us that Prince Pierre Bonaparte, who murdered Victor Noir, has been acquitted of the deed of murder, but condemned by the High Court to pay 25,000 francs to the family of the murdered one, and also to pay the expenses of the suit. It is quite probable that the whole matter has been arranged in harmony with the wishes of the Emperor.

IMMORTALITY.—We have just received a new work on the subject of immortality, by Bro. James P. Whitmore. We have not yet had time to read but a small portion of it; but from what we have read, we have concluded that is a valuable work, and will render effective aid in spreading the truth in relation to the nature of man.

The book contains 800 pp., and is published at the office of the "Advent Christian Times," Buchanan, Mich. Single copies, post-paid, $1. Six copies, by mail, $5; by express, $4.20. Twelve copies, by mail, $10; by express, $8. Special terms will be made with those desiring larger quantities. For sale at the Crisis Office.

THE PROGRAMME.—In another column, our readers will find a "Programme" for a festival, which ought to be widely circulated. It can be obtained at the Crisis office, in a tract form, with some very interesting additional matter, for 20 cents per dozen; $1.30 per one hundred, postpaid; by express, $10.00 per one thousand.

"PARISHIONERS."—In our last week's report from Rutland, we are made to say: "In compliance with a request of the parishioners, and others, we had a meeting at four P. M. in the jail." It should read, "request of the prisoners."

BUSINESS, REMOVAL, ETC.—Those having sent us money, and do not see it credited this week, will please be patient. The delay is owing to our removal. It will be attended to soon.

GOOD HEALTH for April is at hand, filled, as usual, with valuable hygienic reading, that should be in every family. It is ably conducted, and published by Alexander Moore, 11 Bromfield Street, Boston. Price $2 a year. It is worth the money.

AFFAIRS AT ROME.

The Ecumenical Council is progressing slowly, as the following will show:—

"According to the Rome correspondent of the London Times, the wheels of the Ecumenical Council have been almost stopped by the flood-tide of speeches rolling in upon it. After a session of nearly ten weeks (Feb. 14) the Little Catechism has been reached, and fifty-seven Fathers have inscribed themselves to speak about it. All are most anxious to speak. Five speeches a day are the utmost that can be delivered or listened to with patience at one sitting, and there are only three sittings a week, nor would it be possible to have more. So as matters now stand there must be eleven sittings—that is, a month's work—on this small affair. But all this speaking would be no more than preliminary—because after it the Catechism will have to make a second appearance in an amended form, and the discussion will be reopened, unless the Cardinal Legates attempt to cut the knot another way. It is rumored that an attempt will be made to choke off these speeches by having them taken as having been delivered, laid on the table, printed, and circulated among the Fathers, as is done in the American Congress; but the anxious debaters declare that if this course is pursued they will pronounce discussion stopped, their mission ended, and leave for home. The next day, however, twenty more Fathers had registered their names for speeches, and the "American plan" may yet be adopted from the impossibility of listening to them.

At last accounts the tide of feeling was toward peace, union, dispatch, and a quick return home. The Fathers are not only homesick, but specially sick of Rome. Most of them are ill-lodged, in mere prophets' chambers, small, dark, dull, cold, ill-furnished and uninteresting. For air and warmth they have the dirty, winding streets and lanes of medieval Rome. Their francs and dollars are going fast, if not gone long since. Even Cardinals groan over the monotony of the Council, a turgid flood of talk, day after day."

TO PARENTS.

The following advice is of first class importance to all parents. They are often much to blame for their great carelessness on the subject. Said Dr. Johnson:—

"Accustom your children to a strict attention to truth, even in the most minute particulars. If a thing happen at one window, and they when relating it say that it happened at another, do not let it pass, but instantly check them; you do not know where deviation from truth will end. It is more from carelessness about truth than from intentional lying that there is so much falsehood in the world. All truth is not of equal importance; but if little violations are allowed, every violation will, in time, be thought little.

This subject demands attention. The number who tell the truth at all times is alarmingly small; but there is no promise of salvation to any but those who love and speak the truth. "All liars shall have their part in the lake which burneth with fire and brimstone, which is the second death." Rev. 21: 8. Who can afford to speak lies?

QUERIES ON ISA. 65: 17-25.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you please tell me to what Isa. 65: 17-25 refers? I have always understood that it represents this earth in its renewed state, and its inhabitants, but doubts have lately risen in my mind. Query:—Will children die on the new earth? (1) Will there be sinners there to be accursed? (2) Will there be houses built and inhabited, and vineyards planted in the kingdom of God? (3) To what does the "labor" and bringing forth of the 23d verse have reference, to "offspring" or to the fruit of the field? (4) If there is to be "no more thence an infant of days," how can children be born there, if the bringing forth of children is the meaning of the passage. (5) Are the redeemed of the Lord to labor on the new earth? (6) I had supposed it would be a place of rest. Yours seeking for light on God's word. S. R. GILMAN.

We think the passage refers to the new-earth state. In answer to the specific inquiries, we would say, (1) We do not think children will "die on the new earth." (2) We do not think there will "be sinners there to be accursed." (3) We believe the houses and vineyards will be in the kingdom. (4) We think the "labor," etc., refers "to the fruit of the field." (5) The answer to number five is contained in the answer to number four. (6) We do not think the redeemed of the Lord will earn their bread by the sweat of their brow; neither do we think that the saints will be for ever inactive; but like Adam in innocence, it may be said of them, they will be put "into the garden of Eden to dress it and to keep it." Gen. 2: 15.

We would further remark on this portion of Scripture, that it appears evident that it relates to the new heavens and earth, because the subject is introduced in the following language:

"Behold I create a new heavens, and a new earth, and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind; but be ye glad and rejoice for ever in that which I create; for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy. And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people; and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying." Isa. 65: 17-19.

Now turn to Rev. 21: 1-4, which reads as follows:—

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold, the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away."

It will be seen at a glance, that Isaiah and John are describing the same events. Both saw in vision the new heavens, the new earth, and the new Jerusalem. Then there will be no more weeping, pain nor death. Is it reasonable to suppose that persons will die in the new earth, and no one feel sorrow? The more elevated and heavenly our condition, the more sorrow we should feel at the loss of loved ones.

"There shall be no more thence an infant of days, nor an old man that hath not filled his days; for the child shall die an hundred years old; but the sinner, being an hundred years old, shall be accursed." Isa. 65: 20. This verse gives light in relation to infants. It is first stated, "There shall be no more thence an infant of days." That is, after we come to the new-earth state, mentioned in the preceding verses. But infants are to be saved. Said Jesus: "Of such is the kingdom of God." How can these sayings be harmonized? (1) "There shall be no more thence an infant of days." (2) "The child shall die an hundred years old." (3) "The voice of weeping shall be no more heard." (4) "Of such is the kingdom of God."

If the infants that die come forth in the resurrection as infants, then they will need the same care as when in this life. But instead of this, the infant that dies in this world comes forth from the dead with the ability of one "an hundred years old;" hence, "there shall be no more thence an infant of days;" but if they were born there, then there would be infants of days. There will be no "old man that hath not filled his days," as in this present world. "But the sinner [who lives here] being one hundred years old [at death], shall be accursed," or shut out of the kingdom of God. The present earth and the new one are contrasted. Here infants die; over "there shall be no more an infant of days." Here we weep over the death of loved ones; there "the voice of weeping shall be heard no more," for the reason that "there shall be no more death." Rev. 21: 4. Here the sinner lives to be "an hundred years old;" in the new earth, he has no place, but is "accursed," or utterly rejected from that heavenly society.

THE MILLENNIUM.

"BRO. GRANT:—Although connected with another religious denomination, I am no sectarian. I desire only the truth, and for it am willing to investigate. I am trying to 'climb up Zion's Hill,' and feel that the Crisis has been a great assistance to me.

Will you give in the Crisis a statement of what you hold to be the Bible doctrine respecting the millennium? Also a commentary on Rev. 5: 11, and Rev. 22: 15?

Respectfully, BELA ATWOOD."

We believe the millennium will not begin till Jesus comes personally, and sets up his kingdom; at which time the righteous dead will be raised, the sanctuary be cleansed, and all the saints will be gathered to the promised land to reign with Christ a thousand years. In the last revelation from Jesus, we find the following on this subject:—

"And I saw thrones, and they sat upon them, and judgment was given unto them; and I saw the souls of them that were beheaded for the witness of Jesus, and for the word of God, and which had not worshiped the beast, neither his image, neither had received his mark upon their foreheads, or in their hands; and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years."—Rev. 20: 4-6.

We can not "reign with him, till after he comes and sets up his kingdom. "The first resurrection" must take place before the millennium can begin. But the dead will not be raised till the second coming of Christ; therefore, it follows that the millennium cannot begin before the personal coming of our Savior.

Rev. 5: 12 reads as follows:—

"And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever."

We think this passage will be fulfilled after the coming of Christ.

Rev. 22: 15 is as follows: "for without are dogs, and sorcerers, and whoremongers, and murderers, and idolaters and whosoever loveth and maketh a lie." We understand this Scripture to teach that the classes mentioned can have no place in the new earth or kingdom of heaven.

ROMANS 5: 1.

"Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ."

The justification about which the Scriptures principally treat, and which reaches the case of the sinner, is called evangelical justification; by which is meant the acceptance of one by God, who is and who confesses himself to be guilty, and who repents and believes in Jesus Christ. "For what saith the scripture? Abraham believed God, and it was counted unto him for righteousness."—Rom. 4: 3. "Knowing that a man is not justified by the works of the law, but by the faith of Jesus Christ, even we have believed in Jesus Christ, that we might be justified by faith of Christ, and not by the works of the law; for by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Gal. 2: 16.

As to the method of justification, three things are to be considered: the originative, the meritorious, and the instrumental causes. Hence it is said to be by grace through faith. The originating cause is the grace of God, which disposed him, when we were exposed to death as the penalty of our offence, to provide a substitute in his Son. For we read, "But after that the kindness and love of God our Savior toward man appeared, not by works of righteousness which we have done, but according to his mercy he saved us, by the washing of regeneration, and renewing of the Holy Ghost."—Titus 3: 3, 6.

This substitute is the meritorious cause of our justification. What Jesus Christ did in obedience to the precept of the law, and what he suffered in satisfaction of its penalty, constitute the ground of our acceptance or justification before God.

As to the instrumental cause of our justification, the merit of Christ does not operate so as to produce pardon as a necessary and unavoidable effect, but through the instrumentality of faith. The faith by which we are justified is present faith; faith actually existing and exercised.

Religious faith is assent to the truth of divine revelation, and of the events and doctrines contained in it. This may be merely historical, without producing any effect on our lives, and it is then a dead faith such as the devils had. But a living or saving faith not only believes the great doctrines of religion as true, but embraces them with the heart and affections, and is thus the source of sincere obedience to the divine will of God.

Faith in Christ is a grace wrought in the heart by the Holy Ghost, whereby we receive Christ as our Savior, Prophet, Priest, and King. True faith is an essential grace, and a mainspring of christian life. By it the christian overcomes the world, the flesh, and the devil, and receives the crown of righteousness. 2 Tim. 4: 7, 8. In virtue of it, worthy men of old wrought great wonders. Heb. 11. This should encourage us to live by faith on the Son of God. H. S. MITCHELL.

CHRISTIAN UNION.—No. 3.

"For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God."—ROM. 8: 14.

The Spirit of God has an agency in bringing the carnal mind into love and fellowship with Christ. So radical is this change, that Paul says, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away, and behold, all things are become new." This being the fact, the new man develops itself in the new channel; whereas he was once blind, he now sees; whereas he once hated, he now loves; a complete change; and all those regenerated by the Holy Spirit, having the same spirit, are one, necessarily so.

So, then, those begotten by the word of truth are "born not of corruptible seed, but of incorruptible by the word of God, which liveth and abideth for ever." This class of disciples, believing on Christ as the Scriptures have said, have the living testimony, are living witnesses. Jesus knows them; they know him, and they are one, bound together by a cord not easily broken—faith, love, and good fellowship. Many a trial has been made to unite professors of religion together, and it has often failed. What is the difficulty? It lies here: you can never unite Christ and Belial; they have no part with each other. One has fellowship with the world, the other is chosen out of it. One has the Spirit of the Lord, the other the spirit of the world. No union can be made, any more than two pieces of cold iron can be made to cleave one to the other.

Let the heavenly influence of the word of Christ by the Holy Spirit dwell in us richly, and the warming influence would be so delightfully felt that you could not help but clasp the hand; heart would beat to heart; greetings and sweet fellowship would be as natural as life. Such union and fellowship we do and must have, in order to please the great Head of the church and give us constant prosperity.

This holy union, not made up for the occasion, will abide amid all the changes of life; in perils, persecutions, and trials. It is there the abiding principle; united to Christ; he the only law-giver; no rules but Christ; adopted into his school, his family, by faith. Loyal to Christ and his government, Christ favors him; he expects promotion, and feels blessed well about it, and will not deny his commander; and he feels a sacred nearness to all who have enlisted under this one Chieftain. The sight of one of these living branches inspires new life; all on the track; only one interest, one Lord. This blessed oneness, in spite of all differences and former opinions, the one spirit binds together; no getting apart while the fire of love burns in the heart. Glory to the Most High for this Holy Spirit, Bible oneness!

Creeds, formulas, resolutions and declarations amount to nothing, compared with this heaven-ordained binding. It is the spiritual that binds us more closely than any relationship in life.

The living church is here, and this oneness that Jesus prayed for will be more plainly developed, showing the difference between the true and false church. The true light is in this direction, and the light must and will shine. Divisions on the one hand; fellowship, love and union on the other; not that which you have to cultivate, but that which is spontaneous; all you have to do is to "let brotherly love continue"; and the power of this love and union is of divine growth, a plant of our heavenly Father's planting.

Now if anything shall interfere with this heavenly principle, take the right course, and although it may seem to conflict with the interest of our party, or people, notwithstanding all this even, be loyal to the principle; it will work right, it will come out right. The Lord knew best when he marked the plan and provided the remedy. Then let our motto be—one with Christ, one with Bible believers, one with the spiritual branches of the true vine; one with the high standard of a full assurance of faith; one in self-denial for Christ and his holy people; one in having our wills completely swallowed in the will of our divine Master; one in the hearty response—"Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

This will not unite with worldlings; they cannot reach it; but it will exalt us and give us a new start onward; and love, joy, and peace, with strong confidence in God, truth, and the faithful. Amen. L. BOUTELL.

LETTER FROM BRO. E. T. HIMES.

BRO. GRANT:—I would say to the friends in the east that the cause of truth is prospering in this part of the field. Like the mariner on the ocean, we have the storm to pass through; and like the soldier on the battle-field, the foe to meet; but with our compass always true, and the sword of the Spirit, we find deliverance and victory in every place.

We are often represented as being insane, or infidels, and many ignorantly suppose it to be the case, but, out of curiosity, come out to hear what this babbler will have to say, and lo, to their surprise they find that the most he has to say is what they have read again and again in their Bibles at home, only they never knew that those passages meant what they said, but supposed they had a spiritual meaning which the common people could not understand. And now comes a host of questions to answer; "What are you going to do with the 'thief on the cross'?" "Does n't the spirit go to God who gave it when we die?"

Well, all we have to do is to believe what God has said about these things, and leave out what man says, and all is plain. Now what a time there is through the town; almost every one is searching their Bible as never before, both ministers and people, and every one is talking about the "Advents." Some are searching to find the truth, and others are looking for an argument to refute what they claim to be error. A brother recently undertook to refute your statement that the word "immortal" is found only once in the Bible. After quoting the passage where it occurs, he then quoted those containing "immortality." "Now you see Grant's statement is not true; for we find the word several times." A Bro. arose in the congregation and said, "I cannot see it; you have found immortal but once." "O, well," said he, "it is all the same, only the i-ty." This is the substance of, though not the exact conversation, and it is also a fair specimen of many of the arguments that are raised against us. We have patience to meet all these things kindly and with meekness.

I have been cheered this winter by seeing many embrace the truth, both among those in the churches and out of them. There are but a few active laborers in this State, I think not more than six who are able to devote their whole time in the field; others laboring a part of the time only. There are several hundred ministers of the other churches, who are generally hostile to us and our doctrine because we deny the immortality of the soul; but with all their opposition, the truth is gradually gaining ground. I hope the Lord will stir up some of the brethren east to "come over and help us" in this great work; for the harvest is great and the laborers few. Affectionately in Christ, EDWIN T. HIMES.

For the World's Crisis.

LONG SERMONS AND PRAYERS.

I am glad for the sake of Christ's cause that this subject is being agitated in the Crisis; for the evils complained of are no doubt hindrances to a revival spirit.

I once heard a deacon of a church say that there was once a revival in the church in which he officiated, and the first intimation they had of the presence of the Holy Spirit was in their short prayers. He said the church had settled down into a cold, formal state, having long, formal prayers and exhortations, and were losing ground. There was nothing in their meetings attractive to young or old; but on one occasion some of the brethren felt a burden upon them to pray for the Holy Spirit, and after one had uttered a few heartfelt petitions for this, another would be burdened with the same thing, and the result was, a reviving of the church and the conversion of the impenitent. No doubt the Lord saw that the church was losing its power and vitality, and in pity poured out his Spirit upon it, and gave it a spirit of prayer.

There is something to be learned from this, and one important lesson is, the Holy Spirit does not impress the church in its meeting to pray all over the world, as is often the case; and that when its prayers are concentrated upon one point, they are always answered, if the object prayed for is for his glory. D. N. SMITH.

NEWS FROM ALL THE WORLD.

I send you the following interesting and important statement. It is worth preserving.

WHAT NEXT?

By the year 1874, it is believed, the whole globe will be spanned with cables, either overland or under the sea. The growth, for the few years past, has been most wonderful, and just now the ocean cables exceed a distance of 20,000 miles, and have a capital of $35,000,000, with more lines in prospect than have been completed.

The zeal of the Old World for new things of this kind is quite equal to our own. When the Russian government wanted rapid news from far-off Caucasus, they built a telegraph from Moscow on to Tiflis and Erinan; then by aid of British capital they extended their lines to India. Their wires were stretched on through the Persian Gulf to Kurachee. After that came a Russian line to Siberia, Tartary, and on the frontiers of China, and the Chinese now insist that the lines of communication shall be brought to their own doors.

The Russians are also building lines across Eastern Siberia to the Japenese Sea, to connect by cable with Japan, Shanghai, and Hong-Kong. Returning to England we see lines contemplatad from Falmouth to Malta, via. Gibraltar, to connect with the Malta and Alexandria cable, and thus completing the English line to Bombay. A cable will then be completed to Singapore, and one north to Hong Kong, Amoy and Shanghai, and one south to Batavia via. Java to North Australia. And the end is not here, for a cable is projected to New Zealand from Hobart Town, and another from China to America, via. Japan and Alaska. All this is in the certain and not remote future. The dream of Puck is a sober reality. The girdle, four or five years hence, will be not only all round the earth and under all the seas, but everywhere where civilization can find a foothold. Truly we live in an eventful and wonderful age, and the only real regret is, that with the immense strides of science and material advancement, moral improvement lags behind about as much as material interests go ahead.—N. Y. Express.

And following that, is a tabular list of positive interest and value, and well worth preserving for reference. Let the date at which the reckonings are made, stand about the beginning of 1870.

There are, besides, the vassal princes—Prince Carl I of Roumania, Prince Nicolaus II., of Montenegro, and Prince Milan IV. of Serbia—and the Regent of Spain. The Republic of Switzerland and the free cities of Hamburg, Bremen and Lubeck complete the list of European lands.

The record of growing evil is not pleasant to peruse, except as it furnishes a prophetic hint of our proximity to the coming Restorer. We give sundry items:—

THE REIGN OF CRIME.

The "Herald" thinks that nothing in the history of Christian cities—the worst capitals in the worst ages of the past—can equal or approach the dreadful prevalence of crime in this "metropolitan shamble."

"Already in the one month of this year (says the editor) we have chronicled a murder or attempted murder for every day in the month, and not one of these crimes but seems inspired by a spirit of fiendish savagery equal to the worst act men or devils could conceive."

What is it, it is asked, that has given, within a few years, the reins to the fury of these murdering wretches?

"It is their consciousness of immunity, their discovery of the enormous power that they wield in our corrupt political system, in virtue of which power it is impossible to punish them; the repeated connivance in their escape of all the authorities, from the policeman in the street to the Judge on the bench; the state of the law, the state of the administration of justice in this city, and the state of the public mind with regard to the death penalty."

"The so-called philanthropists" are considered as scarcely less guilty than the murderers. The Herald says:

"They have unsettled the public mind with regard to the propriety of capital punishment. These lunatic teachers of free love, who have broken down the morality of society in their assaults on the institution of marriage, have also broken down the great barrier of safety to human life in undermining the only penalty that appalls the thought of the murderer."

Nothing, it is said, can in the least degree palliate the heinous offences that have been committed here, "in shielding murderers by the very machinery contrived for the administration of justice. Our city is corrupt and rotten with the guilt of this offence. The Judge's ermine is dabbled in the blood of the citizen, and he holds his place, not to protect society, but to protect its foes."

Our municipal functionaries, the editor goes on to say, are "chosen in great part from the ruffianly classes of society," and "the power they wield is used to protect their associates in the perpetration of outrages." In fact:

"The instincts and sympathy of the men entrusted with the safety of society are with the dealers in outrage and violence—the potent fountains of political power, who can commit no crime in their hours of frenzy that they may not condone on election day."

Where is the remedy for all this? is asked. But there the editor pauses, as if puzzled for an answer.

Enterprise is restless and endless in our day as the following shows. It is a building age, indeed:—

"We are soon to have a telegraph cable connecting Panama with Peru. Senor Paz Soldan has presented to the Government an application for permission to land a cable on the shores of this bay, and the President has accepted it without the least alteration, and will do all in his power to hasten the completion of the line. As a cable is about to be laid from Cuba to Colon, you may soon expect to receive news from Peru and Chili daily. Two of the survey party arrived per steamship Alaska on the 29th of December. This looks like work. Americans here, as well as all foreigners and natives, are anxious to have the surveys completed. They feel satisfied, however, that the route finally determined upon for the ship canal will be from Colon to Panama, via the Rio Chagres, from the Atlantic through the Rio Grande to the Pacific. We feel that there is no doubt as to the accomplishment of this undertaking during the present Administration, whether it takes four or eight years. General GRANT is looked upon by his countrymen as the man to carry through and give to the world the greatest achievement of the eighteenth century."—S. Am. Cor. N. Y. Times.

A WOMAN'S WORK.—Princess de da Tour d'Auvergne, who has obtained a grant from the Sultan of the piece of ground whereon Christ taught the Lord's prayer, is personally superintending the erection of a temple on the spot which will contain the prayer in every language. See has already spent over $50,000 in carrying out her project.

VERMONT STATE TENT.

Dear Brn. and Srs.:—What say you? Are we to have the Mission Tent the approaching summer, which was partly pledged for at our excellent campmeeting at Bethel? It is left with each brother and sister to say what they will give for this object. Are there not enough of the lovers of Jesus, his truth, and the salvation of precious souls (not immortal souls) who are perishing for the want of the truth as it is in Jesus, who are willing, yes, who crave the privilege to have a share in it? Let every brother and sister who have not pledged send their names to us at once what they will give, that we may know whether we are to have the tent or not. It is high time that something is done in this direction. Do not delay any longer. Write us now, before you forget it.

Brn. Cleaveland, Carpenter, Mathewson, and others, send names of volunteers to this object. There are hundreds and thousands who would hear the truth by these means, who would not otherwise; and, by receiving it into good and honest hearts, be saved in the day of the coming of the Lord Jesus.

West Hartford, Vt. R. N. STETSON.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. Ingmire.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish (through the Crisis) to inform the brethren in Murray, N. Y., that the reason of my non-fulfilling my appointments advertised for the 19th, and onward, was on account of sickness. For two weeks I was confined to the house, and mostly to my room; but through mercy was so far restored as to be able to go to Knowlesville on the 26th. But here was another disappointment. In reaching the latter place, I found that a destructive fire had occurred the night previous, which had burned the hotel, with the principal stores adjoining, together with the Advent Chapel, a neat and comfortable place, where our brethren in that neighborhood had enjoyed of late many precious seasons. I shall not soon forget the very blessed meetings we had in connection with the New York Conference last December, when other of God's children (besides Adventists) felt it to be a blessed privilege thus to meet to have fellowship one with another. The chapel was owned by Bro. Geo. Amos, and the premises had been insured up to within a few weeks of the fire.

Our brethren at Knowlesville are far from being rich, but have a heart in the cause, and will do what they can to build another tabernacle for worship, and that soon. Perhaps some who profess to believe that our Lord will soon come, and are able to help their brethren in their efforts to keep the light shining in that place, may feel it their duty (perhaps a privilege) so to do; but that is a matter between them and God, so I leave it in their hands.

May the Lord direct all our hearts into the love of God, and into the patient waiting for Christ. Amen. Truly your Bro. in Christ,

WM. INGMIRE.

Brockport, N. Y., March 30th, 1870.

From Bro. C. W. Low.

BRO. GRANT:—I wish to say a few words through the columns of your most excellent paper to the brethren and sisters of like precious faith, to let them know my whereabouts in the journey towards the kingdom. I am still on my way to the promised home of endless rest. I am trying every day to live near the "place which is called Calvary." I love to linger around the cross, and feel that my heart is made better by the close proximity.

I am preaching some this winter, but my faith is greater than my liberty; for since the death of my employer, secular matters confine me more closely than I desire to be. But however we may be circumstanced in life, let us all look well to our own hearts, for it is the "pure in heart" that "shall see God." With what care, then, and with what watchfulness should we live, praying always, that we enter not into temptation.

Soon the Judge will be here. The signs that indicate his coming are thickening fast all around us. Among other signs, we see the great and wise men (D.D.'s) of the present day departing from the simplicity of the word of God, and dealing in philosophy, metaphysics, etc., to the spiritual and gospel bewilderment of the people. They are teaching in these parts that "man was made a spirit-being, and that the body may be considered or regarded as an accident." They have abandoned the soul as being the man proper, and taken up the spirit as the man. The "soul" and "body" is of small account. They say that "Paul, as a spirit, left the body and went to paradise; and if he had not returned, his body would have died and been buried."

My dear brethren, let us who know the truth, and having been made free by it, maintain it before God and men, in the spirit of Christ, at all and every cost. Let us abide in his word, for it will save us in the last day, while the fables and the false teachers will be set aside as unfit for the Master's use. May God help us all to be faithful to him, to his word, to ourselves, and to each other.

Your Bro. in gospel hope, C. W. LOW.

From Bro. J. B. Wadsworth.

Bro. Grant:—It has been some time since you have heard from me. I left Louisville six weeks since, went through Evansville, Ind.; from thence to Paducah, Ky.; from which place I walked to Hickman, a distance of seventy-five miles. Here I took a boat for Memphis, where I have been about two weeks, enjoying the hospitality and society of the Mission family, who gave me a welcome reception on my arrival here. I found the Mission in a prosperous condition. I believe a good work has been done here among the freedmen, by those who have labored, and are still laboring here; though there was at one time a seeming interruption, it was only a separation of the chaff from the wheat, and the church has been in perfect harmony and thriving ever since. Bro. Cole and the laborers here are earnest and faithful in their work, and should have the sympathies and prayers of God's people, as I believe they do.

I found many in Louisville who believed in the speedy coming of Christ, and are anxious for some one to preach this faith to them. They desire a church of their own. One Bro. said he would give a thousand dollars towards building a church. Who will go and give them light? Should any one feel moved by the Spirit of the Lord to go, please notify L. H. Ferrell, No. 194 East Walnut St. There they will meet a welcome reception. I became very much attached to these dear brethren in L. My little work will be out in a short time, as it is ready for publication. Bro. J. V. Himes is to publish it. I expect to leave here to-morrow for Huntsville, Ala. Any one wishing to write me can direct here, in the care of Bro. L. F. Cole, Box 634, until further notice from me. Yours in love,

J. B. Wadsworth.

Acknowledgments of money received.—Mary R. Wardwell, Savannah Landing, N. Y., through Bro. G. T. Adams, $2.00. J. F. Rathgeber, Pa., $1.00. A. A. Havens, Clato, Ohio, $1.00. I have also received from Bro. Greene, M. D., Phila., Pa., a large number of tracts, practical and prophetic, all of which were gladly received. J. B. W.

Memphis, Tenn., Mar. 26th, 1870.

From Bro. G. W. Truell.

Bro. Grant:—I have taken the "Crisis" over four years; always loved it, deeming it a faithful messenger of God; but to-day it seems more than ever before fraught with love, power, and "good news," and laden with a precious freight of hope, joy, and strength. Praise God for the "Crisis"! We are all praying for those dear friends who labor in "word and deed" to maintain God's word in its purity against the "world lying in wickedness," against wickedness in spiritual places, and against "false teachers" who "teach for doctrine the commandments of men."

Praise God for a free salvation, that saves from sin every day, that saves me from my own selfishness, that helps me find the poor and needy, and minister to their needs; that makes me pity, where once I cursed and shunned; that makes me weep and rejoice with those who weep and rejoice; that makes me "gentle, easy to be entreated," truthful, kind, happy.

Labor on, pray on, dear friends, who make, and also who read the dear "Crisis," for soon, oh, soon the night will pass away, be merged in the morning of the resurrection, and then hope will be changed to glad fruition, and we, with all the people of God, shall "be made perfect." Hallelujah!

Only a few are looking for "that blessed hope" in Taunton, and no one ever comes to preach the gospel here; but prayer is being made to God for meat in due season, and we shall yet have it. Thanks be to God for his promises. Pray for us, that we may be used of God to the salvation of some dying souls.

Yours in hope of the resurrection and a glorious life in Christ, G. W. Truell.

For the World's Crisis.

PEACE.

In the turmoils of the present life, tempest-tossed and assailed as we are by troubles and perplexities, how natural it is that we reveal to our fellow men the cares and anxieties of our mind, thereby hoping to find some comfort or relief. How consistent with our nature it is to sigh for rest. But the child of God, knowing the uncertainty of human help, turns to the eternal Father, as a place of repose, protection, and solid comfort; the Rock of Ages that cannot be washed away by the storms of this world's unrighteousness. For thy blessed Son's sake, help us to place a greater reliance in thee. Help us to be more like Christ Jesus. May we grow in grace, and be strengthened in holy love day by day. Enable us to feel that of ourselves we can do nothing; all depends on Christ. It is by the grace of God we are what we are. How we should strive to help thy cause by being obedient to thy just and perfect laws. O for a closer walk with God; then shall we have a foretaste of that joyous peace that awaits the redeemed at his coming; when the Lord God omnipotent shall reign on the new earth.

Wilmington. C. Mendenhall.

MR. HAMMOND AT CINCINNATI.

To show the power of God's Spirit in changing the most worldly-minded into devoted Christians, Mr. Hammond referred to an instance that came to his knowledge while in England. Captain Trotter, of the Horse Guards, moved in the highest circle of society, even among the nobility. His sister, moving in the same circle, went to Paris and there fell in with some of the devoted people of God. She felt her lost condition and accepted Christ as her Savior. Her heart became filled with the love of God. She wrote to her brother, telling him of the unutterable happiness she had found. Her brother on receiving the letter could scarcely credit his senses. He was angry and indignant. He at once hurried off to Paris to see his sister. He sought her out, and loaded her with reproaches for bringing such shame and infamy on the family. The sister heard him through, and then quietly opened her Bible, and asked him to read the beginning of the 8th chapter of Romans: "There is, therefore, now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit." Captain Trotter was struck with the oft-quoted passage. He took his sister's Bible to his room. He repeated the words: "There is then no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus." Of course, then, thought he, there is condemnation to them who are not in Christ Jesus. His sins troubled him. He was unable to sleep. In the morning he hurried to his sister's room. With tears in his eyes, he besought her to pray for him that his sins might be washed away. He accepted Christ as his Savior, and experienced the joys of pardoned love. This was eleven years ago, and ever since that Captain Trotter has been a bright and shining light, winning many to the cross of Christ.

Obituaries.

Hovey. Fell asleep in Jesus, in Natick, Mass., Sept. 12th, 1869, Abby W. Hovey, aged seventy-two years.

The subject of this notice was brought to Christ in her youthful days. In 1832 she was baptised and united with the first Baptist church in Cambridgeport, Mass. She possessed a most meek and gentle disposition; and with the grace of God in her heart, she became a pattern of true christian character. "Her whole life," says one who knew her, "was devoted to Christ and his service." She loved her Savior enough to desire his appearing; and the tidings of his coming were to her welcome and cheering. The hope of redemption at the coming of her Savior cheered and comforted her in all her afflictions.

Her physical sufferings were borne with great patience. To the last all was submission, and without a sign of impatience. Could she have spoken, she would have uttered words cheering to friends and all those looking for Jesus. But her life and spirit speak louder and more truly than words.

She had the spirit of missions. She was deeply interested in all our efforts to send the gospel of the kingdom to the ignorant and benighted, and none could make a greater effort than she did to help along the work among that oppressed and down-trodden race in our own land.

I remember two years ago receiving from her a large package of children's underclothing, made by her; every stitch in them taken with her one left hand, the right being wholly paralyzed. These were distributed in the Memphis Mission, as she desired; and many a poor child there has had reason to bless that hand which thus daily and wearily moved in its behalf. Other missions I believe have received from her in like manner.

May our dear Bro. and Sr. Russell, at whose hands this loved one received the kindest attention, share largely in the blessing of Christ, until they meet her where there will be no sickness or death. I. I. Leslie.

Streeter. Died, in Hinsdale, N. H., Jan. 14th, 1870, Sr. Mary Streeter, widow of the late Elihu Streeter, aged eighty-four years, and nearly ten months.

From her youth she made God her refuge, and in old age proved his unchangeable love. In great suffering, and while passing through deep waters, she would say, "He only is my rock and my salvation"; "I shall not be moved." And ever at the mention of "Jesus and his appearing," her countenance glowed with heavenly light. Her children, three sons (among whom is Bro. B. F. Streeter, of Northfield, Mass.), and two daughters, "sorrow not as others which have no hope"; for them "which sleep in Jesus will God bring with him." The church and community miss a "mother in Israel"; but we expect

"A glorious dawn!
We shall meet to part, no, never,
On the resurrection morn!"

S. B. Thomas.

Griggs. Fell asleep in Jesus, March 17th, 1870, my mother, Lydia Fletcher Griggs, aged ninety-five years, two months, and twenty-six days.

She remembered the "dark day" of 1780, and also how people felt at the time, thinking the day of judgment had come. She remembered that they lit candles at noon, and that fowls went to roost at mid-day. There is but one witness more left in this town of Brimfield, Mass.

A. W. Griggs.

Burchard. Died, in East Killingly, Conn., Mar. 3d, 1870, of congestion of the lungs, Sr. Sarah Burchard, wife of James C. Burchard, aged sixty-three years.

She was formerly a Baptist, but about ten years ago embraced the soon coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. Since that time she has been a faithful and devoted christian. By her request Elder D. V. Corey spake from John 14: 1–3.

J. H. Burchard.

Burnham. Died, in Biddeford, Maine, Dec. 26th, 1869, Ira M., wife of Lorenzo Burnham, aged twenty years, five months, nine days.

Sister B. died in full hope of immortality when Jesus comes. She leaves a kind husband, with a large circle of friends to mourn her loss, but not without hope. Sermon by the writer, prayer by Bro. J. W. White. C. S. Emory.

Little. Died, in Windham, Maine, Sept. 4th, 1869, Sister Mary Little, aged seventy years, eleven months.

Sister L. maintained a christian life for fifty years, and for the last twenty-seven years had looked with longing desire for the return of our Savior, on whom her only hope of future life was stayed, which life she expected through the resurrection of the dead. Services attended by the writer.

B. S. Emory.

Brown. Died, in Derry, N. H., March 6th, 1870, Nathaniel Brown, aged seventy-one years.

He was formerly a Methodist, but for nearly thirty years had been living in expectation of the speedy coming of Christ. He was faithful to the last in the discharge of his duties as a citizen and a christian. N. H. Brown.

Swazy. Died, in Moultonborough, N. H., March 4th, 1870, Widow Jane Swazy, aged forty-five yrs. The deceased was a great sufferer. The funeral was attended by the writer. Frank Mudgett.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

London, March 29. Assurances have been received from Rome that the Council, yielding to the representations of the European powers, will adjourn the discussion on Papal infallibility until the latter part of May. The Catholic laity of Switzerland are dissatisfied with the ultramontanism of their Bishops in the Council.

Paris, March 29. The conspiracy affair is assuming more importance. Orders have issued for the arrest of twenty persons therein named, including Joseph Mazzini, Felix Pyat, Louis Blanc and others not now in the country.

The journals to-day announce that the Emperor has requested Prince Pierre Bonaparte to leave the country. It is reported that he will go to America.

During a lecture yesterday Dr. Tardieu was hissed and insulted on account of the deposition made by him at Tours in favor of Prince Bonaparte. Dr. Tardieu was obliged to quit the hall, and, while retiring, declared that he should resign his chair, and the announcement was received with bravos.

Tibaldi, a political prisoner at Cayenne, has been set free, and is expected in Europe at an early day.

Ledru Rollin has arrived in Paris.

Paris, March 31. The first number of a new religious journal La Concorde, of which Pere Hyacinthe is the chief editor, appeared to-day.

The police are actually pursuing investigations into the alleged conspiracy against the Emperor. Nearly all the parties lately arrested in connection with the affair are workmen.

Rome, March 31. The Schema de Fide was promulgated to-day, and it is understood that the Council will immediately begin the discussion of the Schema of infallibility, in which case the French Ambassador will not return to Rome, and the Pope will issue a Bull of excommunication against the dissident Armenians.

Rome, April 2. The Civita Catholica publishes an article in view of the approaching discussion on the proposition for Papal infallibility, tending to show that the Pope has no particular need of unanimity in the Council, but that a simple majority is sufficient to establish the claim.

Rome, April 4. The Pope wishes to promulgate the first scheme at Easter, so that the second scheme, that on infallibility, may be discussed immediately after the holidays.

☞ A Paris letter says the authority for the announcement of the serious illness of the Pope is a lady profoundly devoted to the Holy See, who has just been received by Pio Nono, and who found his Holiness grievously changed for the worse. His glance has lost its vivacity, and his voice has become feeble. Attempts are made, it says, to conceal the facts, but great anxiety is felt at the Vatican.

☞ During the recent New-Zealand massacre, more than thirty Europeans and fifty natives were slain. Some of the latter, who were Christians, were offered life if they would bow the knee to the Hau-hau god, but declined to purchase life on such terms.

DOMESTIC.

St. Louis, March 30. A dispatch from Springfield, Mo., says: We have just received advices, dated Jainesville, Texas, March 5, of an extensive raid of the Camanche Indians in Western Texas. Over forty families are reported massacred, several houses burned and several hundred horses captured. It is believed that the commander at Fort Hill could have prevented some of the massacres if he had been disposed. Over seventy horses are reported near the fort in possession of the Pennsylvania Quaker tribe.

Ottawa, Canada, March 29. Bills authorizing the Great Western Railway Company to reduce its guage to that of the New York Central, and the construction of a tunnel under the Detroit river, have passes through the committees, and will probably pass Parliament without difficulty. These improvements will enable passengers to go from Boston and New York to San Francisco without change of cars.

St. Albans, Vt. For several weeks past an unusual supply of money orders and drafts from Philadelphia and New York have been received at Burlington, payable to men well known as Fenians. Lately there has been a mysterious movement of loaded teams from this point to Underhill and West ford, some seventeen miles east of here, and not on the railroad. A week ago last Sunday night several double teams freighted with boxes and casks, passed northwardly through the village of Fairfield, some ten miles east of St. Albans, and the same thing was repeated last Sunday night in Fairfax, which lies between Westford and Fairfield. Six of these teams were seen, all bound north. Fairfield is largely inhabited by Irishmen, most of whom are Fenians, and it only about ten miles from the Canada line.

The Working of the Suez Canal.—Late London and Liverpool commercial newspapers show that a large number of steamers are constantly advertised for ports in India, China and Japan, via the Suez canal, which has caused an advance in the prices of suitable vessels in England, and 15 per cent additional premium is easily obtainable for such steamships over last year's prices; and the shipyards of the Clyde are now building several steamers of 2000 tons and upward of a construction especially adapted to this trade.

A Strange Disease.—A peculiar and very fatal form of sickness is prevailing in Daviess county, Ind., and extending to the adjoining counties. It is called by the doctors the "cold plague."

The disease first manifests itself by a chill; and in those cases which prove fatal, the victim becomes insensible in a few minutes, and is sealed for death from the very first indications of the disease. The physicians have met with but little success in treating the malady, and in a settlement of Germans in Daviess county every case proved fatal. In the town of Washington the deaths are from twelve to fifteen per week. Every case has proved fatal except two, and one of the persons who recovered has been left in such a crooked and deformed condition by the ease as to render life a burden, while the other, who, previous to the attack, was a lady of intelligence and rare accomplishments, has been left almost idiotic. A similar disease prevailed in the same region several years ago, and swept off hundreds of victims.

Issue of the Fifteenth Amendment Proclamation. The proclamation from President Grant, announcing the ratification of the Fifteenth Amendment to the Constitution, was issued yesterday, immediately after the admission of Texas to the Union, and it is now a settled and uncontrovertible fact that the color of a man's skin, "or previous condition of servitude," shall no longer in this country prone a barrier to his enjoyment of all the rights and privileges of the ballot box. It forms a new and memorable era in the history of the nation, and the announcement will be received with joy, not only by the blacks, but also by every just and loyal citizen of this country.

Trichina Pork.—A special from Belvidere, Ill., to the Chicago Tribune, states that three persons belonging to a family of Germans, living twenty miles southeast of that city, had died from eating trichina pork. Eight others are prostrated from the same cause, and will probably all die. The trichina can be seen in immense numbers in the meat, and also in the flesh of those that have died.

Passing Events.

☞ It was stated in the Methodist Conference at Springfield yesterday that Zion's Herald, the denominational organ in this city, didn't more than pay expenses now, and ran $6000 behind last year, owing to its increased expense in its new book form. Its circulation is hardly greater than it was ten years ago, and is now only 14,000.

☞ A crab has been brought to San Francisco for exhibition, that was found clinging to the wreck of the steamer Oneida, on the coast of Japan, and which measures thirteen feet from tip to tip of the claws, and weighed when taken from the water fifty pounds.

☞ Newspapers are being multiplied in Kentucky, to meet the desire of the freedmen for instruction and information.

☞ The greatest flood ever known on the upper Mississippi is expected this spring.

☞ The investigation into the case of the Welsh fasting girl has resulted in the committal of the father and mother for trial. Against the medical defendants the magistrates decided that there was no case.

☞ The general impression of the mining regions is that the prices of coal will rule lower the coming year than during the past year.

☞ The Democratic Union newspaper of Ravenna publishes a letter from Mazzini urging a revolt in Romagna.

☞ Millions of pigeons have arrived in the woods of Western Pennsylvania, on their northern migratory tour.

☞ Professor Tyndall has just succeeded in igniting a diamond in oxygen by the concentrated rays of the electric light. He has no doubt of his ability to ignite it by the purely invisible rays from the same source.

☞ Two years ago a Florida negro, who was so afraid of a railroad car that he had to be blindfolded to get him on a train, was elected to the Legislature. He is now a railroad director. A marked instance of negro improvement.

☞ An earthquake was felt in Basle at noon of the 28th of February, and the people were greatly alarmed. The shocks were wave-like, and accompanied by a rolling noise.

☞ A letter from Jerusalem says the locusts are spread over the mountains of Judah and Samaria, in the valley of Jordan, and in the plain of Sharon and Galilee, having come to lay their eggs, which will be hatched just before the harvest, and there is the greatest alarm throughout the country.

☞ Dispatches from Bombay, received in London, report a terrible conflagration in the town of Comptah, near Nugpoor, Bengal. Two hundred houses and 2,500 bales of cotton had been destroyed, entailing an immense loss.

☞ Singing is to be taught hereafter on board all the vessels of the French Navy.

☞ Eugenie sometimes smokes as many as ten cigarettes a day.

☞ A learned professor has computed the distance the human voice would reach if it was as powerful in proportion to the size as that of the grasshopper. He states it at 1000 miles.

☞ Miss Agnes Richmond of Springfield died on Monday, of malignant pustule. She left home for a visit in Maine in the full bloom of youth. On Monday of last week a small pimple came on her under lip, which speedily developed into a malignant pustule, from the prostration of whose poison she died. What is the nature of this deadly disease is yet unsolved with any degree of certainty.

☞ In some French cities there are wine shops for women only, and the drunkenness among working women is said to be on the increase.

☞ Infanticide prevails to an alarming extent in Brooklyn.

☞ The Chicago Republican says that the negroes in the cotton States are able to accumulate from $500 to $3000 for one year's work, as their share of the growing crop.

☞ Pere Hyacinthe remains in Paris, living quietly with his sister, but working hard and watching with care the various events at Rome and elsewhere bearing upon the polity of the Roman Church.

☞ Over 2,000 persons have been added to the Cincinnati churches during the present revival.

☞ A Mrs. Morrison has been appointed Justice of the Peace in Montana, since the removal of the Agitator from this metropolis.

☞ Fifty murders were committed in the United States during the month of January.

GENERAL CONFERENCE IN BOSTON.

The church of the Lord Jesus Christ worshiping at Lowell Street Chapel, Boston, to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting:

Beloved in the Lord, believing that yet a little while and He that shall come will come, and will not tarry; and that the signs of the times indicate that we are among the predicted perils of the last days; and that we are rapidly approaching those scenes of final trouble such as never was, which shall convulse the world with sorrow and distress; we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ, and the preachers of his word who are interested in these momentous themes, without distinction of sect or name, to meet us at our place of worship, at the corner of Lowell and Causeway Streets, Boston, on Tuesday evening, April 5th, 1870, and to continue with us over the coming first day of the week:

To unite with us in worship and thanksgiving to God for his abundant mercies to all men, and to us who have learned his will, and tasted that he is gracious:

To listen to the proclamation of the truth of God for the edification of the church, and the preaching of the glad tidings of the kingdom at hand:

To exhort one another, and so much the more as we see the day approaching:

To invite sinners to Christ, the refuge from approaching wrath, pointing them to the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world:

To encourage each other in the great work, committed to us as a people, of proclaiming life and immortality through Christ alone, the resurrection of the dead, and the speedy coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

For these objects we invite our brethren and sisters, and the servants of the Lord, and shall make them welcome to our worship, our homes, and our hospitalities, trusting that we may thus be blessed and comforted together. And we desire the prayers of God's people that our gathering together may be to the praise and glory of our heavenly Father. And when the mighty voice shall be heard, saying, "Alleluia, for the Lord God omnipotent reigneth, let us be glad and rejoice, and give honor to him: for the marriage of the Lamb is come, and his wife hath made herself ready;" may we all be found arrayed in that righteousness which alone will insure admission to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

If delegates cannot come, represent yourselves by letter. Do not fail this time. Come, brethren, to this meeting, alive to every good work, and decide whether the Conference shall live and be a blessing in exerting a holy influence in converting men and spreading the truth; or shall it cease to be?

Evening Hours.

BY

E. P. Woodward.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11:6.

GOOD BOOKS.—No. 1.

"Of making many books there is no end." So said Solomon, even in those days of few books: and he said it apparently in the spirit of a man who had wearied himself with their perusal. And if he had reason to feel so then, what shall we say in this day of the Printing Press? Could Solomon see the flood of matter which is classed under the head of Literature, he would find his words verified, probably beyond his utmost conception. And if a person goes into one of our large bookstores, for the purpose of selecting books on almost any subject, he is very likely to feel somewhat as Solomon felt, that "much study is a weariness of the flesh."

With this vast accumulation of books, a wise discretion is needed to select those only which will best subserve our purposes. For the heaviest purse would soon become light if one were to purchase indiscriminately, and the brief period of human life would pass away before a half could be read. So that in the matter of time, as well as money, there is a great chance for economy.

There are those who appear to act somewhat on the principle of the law student, who ordered a library by the cubic foot. They buy every book they see, and then take pains to find more. This is all very well if a library is being selected for general use, or simply as a collection. But otherwise it is simply useless.

Having been asked many times, "What shall I read?" it may not be amiss to spend a portion of our Evening Hours talking over this matter. And if the ideas here presented shall be of service to any one, the time will not be mis-spent.

In the first place, find out what kind of books you want. You can't read everything, even if you had everything. A friend of mine was once picking up books preparatory to leaving the city, and after collecting quite a number, he remarked that there were many more he wished to buy; and when asked what they were, he said, "I don't know till I see them." And perhaps that remark would illustrate the principle on which many persons select books. And he will very likely find, some day or other, that he has on hand a large amount of material, which he has neither the ability nor the inclination to use.

When we study, we should undoubtedly have a definite object in view. When we work, there should be some particular purpose to be accomplished. And as the selection of books must determine somewhat the direction and extent of future reading and study, it is of paramount importance that we have a well defined purpose in view. A purposeless accumulation of books, like property or education obtained without an object, is at the best of little value, and with difficulty made available. Life is so short, and so large a portion of it consumed in sleep, eating, recreation, and necessary labor, that with rare exceptions, and these almost invariably among those of large means, even comparative perfection can be attained only in one department. And any thing which tends to scatter the mental energies, will diminish their strength and efficiency. The practice of buying and reading books without an object in view, not only has this effect, but tends to produce the same result in other departments. Men acquire loose, unprofitable habits of thinking, and their practice is accordingly modified more or less.

Men usually read merely as a pastime. This is proper enough, to some extent, but there is great danger of overstepping the bounds. Almost every one loves play better than work, mentally as well as physically, however much it may be denied. But that is no reason why play should be life's great work. But with a purpose in view, reading will cease to be play, and become a cheerful, attractive portion of life's labors. And after the years have gone by, the hour each day spent in systematic reading, with an object in view, will surely tell. Though you may read less than the person of leisure, you will be more likely to remember what you do read, and to use what you remember. It does not indicate wisdom to be able to say, "I have forgotten more than you ever knew." Some of the best informed persons have read comparatively little.

And not only decide as to the general, but also as to the specific character of your books. If you want books of history, determine to what particular branch of history you will give your special attention; of course having reference to the object for which you study history. In short, find out definitely and particularly just what you want to do, and you have obtained the first requisite for a correct judgment respecting the materials to be used. There is nothing which will take the place of this.

Earthquakes.

We are having a rich treat in Boston this year in the shape of a course of geological lectures, under the auspices of the Boston Society of Natural History, by Wm. T. Brigham, which, for interest, variety, modest and unassuming worth, and the almost utter absence of dogmatic assertion with respect to theories unproved, cannot easily be excelled. The lecturer is evidently honest, and consequently is obliged to acknowledge in very many instances the complete inability of his favorite science to solve even some of the simplest problems in that realm. In several instances he gave the audience hints and suggestions which showed the great folly of drawing hasty conclusions with reference to the age of the world, the length of the human era, etc. Some of his ideas will be presented hereafter more fully. One point only now.

His subject, March 28th, was "Earthquakes." He gave a very vivid account of some of the phenomena and circumstances accompanying the most noted earthquakes, and the most commonly received theories as to their origin, adding that after all that had been said and written, as to the cause of these disturbances, it was "ALL CONJECTURE," at the same time stoutly denying that there is a particle of reliable evidence that earthquakes are preceded by signs which indicate the approaching calamity. One thing he said was rather startling. When speaking of the earthquake which was felt in New England the same year in which Lisbon was destroyed, he said that another one like that would without doubt destroy one half of Boston, and cost fifty thousand lives. The harmlessness of that one was due simply to the absence of high, top-heavy buildings, which at this day are so very common in all our large cities. As it was, multitudes of chimnies were thrown down, and some gable walls were thrown outwards. So that our fancied security in this country is all very well, only it is liable to be very suddenly and rudely broken. And judging by what can be seen of the buildings now going up, the lecturer's prophecy would be fulfilled with terrible certainty. But "our Father is at the helm."

PROGRAMME

FOR THE FESTIVAL

OF THE

FIRST CHURCH OF THE "DIPPERS;"

(REV. REUBEN CONFORMITY, D. D., PASTOR.)

TO BE HELD AT

Vanity Fair,

FRIDAY EVENING, FEB. 25, 1870.

ADMISSION FREE.

(N. B. A donation of twenty-five cents is expected from each of those who are present, for the benefit of the poor fellow who has generously offered his services as door-keeper.)

The 'object' of this Festival is, firstly and chiefly, to 'raise funds,' to be expended as follows:—To extinguish the debt contracted in building a house for the worship of Him who has commanded, 'Owe no man anything'; —Also to furnish the pews with soft and easy cushions on which the followers of the lowly Jesus—who had not where to lay his head—may sit without discomfort while the living truth of God's word is dispensed with, and on which they may recline while our unworthy Pastor addresses Him before whom angels bow, and archangels veil their faces;—Also to purchase a new organ, to aid in the worship of Him who is a Spirit, and can be worshiped only 'in spirit and in truth';—Also for the purchase of a bell to hang in the new belfry, (otherwise the money spent in the erection of the steeple will be lost) whereby we can direct sinners away from the church of our neighbors, the 'Sprinklers,' (who have no bell) to our own doors.

Also many other 'modern improvements' manufactured by Demetrius the silversmith, Alexander the coppersmith, and others, will be obtained as an additional inducement for our friends, Mr. Morality, Mr. Philanthropist, Mr. Good-man, Mr. Easy-to-please, Mr. Sceptic, Mr. Fickle-mind, Miss Gad-about, Mrs. Fashion-lover, and others, to honor the house of the High and Holy One with their occasional presence.

The reason for having it held on Friday is that, during the exercises of the evening, grab-bag, prize-tree, ring-cake, etc., etc., all the participants may bear in lively remembrance the sufferings of Him who died, as is supposed, on the afternoon of this day, to redeem us who in 'the time past of our life' 'wrought the will of the Gentiles' 'in revelings and banquetings,' and who hath said to us, 'Come out from among them, and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing.'

Another object of the Festival is to show that we are not behind our neighbors, the 'Sprinklers,' either in the beauty and taste displayed on similar occasions, or in the zeal and skill manifested in devising means to obtain a large amount of that 'filthy lucre,' the love of which is 'the root of all evil.'

Another object is that, 'if there come in those that are unbelievers,' they may behold the 'manner of spirit' which is in us, and seeing our good works, 'glorify our Father which is in heaven.' N. B. This is only an incidental purpose; and those who differ from us

Entered according to Act of Congress, in the year 1870, by A. E. Stone, in the Clerk's office of the District Court of the District of Massachusetts.

PROGRAMME.

respecting the truth of our religion, need not fear any annoyance from this source, for we shall strive to become 'all things to all men,' that we may 'by all means save some' (money).

It is hoped that all who attend will come early, and thereby have a better opportunity to purchase our 'wares;' thus not only benefiting themselves, but also giving us the incidental advantage of the trade. Those who wish to help the cause of the Lord, and have no money to spare, can furnish articles to be sold, (with their business cards attached) thus gaining the honor of the 'cheerful giver,' while we gain the amount received by the sale.

Come, friends; come, foes; come, one; come, all: the doors of God's house will be open, and 'whosoever will, let him come,' and partake of our good things freely, not 'without money and without price.'

PRIVATE NOTE TO CHRISTIANS.

Sinners are earnestly requested not to read this.

Certain of our brethren, among whom are Bro. Honesty, Bro. Hate-the-world, Bro. Fear-God, and Bro. Stand-for-Truth, not being 'conformed to this world' after the manner of the most of us, have created much trouble by affirming that this Festival is not of God, and that the means used to raise money are detrimental to good morals, by encouraging habits which prove the ruin of many, such as gambling and reveling and loose morals generally, citing instances where this is known to be the fact, as evidence that this Festival has the same tendency;—and that consequently the funds raised cannot be regarded as given to the Lord, nor likely to be blessed by the Lord; asserting that, since 'the earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof,' there can be no possible necessity for any such devices as grab-bags, prize-trees, wheels of fortune, or ribbon-bows, to obtain money to build a house for Him who 'dwelleth not in temples made with hands.' And they have had the bad taste to quote passages of Scripture like the following:—'Abstain from all appearance of evil'; 'Take heed lest by any means this liberty of yours become a stumbling-block to them that are weak'; 'but when ye so sin against the brethren and wound their weak conscience, YE SIN AGAINST CHRIST'; 'Whether, therefore, ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, DO ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD'; 'Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment.' But our Pastor has promised to spend an afternoon, in which he will take up these passages, and show conclusively that they were addressed simply to the early church, and so were not designed for this 'progressive age.' And for fear this may not be satisfactory to all, he will show the defects of our translation, and give a rendering of his own, which we trust will be embodied in the forthcoming Revision of the Scriptures by our Church. He will wisely ignore all passages of Scripture liable to be misconstrued in this connection; and after the necessary explanations are made, from the difficulty of finding a suitable passage in the Bible, will preach a short sermon from two passages found in the Apocrypha: 'For alms doth deliver from death, and shall purge away all sin'; Tobit iv. 10. 'Alms maketh an atonement for sins.' Ecclesiasticus iii. 30.

If it should turn out that money given here is of no account in the presence of Him who sitteth on the 'great white throne,' well,—we shall be very sorry, for we think all who give money to our church ought to be saved, but—the less said about it, the better; no one will be any worse off, and we—need the money.

P. S. The prayers of all baptized Christians are requested, that God will grant pleasant weather and favorable circumstances for a crowded house, and incline the hearts of many to come with full pockets, and remain till they have left all the money they bring with them.

N. B.—This is for Christians AND Sinners.—In regard to all money left with us by our friends, we shall 'ask no questions for conscience' sake,' either as to whom it rightfully belongs, how it was obtained, or in what business it was earned, provided said business is 'duly licensed by the United States.'

Any person having money on hand wet with the tears of widows and orphans, or stained with the blood of souls, will find this a favorable opportunity to get rid of the 'reward of iniquity.'

PROGRAMME.

ORDER OF EXERCISES.

The services will be opened with prayer by the Rev. Dr. Conformity, who will crave the special presence of the 'Man of Sorrows' on this occasion of rejoicing, when His followers shall have sweet communion and loving words with those who say in their hearts, 'We will not have this man to reign over us,' and with their lips, 'Where is the promise of His coming?' for it is designed that there shall be here 'no North, no South,' no saint, no sinner, 'neither Jew nor Greek,' but 'all one in the' pursuit of 'pleasure and PROFIT.'

The divine blessing will be invoked 'in the breaking of bread,'—and in the opening of the 'ring-cakes,' that all who purchase shares, may be rewarded for their liberality, either by obtaining the ring, or by a double portion of resignation from Heaven, and a disposition to 'try again.'

Prayer will be offered for all who attend, that they may have a profitable time, and invest largely in 'the merchandise of our Fair'; and that, after the Festival is over, they may go to their homes serious and thoughtful respecting their need of salvation from lives of vanity, gaiety and sin.

The blessing of God will be sought on all games of chance, so that all who are present may 'invest early, and invest often,'—all receiving more than they invest, and we receiving more than they do.

But especially will divine favor be implored that the 'object' of the Festival may be attained,—to 'raise funds' which are absolutely necessary to carry forward the work of Him who hath said, 'The silver is mine, and the gold is mine.' 'Every beast of the forest is mine, and the cattle upon a thousand hills.' 'THE WORLD IS MINE, and the fullness thereof.'

Prayer will be followed by the reading of a small portion of the Book of Esther,—selected from the fact that no reference is found there to the God of heaven, or His laws.

There will then be singing by the quartette club, (in which the congregation is not expected to join) led by Prof. Harmonioso. The selections have been made with great care, avoiding everything which might in any way be distasteful to Spiritualists, Infidels, Sceptics, Universalists or lukewarm Christians. All such hymns as the following will be omitted:

'O, for a closer walk with God,'
'Farewell, vain world, I bid adieu,'
'Blessed Bible! Book divine!'
'How firm a foundation, ye saints of the Lord,'
'How long shall Death, the tyrant, reign?'
'Lo! He comes, with clouds descending,'—

But there will be sung a large number of more modern, progressive and inspiring pieces, such as, 'Hail! Columbia!,' 'Nelly Bly,' 'John Brown,' 'The Cottage by the Sea,' etc.,—the singing being accompanied by appropriate instruments, such as were used at a Festival mentioned in history, when 'all the people heard the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of music, and fell down and worshiped the Golden Image that the king had set up.'

THE WHEEL OF FORTUNE will revolve at various times, by which will be illustrated the words of the Wise Man, 'Cast in thy lot among us; let us all have one purse. My son, walk not thou,' etc. (See Proverbs, i. 10-19).

THE GRAB BAG will be filled with numerous unnecessary articles, and used as an example of the old adage, 'A fool and his money are soon parted.'

A PRIZE TREE, loaded with articles of beauty and utility, will present a chance for every one to 'double their money,'—provided they have any left.

RIBBON BOWS, of various styles and colors, will be kindly furnished to all gentlemen on entering, which they have full permission to wear on their coats during the evening. N. B. It is expected that each gentleman will hunt up the lady wearing a bow similar to his own, and pay for her supper. ☞ 'This is a goak.'

PROGRAMME.

A LARGE SHOE, filled with a live girl and several score of doll babies, will illustrate the sad history of the venerable 'Old woman who lived in a shoe.'

☞ The Festival will positively continue till all the babies are sold. 'Price ten cents.'

A POST OFFICE will be opened for the accommodation of those who wish to hear from their friends across the room. Charges reasonable: 'Only twenty-five cents.'

KISSING. The committee of arrangements have received several communications from other churches, earnestly advising us to try the plan of selecting the most beautiful ladies, to be kissed at 'twenty-five cents a smack.' One friend writes, 'Though some opposition was encountered, the ladies tried this method, and without trying anything further, raised the balance of money needed.' It is hoped this will not be necessary, as it might prove a new source of trouble from our friends, Bro. Honest and Co.

There will also be a large assortment of Yankee notions, knick-knacks, etc., which we expect will be sold, as the tables will be attended by the handsomest girls to be found, who will use in this good cause, all the arts natural to their sex, in persuading the young men to buy. Purchase early before everything is sold.

Services will be held in this house every Sunday, and our friends are invited to come and listen to the words of our Rev. Pastor, who will endeavor to preach in manner and matter so as to please all who have patronized this Festival.

And may the God of truth guide us and keep us all safely till the coming of the next Festival, is our prayer.

Committee of Arrangements, { Elder Demas, Deacon Iscariot, Father Apoll—yon.

P. S. A gentleman has just offered us fifty dollars for the use of the rest of this page, to advertise some sort of Show, we should judge; though it is a question whether it will pay to read it.

THE COMING FESTIVAL.

And I saw a GREAT WHITE THRONE, and HIM that sat upon it, from whose face the earth and the heaven FLED AWAY.

And I saw THE DEAD, small and great, STAND BEFORE GOD: and the Books were opened. And another Book was opened, which is the BOOK OF LIFE, and the dead were judged out of those Books, according to their works. And whosoever was not found written in the Book of Life, was cast into the LAKE OF FIRE. And I saw

A NEW HEAVEN, AND A NEW EARTH:

for the first heaven, and the first earth were PASSED AWAY. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and

THERE SHALL BE NO MORE DEATH,

neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are PASSED AWAY. And He that sat upon the throne said, 'BEHOLD, I MAKE ALL THINGS NEW.'

And the city had no need of the sun, neither of the moon, to shine in it: for THE GLORY OF GOD did lighten it, and the LAMB is the light thereof. And the nations of them which are saved, shall walk in the light of it, and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day; for

THERE SHALL BE NO NIGHT THERE.

And there shall in no wise enter into it ANYTHING that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or MAKETH A LIE: but they which are written in the Lamb's Book of Life. And

THERE SHALL BE NO MORE CURSE,

but the throne of God, and of the Lamb, shall be in it; and his servants shall serve him: and they shall see his face, and his name shall be in their foreheads. And there shall be no night there: for they need no candle, neither light of the sun; for the Lord God giveth them light.

AND THEY SHALL REIGN FOREVER.

He which testifieth these things, saith, 'Surely

I COME QUICKLY.'

For the World's Crisis.

A PILGRIM'S BUDGET.

BRO. GRANT:—It is time to write up the journals and give a brief account of myself. For some years I had cherished a desire to take at least one hasty glance at the "broad acres" of the great and growing West. This desire has just been gratified. Declining, for the time being, the many kind invitations received from the New England States, I started westward about the first of January, 1870.

BUCHANAN, MICH.

This is a thriving village of about three thousand inhabitants. Here I found a neat and commodious building, where Elder J. V. Himes and William, his son, are accustomed to drive the "editorial quill," and where several other busy hands are employed in issuing the "Advent Christian Times," and as many books and tracts as their too limited means will allow. I found, also, a very neat and appropriate church edifice, and a membership of about two hundred. For just two weeks I tried to preach the gospel in its plainness and purity. Though there was some melting and confessing, I did not witness those marked results which my yearning heart desired. I trust the day of destiny will reveal the fact that those meetings were not wholly in vain.

BRODHEAD, WIS.

After spending a blessed Sabbath in Chicago, Ill., I went to Brodhead, to attend the "ministerial conference," at the earnest solicitation of several brethren. I found myself in a beautiful village of some two thousand five hundred, situated in a delightful section of country. I need not speak of the conference, as you have had a full report, furnished by Wm. Sheldon, the secretary. I remained a few days after the conference adjourned, to assist Bro. Sheldon in some extra meetings. Several were converted, and several more were burdened with conviction when I left. I found some precious souls there, who reminded me of certain brethren who fell upon Paul's neck with breaking hearts and flowing tears, when the hour of separation came. There were others, however, who would not be greatly injured by a fresh anointing from above!

CHICAGO, ILL.

The next two weeks I spent in this great city of three hundred thousand people. I labored with Bro. Ramsay in the Advent Christian Chapel. We saw a number converted; though I felt like saying, What are these among so many? When we look out upon the careless, prayerless myriads that are pressing on to their terrible destiny of destruction, we groan over the meagerness of our success, and are almost tempted to give up in despair. But this will never do. We must gird up our loins for the work, and occupy till Jesus comes. I found a goodly number of earnest christians in Chicago. There is quite a mixture of nationalities, and some diversity of views, in the Advent Society, which occasionally produces a jarring note; but on the whole the meetings are characterized with fervor and crowned with success. A new mission has recently been opened on the north side, with encouraging prospects. There is room enough in this great and wicked city for a dozen missionaries to operate, without treading on each other's toes. May God raise them up and set them in motion!

CLINTON, IOWA.

This is a thriving young city of seven thousand, on the western bank of the Mississippi, at the point crossed by the great North Western Rail Road. On Sunday, March 6th, I opened the gospel battery by preaching two square sermons on the doctrine of immortality. It was the first time that note was ever struck in Clinton. I opened the door for questions, and received a volley of queries and objections, which indicated that a lively interest had been awakened. Bro. R. W. Wilson, formerly of Rochester, N. Y., was my faithful co-laborer. He rendered valuable assistance through the entire campaign, and proved himself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. God has evidently called him to preach, and he is going at it. Our meeting continued over two weeks with increasing interest. We gave them a strong mixture of doctrinal, experimental, and practical truth. Some were converted and reclaimed, and others greatly revived, encouraged, and edified. The barriers of prejudice were so broken down that some who opposed us strongly on the start, were our warmest friends at the close. One man arose in the meeting and charged us with being false teachers because one star—the immortality of the soul—had been dropped from our flag. In less than a week he arose to tell another story. He said he had been searching the Scriptures; and had concluded that not only was there a star wanting in the flag of the popular churches, but the flag itself was only half unfurled!

On Sunday, March 20th, I baptized eight persons in the cold waters of the Mississippi, the brother referred to among the number. We organized a promising little society of twenty-four members. They were "of one heart and one soul." More will join soon. R. W. Wilson was elected as their pastor, with a recommendation that he be ordained at the earliest opportunity. Provision was made for future meetings, which, I trust, will be crowned with rich results. One of the leading ministers of the place charged us with preaching "the worst kind of infidelity," and publicly called our meetings a "side show;" but I felt like saying, "None of these things move me." Many expressed their deep gratitude that we ever brought them such a message. The blessed Bible will henceforth possess new beauty, richness, harmony, and power. It is a strange type of infidelity that makes people understand and love their Bibles better than ever before! The people in Clinton treated me kindly, and urged me to make my home in the West. This I am willing to do, if God shall so direct.

I am now on my way to Rochester, N. Y., where I hope to see my wife and three little girls, after an absence of nearly twelve weeks. I expect to remain home a few weeks, and then push out again into the great harvest-field. I desire to go where the demands are most urgent. Let those who want me most indicate their desires, and I will do the best I can for all. O for divine direction!

ABLE ARTICLES.

The recent series of articles from the pen of William Sheldon possess so much merit for their clearness, soundness, and strength, that I can hardly refrain from congratulating you on having your columns thus enriched. I am persuaded that the position so ably defended in those articles is more thoroughly scriptural, and hence less vulnerable, than any other. I hope the same pen will continue its telling strokes, in elucidating the great truths of scriptural Christianity..

GREEK TESTAMENT LOST.

I suppose I must have left my Greek Testament at some place, in my travels through New England last summer. Greenfield's edition, extra bound, with lexicon. If any brother has found it, I will thank him much for sending it to me by mail, as I need it to use. Grace be with all the scattered pilgrims.

Yours for the Kingdom,

A. A. PHELPS.

For the World's Crisis.

THE FUTURE STATE.

"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 PETER 3: 13.

By the word of the Lord and his promises, both in the Old and New Testaments, we are looking for a new state of things. Instead of a world filled with violence, we look for one filled with peace. Instead of sorrow, we shall have joy. We shall exchange our trials and afflictions for happiness and glory. Instead of sickness, pain, and death, we shall have health, life, and endless pleasure.

That this old earth is to be melted with fervent heat and the works therein contained burned up, and a new earth to be formed, and fitted up for the future abode of the saints, is plainly promised and foretold in the word of God. That sin will never enter there is assured us. The kingdom of Christ will be established on the new earth, and the saints will possess it forever and ever. The saints will inherit the new earth.

What a glorious inheritance is ours, if we endure to the end. No tempting enemy there. Every thing will be pure and holy. We are looking according to the word for these things soon to come to pass. Soon the heavens will roll together like a scroll, and the elements will melt with fervent heat.

Let us press on towards the kingdom. The day is just at hand; our trials will soon end, and we shall soon reap the full fruition of our hopes. Lord, help us to be faithful to the end, that we may reign with Jesus when he comes.

Gems.

— The power of a man is revealed in his casual talk. The die of his intellect is stamped upon his small coin. It is the spirit we put into our words which often reveals our true character. Happy is he who "offends not in word";—words may testify to the grace, health and beauty of our general existence.

— Think not that in the walk of faith all the trials, and conflicts, and afflictions of the wilderness have come to an end. The old Adam is not dead, though dying daily; but his last groan will be the first note of the song of triumph, "Death is swallowed up in victory."

— Leave all your matters in the hands of God, who performeth all things for you, and he will put into your hands what of them he would have you do, and show you, if you wait on him, when and how he would have you do them.

— Light conceits and flowers of rhetoric wrong the word more than they can please the hearer; the weeds among the corn make it look gay, but the farmer would have them all rooted out.

— Noah in all the wide world, and Lot in Sodom, were singular men. But in that precisely lay their honor and their safety. It is better to be in the ark with a few, than to be drowned with the rest for company.

— There are very many questions which may be started in regard to the doctrines and the prophecies of the Bible to which our best answer is, "The Lord knoweth how."

— Our graces, like evergreens, grow most in the low vale of affliction, even as stars are most luminous and lovely when nearest the horizon.

— Sour words dangerously tend to make the hearer sour. They create an atmosphere which he breathes, and the virus is likely to penetrate his soul, and make him sour too.

— The fiery darts of the wicked one may assail the child of God, but "no weapon that is formed against them shall prosper."

— The only way to be conquerors is to be "more than conquerors through Him that loved us."

— If you wish to be esteemed, be slow to perceive your own good qualities, and quick to appreciate those of others.

— Do not let the stumbling-blocks of adversity prove barriers, but stepping-stones to true honor.

— He is wise who knows the extent of his own ignorance.

— Every temptation is an opportunity of getting nearer to God.

— If you wish to be happy, endeavor to promote the happiness of others.

— If you wish to succeed on the journey of life, let honest integrity be your staff.

A NOBLE SPIRIT:

Or, doing as you would be done by.

DEAR CHILDREN:—I know you love to read the Crisis, and especially the column devoted to you. I can easily imagine how eagerly you look for your corner (the Children's Corner), and if it is left out how disappointed you feel.* I freely acknowledge I love the "Children's Corner" myself, and I think there are many of the good brothers ane sisters that do too. Why, we must all become as little children if we will be saved. I know you heartily thank Bro. Grant for so kindly remembering you as to set apart a column in his valuable paper for you; and by his permission I will occupy some of it in telling you another (the third) incident in Mary's school life. (Mary D—— of Virginia.)

Just four weeks before the close of school a Bible was offered as a prize to the class in spelling, of which Mary was a member, to be given to the one who should merit the greatest number of "head-marks."

The contest soon waxed warm between Mary and Elsie. Little Elsie studied hard, but she had to stay at home one day in every week to tend the baby while her mother went to a neighbor's to wash, and bring back food to keep them through the week. Now what do you think Mary did? I will tell you. She asked her mother if she might not bring Minnie (for that was baby's name), home on washing-day and take care of it. Her mother gladly consented, and also to take care of it while May, as he mother called her, went to school as usual.

At the end of the third week Elsie was one mark ahead; yet when washing-day came round Mary got up early, and got the baby so that Elsie could attend school that day. Elsie won she prize, but I shall always think Mary deserved it, although Elsie was a good girl. Mary's father attended the school when the prize was given, and presented his little daughter with a Bible, so much like the one Elsie received, you could not tell them apart without looking at the name. Elsie had no father to give her a Bible, and her mother was too poor to buy her one, so I will be satisfied with the way the contest ended. Be assured that Mary and Elsie are and ever will be the best of friends.

"My soul! what hast thou done for God?
Look o'er thy misspent years and see;
Sum up what thou hast done for God,
And then what God hath done for thee."

God does as much for the children as he does for men and women, and will you not try to do something for him? Try to make one heart happy every day. Oh! now while you are young write the golden rule indelibly on your heart. Speak kind words kindly. Do kind acts silently. Praying that the choicest of heaven's blessings may rest upon you, I bid you "good by." "God be with you!"

LETTER TO YOUNG PILGRIMS.

I have kept close house for several days owing to indisposition, but I determined still to execute all the missionary work that I could indoors. Therefore I took up my pen and wrote to several of the papers as I had promised to do, and one of my resolutions was, not to forget the children. I have a good many friends among the children, and have sent and received quite a lot of small letters. Still I cannot reach all of them except I apply to the printer to help me out. I find a share of the "Crisis" divided off, and called "The Children's Corner." Ah! I like that word I think a good many more children will read the paper on that account.

Methinks a good many of you reckon yourselves "pilgrims to the celestial city;" but what makes you? Is it because you have a good pious father, or a dear, devoted, praying mother? or have you really been praying for yourself? Have you asked the dear Saviour to forgive you all your sins, and save you by his own precious blood? If you are doing this, and keeping his commandments from day to-day, then indeed you are on the high road to everlasting happiness.

But perhaps some young reader will say, "Oh, I am too young to be a christian, and I shall wait awhile." Dear children, many have kept saying that till they were lost. Scarce any, who are old enough to read, are too young to understand how to love Jesus, and be saved at his coming; but the great trouble is, they so soon get pride into their hearts. They would like to be saved, but you know they do not like their young friends to think they are religious at all. They hardly dare let a friend know that they ever prayd in secret, or read their neat little Testament, to learn the will of the Lord. The little girls are paying great attention to dress, and desire to appear as near like some of Mamma's lady friends as possible. The boys are making great efforts to appear manly by saying and singing street songs, or repeating some wicked word they have heard by the wayside, while away from home influence.

Now, children, if you have any doubts about whether this kind of religion will save you or not, I would refer you to the Bible; or, as you may have Bunyan's "Pilgrim," you can find in that book a most faithful account of the kind of life we must lead to be found among the saved pilgrims. He tells us of some who thought they would be saved, but through sin and disobedience they could not get into the city at last. And so, too, with us. Whether little pilgrims or older ones, we have some watching and some working to do, or we shall not be owned as disciples.

I am glad to know that some of you are not afraid to do right, not ashamed to pray, and have your little meetings, not ashamed to honor father and mother, and honor Jesus too, by owning him anywhere.

But I am almost to the end of my letter, without acknowledging the receipt of the children's mites to the "Clinton Arch Mission," nor saying "God bless you" for your kind remembrance of our dear little school. Let me thank you all at once, and let each who have sent us, receive this as their receipt. If any more of the children think it would be a privilege to care for neglected little ones, do not wait till you feel richer, but do just as two dear little girls did last week. They heard of us through their papa, and each carried him five cents to send for them. Yes, little E—— and R——, it does help us lots to know that you cared five cents worth for us. A fine little boy writes us a neat little letter, enclosing a ten cent stamp; these came many hundred miles, and the Lord saw it all.

Another little pilgrim in the city did a thing which maybe some other boy would like for an example. He put up a nice package, which contained about twenty-five Sunday school papers, a good little assortment of tickets and cards, and last, but not least, a pack of envelopes, and quire of note paper, for the use of the Missionaries. These he arranged in a bundle, and pasted the particulars on the outside in this style:

GO TO SLEEP EARLY.

Many children, instead of being plump and fresh as a peach, are as withered and wrinkled as last year's apples, because they do not sleep enough. Some physicians think that the bones grow only during sleep. This I cannot say certainly; but I do know that those little folks who sit up late nights are usually nervous, weak, small, and sickly. The reason why you need more sleep than your parents is, because you have to grow and they do not. They can use up the food they eat in thinking, talking, and working, while you should save some of yours for growing. You ought to sleep a great deal; if you do not, you will in activity consume all you eat, and have none, or not enough, to grow with. Very few smart children excel, or even equal, other people when they grow up. Why is this? Because their heads, if not their bodies, are kept too busy; so they cannot sleep, rest, and grow strong in body and brain. Now, when your mother says, Susie, or Mary, or whatever your name may be, it is time to go to bed, do not worry her by begging to sit up "just a little longer." But hurry off to your chamber, remembering that you have a great deal of sleeping and growing to do to make you a healthy, happy, useful, man or woman.

A LITTLE BOY'S TRIAL.

At a recent communion season, a little boy of ten years remarked, in his testimony, he had many trials and temptations, but thanked the Lord he had been delivered out of them all. His father doubted if he understood the nature of trial, and on reaching home at the close of the service inquired of him when his last trial occurred, and in what it consisted. The little fellow thought a moment and said,

"Last Friday at school, the boys were scrambling for tins, and I pushed the one ahead of me so he could not stop soon enough to pick up his, and he punched me. The trial was to know whether I should fight him or not; but I concluded to walk away and leave him."

It is needless to add the father was convinced. What a lesson for older christians.

SPRINGLAND.

Wildly the storm beats over me now,
Sadly the sorrows of life o'erflow;
Tempests and heart-chills o'er visions wing,
O for perpetual Spring!

Oh—There's a land—a happy, sunny clime,
If I'm good, 'tis promised to be mine;
What then the howling tempest to me,
I shall the Springland see.

Winter and tempests fading away,
Darkness receding, dawnings of day,
Visions of Jesus coming to me,
I shall the Springland see.

Flowers immortal, Spring evermore,
Music enchanting swell on the shore;
Songs of the ransomed risen and free,
I shall the Springland see.

Sweet gliding rivers, angelic strains,
Fields ever blooming, Edenic plains;
Meetings and greetings there there shall be,
When we the Springland see.

THE COMING OF OUR KING.

The coming of Jesus is a precious theme, never ceasing to afford consolation and refreshment. It is not soon tiresome and exhausted of interest, but a perpetual fountain of joys; frontmost, midmost, and topmost, amid all hopes the most fruitful of themes, and lending sweetness to everything related to it. It stands a tower of glory amid Bible topics and promises, itself the best and fairest promise. Why is it unwelcome to many who profess a love for the Savior? Why is it disapproved, discouraged, disrelished, and dismissed, when, where, and by whom it should be welcomed, loved, cherished and defended? Why is it not eagerly received into Christian societies and associations as the most delightful subject of conversation? Why is it so hard and so rare to find an avenue or a means of its introduction into religious assemblies? Why is there such an array of opposition to it?

Alas! it is deemed an innovating and obtrusive theme. But it is sweet, grand and powerful, notwithstanding. Around it revolve a glorious array of vital Bible truths, and from it issue unspeakably important results. The coming of Christ is the great hope of the church, and, rightly understood, is her only hope and supreme necessity. It is not a subordinate concern, but first, single, and absolute, as a fixed condition to any and every future fruition beyond this life. Without it there can be no immortality, no eternal life. No wonder, then, it is of such towering proportions in the teachings of the word of God, and in the esteem of the rightly instructed believer. But in what a maze of darkness is the mass of Christian kind in our day involved respecting it! Darkness which is nevertheless disavowed and unperceived. Darkness in regard to related events both as signs and consequences; darkness in regard to the order and manner and time of the advent, a darkness which amounts, to a great extent, to a practical negation of the fact itself, and a practical neglect of the event in the very time and act of its nearly prepared and tremendously imminent advance. Why is it thus? and how long shall it be thus? Nevertheless, the wise can understand, and rejoice in the onward march of events, as couriers going just before the hour and power of the return of the High Priest and Prince of the people of God to reign forevermore.—Prophetic Times.

COMING EVENTS.

"Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness."—2 PET. 3: 1.

According to God's word, we are looking for the final consummation of the things spoken of in this chapter. Are we living as becometh men and women looking for such things? Do we believe that Jesus is soon coming to establish his everlasting kingdom, and reward his saints, and destroy his enemies. Do we believe the signs that mark his coming are in the past? Do we see that we are in the perils of the last days? Are we living in a day when men love pleasure more than God? When they have a form of godliness, but deny the power thereof? If so, what manner of persons ought we to be? Are we showing to the world by our daily lives that we believe these things? Are we doing all we can for our Master's cause? Are we improving every opportunity of doing good to our fellow men? Are we laboring together with God and one another for the salvation of the perishing around us? Do we love one another as brethren? Are we exhorting one another and encouraging one another by our words and actions? Are we keeping the unity of the Spirit? Do we ever allow any harsh words to be spoken to any one of the flock, thus causing hardness and division? We are truly living in a day when God's people should be united and active; when they should be one in christian love and sympathy; when every effort should be made to strengthen the confidence and courage of one another. We live in a time when the enemy is trying every art to divide and scatter the flock. He will leave no stone unturned that will cut asunder the bonds of christian love and fellowship. If he can destroy our confidence in one another, he will do so.

The great day of accounts is at hand, and it behooves us to see that we are in the path marked out in God's word, having our conversation in heaven from whence we look for Jesus to come the second time, without sin unto salvation. May we all see to it that we are living by faith on the Son of God, and doing his will daily; that we may have an abundant entrance into his his kingdom.

PROPHETIC TIME TABLE.

The route from old Babylon to the New Jerusalem is very accurately given on a sacred time-table, with intervening stations, and our present whereabouts on the line, approximately, is not a matter of conjecture, but of absolute certainty. We know that all of these great stations are in the rear, and the celestial city comes next. If our watches are not precisely right, we shall enter the depot of Glory precisely on New Jerusalem time; and if it is not yet certain how near our time approximates a harmony with that, it is certain that we have passed the right stations, and must be near the city of eternal repose. Let every heart be on fire with holy animation, and heavenly zeal. The long journey is almost ended. The perils of the route will soon be over.

Angels await us at the great depot, for they know that this train, loaded with holy passengers, is almost due, and the arrival of this train is one of the events that the "angels desired to look into," and they have not lost their interest yet, nor are they ignorant of the time, for even the devils know something about when future fates will be administered, else they never would have inquired of Jesus, "Art thou come to destroy us before the time?" They knew the judgment was not then due, hence they must have known when it would come; and the saints ought to know as much as devils, seeing all their information is derived from revelations to the saints, and not to themselves. FACTS versus THEORIES.—No. 2.

8. It is a fact that our Lord Jesus Christ, being a Jew after the flesh, a lineal descendant of the seed of David, and of the tribe of Judah, was circumcised on the eighth day after his natural (fleshly) birth, according to the Mosaic ritual, by which he became obligated to keep that entire covenant law, and do all of it; and, blessed be God, he did do it, did keep, did magnify the law and make it honorable; filled it full in every jot and tittle; and yet, that law slew him, because he consented to take on my, your, our, poor, sin-condemned nature—the seed of the woman, the divine Logos, made flesh. Put to death in, by, or through that flesh, by that righteous, holy law of God that, because of its infraction, puts all sinful flesh to death; the Adamic sin, the Adamic penalty, the "one sin" that brought the one death, that no flesh should glory in his sight; for "by the works of the law shall no flesh be justified." Put to death in the flesh; justified in, by, or through the Spirit.

O praise the Lord! O my soul, let all that is within me praise his holy name; for just as I am writing these words, on this 21st day of Feb., at 11 o'clock P. M., the stillness of the mid-winter night is broken by the strong cries and prayers of some poor soul just across the way, in our village, making supplication to God for mercy; seeking forgiveness of sin by justification of the Spirit, through faith in our Lord Jesus Christ; who, having been raised from the dead, is become the author of eternal salvation unto all and upon all that call upon his name. Ride on, O thou conquering cherub, ride on gloriously in thy warfare against sin and Satan's legion hosts, until in all the universe of God our Father there shall not be left a vestige of that darkling, blighting curse that once laid thee in its silent, cold, and dark domain. O, my Lord, let, oh! let that wailing cry for sin go up from every house, and every heart, and every tongue, in all our village, and in every place in all the land; and let, oh! let thy people gird themselves with truth, and fit them for the conflict, as co-workers with thee, for the ineffable, incoming glory so soon to be revealed.

"Justified of the Spirit," condemned of men, approved of God. Amen. During all the days in which our Lord sojourned among men in the flesh, he carefully observed that fleshly, fourth commandment. He kept that Jewish Sabbath strictly; and the apostle gives us the reason why he so kept it: "Now I say, that the heir, as long as he is a child, differeth nothing from a servant, though he be lord of all; but is under tutors and governors until the time appointed of the father. Even so we, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world; but when the fulness of the time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons. And because ye are sons, God hath sent forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father. Wherefore thou art no more a servant, but a son; and if a son, then an heir."—Gal. 4: 1–7.

"Then said Jesus to those Jews which believed on him, If ye continue in my word, then are ye my disciples indeed; and ye shall know the truth, and the truth shall make you free. They answered him, We be Abraham's seed, and were never in bondage to any man; how sayest thou, Ye shall be made free? Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin. And the servant abideth not in the house for ever; but the Son abideth ever. If the Son therefore shall make you free, ye shall be free indeed."—John 8: 31–36.

"Stand fast therefore in the liberty where with Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage. Behold, I Paul say unto you, that if ye be circumcised, Christ shall profit you nothing. For I testify again to every man that is circumcised, that he is a debtor to do the whole law. Christ is become of no effect unto you, whosoever of you are justified by the law; ye are fallen from grace. For we through the Spirit wait for the hope of righteousness by faith. For in Jesus Christ neither circumcision availeth anything, nor uncircumcision; but faith, which worketh by love."—Gal. 5: 1–6.

"Is the law, then, against the promises of God? God forbid; for if there had been a law given which could have given life, verily righteousness should have been by the law. But the Scripture hath concluded all under sin, that the promise by faith of Jesus Christ might be given to them that believe."—Gal. 3: 21–22.

"Wherefore, my brethren, ye also are become dead to the law by the body of Christ; that ye should be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, that we should bring forth fruit unto God. For when we were in the flesh, the motions of sin, which were by the law, did work in our members to bring forth fruit unto death."—Rom. 7: 4–5.

"So then, they that are in the flesh cannot please God. But ye are not in the flesh, but in the Spirit, if so be that the Spirit of God dwell in you. Now if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his. And if Christ be in you, the body is dead because of sin; but the Spirit is life because of righteousness."—Rom. 8: 8–10.

"But now we are delivered from the law, that being dead wherein we were held; that we should serve in newness of spirit, and not in the oldness of the letter."—Rom. 7: 6.

"For the love of Christ constraineth us; because we thus judge, that if one died for all, then were all dead; and that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again. Wherefore, henceforth know we no man after the flesh; yea, though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more. Therefore if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things are passed away; behold, all things are become new."—2 Cor. 5: 14–17.

THE DIFFERENCE.

But no sooner was Jesus risen from the dead, after having been "put to death in the flesh," than all his observance of that old covenant law,—that "carnal commandment,"—ceased, and ceased forever; "For the priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law." In conformity with this change, we see Jesus no longer in the Jewish temple, neither in their synagogues, on and observing the seventh day; but we do see him on the "first" day of the week sitting down to meat with two of the disciples, at Emmaus; and then and there making himself known to them by administering to them the Lord's Supper. "And it came to pass, as he sat at meat with them, he took bread, and blessed it, and brake, and gave to them."—Luke 24: 30. In this, our Lord left us an example, for he is our pattern; but not content with this, he repairs to Jerusalem whither the two had preceded him. "And they rose up the same hour, and returned to Jerusalem, and found the eleven gathered together, and them that were with them, saying, The Lord is risen indeed, and hath appeared to Simon. And they told what things were done in the way, and how he was known of them in the breaking of bread." Luke 24: 33–36. "Then the same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut where the disciples were assembled for fear of the Jews, came Jesus and stood in the midst, and saith unto them, Peace be unto you."—John 20: 19.

He met with them, and blest them also; thus sanctioning their assembling themselves together on this first day of the week, not for ordinary purposes, because they had no reason to have "fear of the Jews" from the observance of any usual custom; but contrary to their custom, and contrary to the custom of some in our day, assembled to comfort and "exhort one another."

Now this is all in perfect harmony with the Bible doctrine concerning man's mortal nature, and our faith predicated upon it, how that the flesh life (or human soul) is in the blood, and is in penal forfeiture to a transgressed law of Deity, in consequence of which Christ died; yielded up his natural life; "poured out his soul.[human] unto death"; or his mortal, human soul DIED TO OR BY SIN, and he never took it again; but was raised from the dead by the power of an endless life; that eternal life which was with God from the beginning, over which (life) this decalogue commandment never had power at all.

"For there is verily a disannulling of the commandment going before for the weakness and unprofitableness thereof. For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." "But now hath he obtained a more excellent ministry, by how much also he is the mediator of a better covenant, which was established upon better promises. For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second. For finding fault with them, he saith, Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, when I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and with the house of Judah; not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day when I took them by the hand to lead them out of the land of Egypt; because they continued not in my covenant, and I regarded them not, saith the Lord. For this is the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people."—Heb. 7: 18–19; 8: 6–10. "Not in tables of stone, but in fleshly tables of the heart."—2 Cor. 3: 3.

Therefore, as we also are "crucified with Christ," and by sin "dead to the world," and have been buried out of the world, but risen also with Christ to walk (or live) a new life (by the Spirit) in him, we are no longer under law, but under favor, and are under no obligation to observe days, and months, and times, and years. "Let no man, therefore, judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of a holy day, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath days; which are a shadow of things to come; but the body is of Christ."

NOTE.—By referring to Ex. 24, and reading consecutively from thence to chapter 32, it will be found that the entire tabernacle arrangement was predicated upon the decalogue covenant, not excepting the Aaronic or Levitical priesthood; and Moses was duly instructed thereunto before he came down from Mount Sinai; and the fourth article in that covenant was a speciality for and to the children of Israel; consequently all this argument hinged upon the distinction of "law of ordinances" and "law of commandments," is neither more nor less than human sophistry.

"And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore, for it is holy unto you; every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon Mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God."—Ex. 32: 12–18.

As we have shown already, the "book of the law" was subsequently superadded.

For the World's Crisis.

I LOVE THEE STILL.

Dangers beset my pathway round,
While passing o'er enchanted ground;
And fierce temptations oft arise,
And darkest clouds obscure the skies.
In vain I hope for kind relief,
Till in thy ears I tell my grief,
And cry, submissive to thy will,
I love thee, Lord, I love thee still.

When waves of trouble round me roll,
And keenest anguish rends the soul;
While Satan would with fiendish art
More sorely try the stricken heart;
Then in my time of greatest need,
Thy precious promises I'll plead,
And say amid life's direst ill,
I love thee, Lord, I love thee still.

But still the clouds around me lower,
And I am left in Satan's power;
My Savior hides his smiling face,
And doth not manifest his grace.
My faith, though tried, would eager clasp
Thy promises with firmer grasp,
And while I wait thy blessed will,
I love thee, Lord, I love thee still.

But when the clouds have passed away,
And brightly shines the dawning day,
My voice in grateful song I'll raise,
And sing my great Deliverer's praise.
Thy loving kindness I'll proclaim
To-day, forever, still the same;
And breathe, while peace my heart doth fill,
I love thee, Lord, I love thee still.

For the World's Crisis.

"WORSHIP GOD."—Rev. 22: 9.

Worship consists in paying a due respect, veneration and homage to the Deity, under a sense of an obligation to him; and this internal respect is to be shown by external acts. Private worship should be conducted with self-abasement, supplication for ourselves and others, especially our enemies, hungering and thirsting after righteousness. It should be frequent and regular. Some have acknowledged the propriety of private worship, but objected to that of public, yet without sufficient reasons. Christ attended public worship, "and he closed the book, and he gave it again to the minister, and sat down, and the eyes of all them that were in the synagogue were fastened upon him."—Luke 4: 20. He prayed with his disciples. "And it came to pass about an eight days after these sayings, he took Peter, John and James, and went up into a mountain to pray."—Luke 9: 28. He has promised his presence to social worshipers: "For where two or those are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst of them."—Matt. 18: 20.

Public worship is of great utility. It gives christians an opportunity of openly professing their faith and love to Christ. It affords an excellent example to others, and excites them to fear God. It should be solemn. The Psalmist says: "God is greatly to be feared in the assembly of the saints, and to be had in reverence of all them that are about him." Ps. 89: 7. Cheerful, and not with forbidding aspect, enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise. Be thankful unto him, and bless his name; for the Lord is good; his mercy is everlasting. Psalms 4 and 5.

It should be sincere and not hypocritical. "Woe unto you, Scribes and Pharisees, hypocrites; for ye shut up the kingdom of heaven against men; for ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in."—Matt. 33: 13.

Do not be late to the place of worship. It shows a state of lukewarmness. It is a disturbance to both minister and people. It is negligence, carelessness and slothfulness, and is generally owing to late rising. We arise early through the week, and then rob God Sunday morning, by drawing away our time in bed. How can we enjoy a devotional frame of mind, and so often spoil the devotion of others. May the Lord help us to be wise in season, refrain from evil, do good, and be saved when he comes. Amen and amen.

For the World's Crisis.

WHICH OF THE TWO?

Which is the best world; the one where men say christians live in a state of continual happiness, and the devil, with numerous other devils, at the same time are tormenting a countless number of their fellow beings in endless life in misery; or the world as the Bible has it, where the devil and all his followers are destroyed, and all believers in Christ are forever free from sorrow, pain and death? B. KNEPPER.

THE GENERAL COUNCIL, ETC.

The Œcumenical Council is now arresting the attention of the world. Day by day, step by step, the public press follows the Roman conclave in its never-ending progress, and with the usual ill success. The public press has long been degraded and stupefied by the love of filthy lucre, or, at least, with secular ambition. It cares everything for the profits and politics of the hour, and nothing for eternal truth. It is, therefore, invariably blinded in all its efforts at forecasting the future. Whether the Pope be infallible may be a question, but there is no question at all as to one case of infallibility—the infallible blundering of the public press. What have we learned, or what can we foresee, with column after column from our "special correspondents" at Rome? Absolutely nothing. We can neither discover whether Papal infallibility will be carried by a majority, nor what will be the ultimate effect should infallibility command the majority. In this case, as in all others, we shall gain more light from the word of God than from all the brilliant tapers of our "special correspondents" combined into one. No artificial illumination was ever equal to the solitary light-giver of the skies.

Long has the idea been spreading abroad, and widely has it been spread, that man is a self-dependent being, a god in flesh and blood, all-sufficient to himself. Human perfectibility is the grand apostasy of the age, and sets up man as a deity against the only living God. Man commenced as a monkey, say some great authorities, and from a monkey he has developed into what we now call a man. This can easily be proved by going back to the happy days of our innocent childhood. While still in the nursery we hear ourselves called, by way of endearment, "You little monkey!" This is seldom or never spoken in anger, but in moments of overflowing fondness. This applying the word "monkey" to a child in a complimentary sense, proves the innate conviction that men were originally apes, and have gradually developed into men. This sublime idea did not originate from Darwin or from Huxley, but from the philosophers of the nursery. And the originality must be awarded to them. Having already expanded from a monkey to a man, what is to prevent a man from expanding from a man to a God? First will come the angelic stage, and afterwards the divine one. Into this heap of combustible materials the doctrine of Papal Infallibility will be cast, like fire into a powder magazine. An explosion will follow which will blow to pieces the last stronghold of modesty. If one man is voted infallible, a precedent will instantly be established in favor of all mankind. It is an old saying, that "what man has done man can still do." And the saying is equally good, that "what one man has reached other men can reach." Here is an instalment of perfectibility which will be an earnest of full payment. The present age is by no means a worshiper of the priesthood; it will not allow the clergy to monopolize perfection. "If the clergy of Rome have ascribed perfection to a priest, we will ascribe perfection to a layman." So will the people of the world defiantly exclaim, "You have got your infallible priest, and we will have our infallible man of the age." Once open the way to the fashionable doctrine of infallibility, and you know not where it will stop. It will pass by the priest as mediæval and obsolete, and will place its hands upon some unanointed head. Once exhibit to the world perfection in living flesh and blood, and the world will raise up a rival after its own heart. There have been Popes and anti-Popes, and there will be infallibles and anti-infallibles. The crown of infallibility will hover in the air, will flutter up and down till it has descended upon some head a little loftier than the rest.

In plain words, if once Papal infallibility be established, it will be impossible to arrest the idea of human perfection, or to stop short at the Vatican. The vote of the clergy weighs nothing in these days beyond the vote of the laity. The people of Europe will not rest until they have got an infallible of their own, If it were only in opposition to clerical assumption, the laity of Europe will set up an infallible layman against an infallible Pope. Then will follow all the feuds of Pope and Anti-pope, of infallible against infallible, of a perfect political chief against a perfect High Priest. Each faction will cry up its own champion as the incarnation of infallibility, and the silver voice of the conclave will be drowned in the stormy roar of the multitude.... Then will the numbers and the strength on one side be compared with the strength and numbers on the other side, and the infallible high Priest be found utterly helpless when contrasted with his unclerical opponent. Numbers and strength will, of course, be in favor of the infallible champion of the laity; and perfection will be transferred from the Vatican to the capital of some victorious Cæsar.

Now, the consequences of setting up an infallible layman will be far worse than those which arise from the infallibility of the priest. In the first place it will be an accumulation of evil, for the infallibility of the priest will still remain as a spiritual doctrine superadded to the infallibility of the Cæsar as a political one. Little harm was ever done by the rival infallibilities of the Popes and the Anti-popes, for in that case the infallibilities were contrary to one another, and pulled the world in two opposite directions. That was the neap-tide season of Anti-christian error, when the Pope and the Anti-pope—like the sun and moon—acted one against the other, and made the tide of apostasy ebb and flow with the least possible variation. But when the infallible Cæsar shall be set up, the infallible Roman Pontiff will be his dependant and his vassal. No Pontiff can ever maintain the sovereignty of Rome without the aid of foreign bayonets. To the end of time he must be subservient to the Cæsar. The spiritual Infallible must bow down to the temporal one; the two infallibilities must stand side by side, and draw the tide of nations in one political direction. Then will begin the spring-tide hour of Anti-christian apostasy. The imperial sun and the Pontifical moon will act in conjunction upon the stormy waves, and the spring-tide high-water mark of iniquity will be reached. It will no longer be Pope and Anti-pope neutralizing each other in opposition, but infallible and infallible acting together in conjunction.

Nor will this be all. For an infallible Cæsar is far more extensively dangerous than an infallible high priest. The priest must keep to his own bounds. He can act only on the interior world, and on the consciences of mankind. But conscience in these days has shrunk to the compass of some stagnant pool, too shallow and diminutive to feel the influence of the tidal force. Whoever saw a pond affected by the tides? But when the infallible Cæsar shall be united with an infallible Pontiff the case will be far different. The temporal Cæsar acts not upon the narrow conscience, but on the wide-spread ocean of mankind—upon all its currents and its tides—upon its ambition, its pride, its avarice, and its fears. On this vast expanse the infallible Cæsar will act with all his powers, as the heavenly bodies on the surface of the ocean. All men will feel his influence, and all but the people of God will be drawn after him to the high-water mark. The infallible Cæsar will act upon the exterior, and the infallible high priest on the interior, and stir up the ocean waves from their utmost depths, foul and discolored, to break upon "the high shores of this world."

How long it may take to effect this it is impossible to say. It may happen in a moment, when once the infallibility of the Pope has been voted by a majority. The world at large utterly detests priestcraft, and the announcement of an infallible high priest may be followed without delay by a most decided movement in favor of an infallible man of the people. People against priest is the watchword of the age—the popular outcry of the day. And to allow the priest to be exalted to infallibility, while the man of the people is still groaning under the infirmities of nature, is a thing not to be borne. When one sister marries a giant, the other will not be satisfied with a dwarf. The tendency of the age will from thenceforth be decided in the direction of infallibility, and all that will then be necessary will be the apparition of some man of supreme good fortune. Such a man will be ready-made for infallibility, and will require only a little shaping and polishing to produce a perfect specimen of perfection. A few trifling weaknesses will be overlooked, like the petty roughnesses of some gigantic image; and all will bow down to the golden idol—not only that which Nebuchadnezzar shall have made, but of Nebuchadnezzar himself. Everything is ripe for the proclamation of infallibility. All that is now wanting is the provocation and the man. The provocation will come from the Roman conclave when it has announced the infallibility of the high priest, and the right man in the right place is never far behind when the opportunity has arisen.

Our ally across the water has already begun the career of Cæsarian infallibility. Having, first, by the aid of his prefects, secured a safe majority in the chambers, he proceeded next to proclaim himself a Liberal. He grants a free constitution when he has made sure that the constitutional majority shall be on his own side. Some men have made their fortunes by selling spirituous liquors, and (when their fortune was made) have joined the Temperance Society. They gained at once the credit of sobriety and the profits of intemperance. The French sovereign, in a similar way, has gained the credit of liberalism and the advantages of absolute power. He first ties the hands of the French Chambers, and then allows them to beat him as much as they please. He has most evidently bought over that wretched publication the Daily Telegraph—a paper notorious for tawdry sensationalism and blundering half-literature. We have before us an extract from that paper, in which it is announced that, "fixing his eyes upon the pattern of Constitutional liberty under which England has long been so great and happy, the French emperor is now honestly striving to bestow upon his countrymen a parliamentary system, and a constitution government not unlike to our own." This is a paragraph not unworthy of the Daily Telegraph, and unworthy of common sense.

How can a country possess a free constitution while the constitution-makers are elected by the agents and vassals of the sovereign. The French prefects are appointed by the imperial government; they are removable at pleasure; they are, therefore, mere agents of the throne. Out of the whole multitude of prefects in France only eight have been removed, just to save appearances, while all the rest continue still as subservient as before. But he has gained his object. He has assumed the character of a constitutional sovereign, and has blinded men's eyes like the eyes of the Syrian army. The Syrians mistook Samaria for Dothan, and Elisha for a military "guide;" and the European public mistakes France for a free country, and Napoleon for a constitutional monarch. The Telegraph has already begun the song of jubilee at home, and the people of Germany have raised the cry, "Give us as much liberty as they enjoy in France!" All this is just what we might have expected.

"Deceivers and deceived" is the Scriptural description of the "last days." And the words of St. Paul are verified before our eyes. He first secures the guns, the stores, and the garrison, and then liberally surrenders the fortress to the besieging army. The besiegers enter the fortress, and find the guns wheeled round, and brought to bear upon themselves.

Now, all this seems a preparation for the full development of a personal anti-christ, and for the chief of the apostasy. It does not even seem to be, but it is actually a preparation. An infallible High Priest provokes this priest-abhorring age to set up in opposition an infallible political leader. But who so worthy of infallibility as the man who has created a free government of his own accord, and without the delay almost of an hour. It was but "ask and have" in dealing with so liberal a heart. And who so well prepared to keep up the claim of infallibility as the master of a million bayonets? The Pope will need should his infallibility be disputed; but the Emperor will make good his claim by the infallibility of his new guns. His fallibility of judgment will be supplemented by the precision of his guns. If he be not the very man, he is at least preparing the way for the man who is to assume the crown and sceptre of infallibility. He will leave spiritual infallibility to the Pope, because it is nothing but an idea; while he will grasp temporal infallibility for himself, because it is a splendid reality. Besides, the Pope is dependent altogether upon France, and he will, therefore, only [illegible] the "crown" with the French sovereign. The infallible High Priest will unite with the infallible Cæsar, and their united perfections will gather round them all the fanatics and infidels of the Roman world. The Pope will have the fanatics, the Emperor the infidels, and the Anti-christian apostasy will have both. But we have, probably, said enough upon the subject of infallibility, as our object is chiefly to raise the attention of others, and to lead them on to finish the subject for themselves.—The Last Vials.

MEEKNESS.

"Take my yoke upon you, and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls."—MATT. 11: 29.

The lesson contained in these words is very precious indeed; but there are very few who have learned it. We believe this from the fact that we see but few who have control of themselves. In order to be a disciple of Jesus, our will, temper, tongue, appetite and disposition must be under our control. If we give license to these, we shall be like a vessel in a storm without ballast or helm. There is only one thing that can enable us to overcome self, and move steadily and peaceably onward through this world. It is faith in God. Whoever has the love of God shed abroad in his heart is gentle and loving, meek and forbearing towards all; because brotherly love is inseparable from the love of Christ, and love is always gentle toward its object. The service of Jesus, therefore, which is neither more nor less than faith working by love, always shows itself in self-conquest, in a victory over self, which is our greatest enemy, there will not be much difficulty in overcoming the world. We must see to it that there are no traitors within first, and then we can wage war successfully with the adversaries which are without. A pleasant illustration of what the grace of Christ can do is found in the memories of Wesley.

"He had been preaching on his father's grave in Epworth church-yard. A great many had embraced the truth, and converts abounded on all sides, very much to the annoyance of the obstinately wicked. Some of these sought to gratify their malignity of spirit by arresting a cart load of the new converts, whom they carried before a rare character in those intolerant times—an honest-hearted justice of the peace. No Justice Shallow, with his dog-latin and pride of ancestry was he, but a plain old English squire, with a brain well filled with common sense, and sound notions of justice. 'What crime have these people committed?' very properly inquired he, as the happy looking converts were planted before him in his fine old hall. The would-be accusers were dumb. For their lives they could not frame a charge against those pious rustics. At length, one man answered:

'Why, sir, these people pretend to be better than other people, and they pray from morning till night!' We fancy how on hearing this reply, the honest justice peered through his silver-rimmed spectacles, first at the accused, and then at the accuser, a quaint smile playing round his lips, as he asked, 'Is that all they have done?' Another spokesman now interfered. An old man with gray hairs was he. With eager words he replied, 'No, sir! Please your worship, they have converted my wife! Till she went among them she had such a tongue! And now she is quiet as a lamb!' This was too much for the equanimity of the good Justice to endure. Amused, yet indignant at the intrusion, we see him rising slowly on his great gouty feet, —we can hardly picture a Justice of those days without the gout,—he elevates his voice, and in a tone of authority cries: 'Carry them back! carry them back! and let them convert all the scolds in town.'"

Assuredly the woman, whose harsh, rude spirit had become tamed to the quiet of a lamb, had learned this precious lesson in the school of Christ. This lesson, all who call Jesus Master, are also bound to learn, both as a duty and a privilege. The command is imperious: Take my yoke upon you. The privilege is a high and holy one, pregnant with blessings—"Ye shall find rest." How is it with thee dear reader? Have you learned this lesson of meekness and gentleness? Can you endure injury and insult with an unruffled mind? Art thou Christ-like in thy temper? Remember you are your Lord's disciple only in proportion to the degree of your obedience to his precepts. Obey him, imitate him, and you are his friend. Disobey him, trample upon any one of his precepts, and you separate yourself from him. Listen, therefore, to the lesson of meekness he teaches thee,—"Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart." Seek his grace to renew and transform your mind. Let his Spirit take full possession of your heart, and then you can say in the trials and changes of life "Not my will but thine be done."

"O gently scan your brother man,
Still gentler sister woman;
Though they may go a trifle wrong,
To step aside is human;
One point must still be greatly dark,
The moving why they do it;
And just as lamely can ye mark
How far perhaps they rue it."

BOSTON CONFERENCE.

Thus far (Thursday, April 7th) the conference in Boston at the Lowell Street Chapel, has been a happy success. The prospect is very encouraging. Sweet peace and harmony prevail. It is evident that those who are at the conference are of one mind in believing that we are near the coming of Jesus. This thrilling fact is causing them to feel that they must be dead to this world, and all ready to welcome the Savior at his appearing. Many expressed a strong desire to have their wills entirely lost in the will of God. This is the only safe position, and the Lord is impressing this upon the minds of his dear children.

Tuesday evening, at the opening of the conference, Bro. J. Couch, of Concord, N. H., preached a most excellent sermon on sanctification,—just what was needed, which was heard with great pleasure by the friends of Jesus.

Wednesday A. M., we had a good conference meeting, when many spoke of their love for Jesus and his coming. In the afternoon we had preaching by Bro. D. M. Leavitt, of Holderness, N. H. We were not able to be present, but heard favorable reports. The subject was examination of the apostolical examples. In the evening preaching by the writer. An excellent conference meeting followed the sermon.

Thursday was a blessed day in the conference. We had an excellent love-feast at 9½ A. M., when a multitude of heart-cheering testimonies were heard from the dear christian pilgrims. It was truly a feast. At 10½ we listened to a weighty sermon on the judgment, from Bro. S. G. Mathewson, pastor of the church at Castleton, Vt. From half-past one to three in the afternoon, we had another excellent conference meeting. At three o'clock, we had a valuable and stirring sermon from Bro. J. Couch, of Concord, N. H., showing that we are very near the second coming of Christ. In the evening, from 6½ to 7½ o'clock, we had another refreshing conference meeting, and then an interesting sermon from H. L. Hastings, relating to the condition of the South, where he has been traveling for the last month.

We have never seen the Lowell Street Chapel so crowded before as it was on Thursday. The aisles were all filled by persons standing, and many had to go away for want of room. Several requested prayers, and many have been specially blest during the conference.

The meetings on Friday were about the same as on Thursday. The love-feast in the morning was a precious season. Bro. Munger preached in the afternoon and the writer in the evening. Thus far, we think we have never had a better conference in Boston. We were obliged to leave for Rutland, Saturday morning, and can give no further report of the meeting at present. We expect to hear of an increased interest in the meeting to its close. We have great reason to praise the Lord for what he is doing.

RUTLAND.

The great work of the Lord in Rutland is still increasing in interest. We think the meetings are the best we ever enjoyed in a revival. Some fifty have been converted, and thirty have been baptized. Many of the most devoted members of the Methodist, Baptist and Congregational churches, are earnestly at work in the meetings. Every meeting shows that the power of the revival is increasing. Persons of all ages, from eight to between fifty and sixty, are among the converts. After each evening sermon from fifty to seventy testify of the joys of the Christian religion. It is a real feast to hear their warm testimonies.

Last Sabbath (April 3d) fourteen were baptized, and several others are now waiting for an opportunity to follow their example. About one thousand people were spectators at the baptism. It was a heavenly season. The Lord gave a great victory. Shouts of praise arose from the baptized ones, and others on the banks of the river, while many eyes were filled with tears at the sight. One of the candidates had been a Catholic nun. She is an intelligent lady, and a bright convert. We may hear from her through "our paper." Pray for Rutland.

ACROSS THE SEA.

We are receiving frequent intelligence that the truth is taking hold of strong minds in Europe. Until recently, the doors seemed closed against any additional light upon the Scriptures, but now there is a happy change. Many are seeing and rejoicing in the light. The defenders of theological fables are much troubled, and quite opposed, but the Lord is raising up many strong men to defend his word. The following is from the editorial columns of "The Christian World," London, Eng:—

"The many books and pamphlets that have been published of late upon the subject of the future punishment of the wicked, confirm the conviction to which we gave expression a few months ago that a great number of the most devout and thoughtful persons in our churches are deeply exercised regarding it, and anxiously desirous of ascertaining the real teaching of Holy Scripture thereupon. To those who have had no doubts upon the subject, this questioning of the current teaching in our pulpits and religious books may seem alike unnecessary and absurd; but as a matter of fact the momentous theme has come up for reconsideration, and cannot be repressed by mere dogmatic assertions. And while recognizing the fact it would be well for all of us to be fully assured of this—that the rejection of the doctrine of eternal torment does not necessarily imply the giving up of a single essential doctrine of the gospel; and that, therefore, there ought to be no calling of names. 'Sceptic,' 'heretic,' 'infidel,' and the like, are wholly out of place, and should never be used in such a controversy, for it happens that a considerable number of our unquestionably Evangelical ministers, both Episcopal and Nonconformist, have avowed their disbelief in the creed that satisfied a former age, and themselves also in bygone days. It would be well, moreover, to remember that whatever opinions may prevail the real truth will remain the same—that the future will not be altered to us or to a single human soul in consequence of any man's opinions. People are often apt to forget this very manifest truth in a time of theological debate, but the recollection of it will do much towards keeping our minds calm, even when the very foundations of our faith may be assailed. . . .

It is not a little startling to find the extent to which this opinion is spreading in our evangelical churches. Several well-known ministers, whose orthodoxy on other points is as firmly fixed as ever, have ventured to brave the opposition sure to arise by writing boldly and earnestly in support of this new reading of the many declarations of the New Testament to the effect that life and immortality come only by accepting the gospel of Christ. These names include a Baptist, the Rev. William Miall; Congregationalists, Rev. E. White, Rev. Dr. Leask, and many others; and it is stated that one of the rising leaders of this section of Nonconformists is about to issue a book on the same side, that will certainly arouse the attention of the whole church to which he belongs. Of the Episcopalian clergy quite a host have declared themselves on this side of late. The Rev. William Ker, M. A., vicar of Tipton, has published a very elaborate argument, and more recently the Rev. Samuel Minton, M. A., minister of Eaton Chapel, Eaton-square, has penned a powerful letter to Mr. Robert Baxter reviewing the whole controversy, and declaring explicitly for the views set forth by Mr. White, whose communication to us may be regarded as an epitome of the facts and arguments relied upon by this growing party in our Christian society."

Christians have only to examine the Bible with care, to be satisfied that it does not teach the doctrine that man has an immortal soul; but, on the contrary, he must "seek for . . . immortality," "by patient continuance in well doing." In this life, the whole man is mortal; in the world to come, the entire man is made immortal.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

Nearly all careful observers are well convinced that some great and startling event is at hand. Signs in heaven and earth—on sea and land,—in church and state,—every where—indicate that things cannot long remain as they are. While some religious papers are not yet awake to the subject, and many professed watchmen are sounding no alarm, the secular dailies and weeklies are calling attention to the subject. The following is from the New York Mercury, April 9th, 1870. It is but a small part of a long article:

"The whole month of April will be a peculiar one, and the Atlantic will be the scene of some of the greatest perils on the higher latitudes that navigators have ever encountered.

May will deepen the convictions that the preceding month will have begun to impress upon the minds of the most unbelieving. We shall then hear of local floods and earthquakes from many parts of this continent; and the attention of mankind will be sternly and solemnly riveted on the condition of the earth beneath their feet and the heavens above them.

Farther from the line of our immediate present we will not now depart. Beyond lies a tremendous mass of appalling probabilities to which we shall devote another paper. But let those who may peruse what we have written to-day feel assured that they have not long to wait ere the sublime reality which these thoughtful warnings predict will burst upon them. The ground beneath us and the celestial spaces overhead are full of portents. Solemnly our little planet swings on its fateful round. Solemnly the myriad witnesses above gaze down upon her revolutions that cast back hour after hour and day after day upon the strand of the past that we can never reach again.

It is for men and nations now seriously to ponder while they uplift their gaze to the towers where Science deeps her anxious vigil, and ask of her votaries,

'Watchman, what of the night?'

The only answer they can give is a summons again to preparation; their only trust, "The Lord God Omnipotent reigneth!"

GERMAN TRACTS.

We would call attention to a letter in another column from Bro. L. Reimer, of Philadelphia, on the subject of tracts. Bro. R. has made a noble sacrifice in order to get the truth before the German population. We are not acquainted with another Bro. who is so well qualified for this work. Who will assist him? He has done what he could; but he needs help. Please read his letter, and then give him a liberal lift. Let us spare no effort by which men can be saved. The time seems to have come for a special effort in this direction.

THE RAINBOW.

We hope a number of our readers will feel like subscribing for the Rainbow, in order that Dr. Wm. Leask, its editor, may feel encouraged. He is engaged in a noble work in London, and should be sustained. Those who hold to the immortality of the soul, and the eternal misery of the wicked, are making a strong effort to put down the Rainbow. Let the friends of truth rally. Any who wish to take this monthly periodical, can send us greenbacks, amounting to $2.50 in gold, and we will forward the same to Dr. Leask.

In the March number of the Rainbow the editor says:—

"To many friendly enquiries respecting the position of this Magazine, our answer is—We have not yet got through the pelting storm; but we hope to survive it. If the friends of pure Scripture truth will heartily co-operate in this great matter, all will be well, with the blessing of the Lord. His 'stewards' will help his work; and that help is needed to enable us to carry on the Magazine—for though we have many new friends, the defections have been serious, and the advocates of eternal misery, whom we pity rather than blame, are striving zealously to silence our testimony. Surely those who value the Rainbow on account of the glorious truths it teaches, will not allow it to disappear for want of practical help. We would fain keep silence on this subject, but necessity is laid upon us. Esteemed readers! the Magazine is yours; your Editor is serving you freely and gladly; that is all he can do; will you do the rest until we get a larger constituency? The Master will 'repay you' (Luke x. 35.)"

THE ADVENT CHRISTIAN QUARTERLY for April is at hand. This number completes the first volume. It is edited by Bro. Wm. L. Himes, Buchanan, Mich. Price $2.00 a year. Now is a good time to subscribe. The following is the table of contents for the April number:—"Immaterialism; or, Soul-Immortality Refuted"; "The Throne of David"; "A Review of Prof. Bartlett's 'Refutation of the Theory of Annihilation'"; "The Errors of the Age"; "Hades and Heaven"; "Can the Earth contain its Inhabitants, if they are resurrected?" Editorial. It contains valuable reading matter. By the request of Bro. Sheldon, we will give our readers his article on "Immaterialism."

REASON WHY.—In consequence of delays and interruptions caused by moving our office, in order to favor our compositors, we have inserted some articles in the Crisis from stereotype plates, which, to some, may not look quite so well to the eye; but trust they will be just as good for the heart.

BUSINESS, REMOVAL, ETC.—Those having sent us money, and do not see it credited this week, will please be patient. The delay is owing to our removal. It will be attended to soon.

A VALUABLE TRACT.—The Gate to Glory.—We have just read this excellent tract, by Bro. A. P. Moore. It will have a wide circulation when our tract circulating friends read and learn its contents. It squarely meets the pernicious error of expecting rewards at death; also gives a clear statement of what the saint's reward is—when and how it is bestowed. Brethren, buy, read, and circulate this tract. I. C. WELLCOME.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, September 2nd, at the National Campmeeting, it was

Resolved, That we raise THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund the ensuing year.

It is proposed to raise this amount during the year for the publication and free distribution of tracts. The value of these little preachers in the work of enlightening and saving men from darkness and death can hardly be overestimated; and the generous and liberal stewards of the Lord's money are earnestly invited to contribute according to their ability in aid of the good work. Send on your dimes and dollars, brethren, with a liberal hand, and receive, by and by, the reward of the liberal giver.

LETTER FROM BRO. O. R. FASSETT.

BRO. GRANT:—The last of February, in company with Mrs. F., and Bro. and Sister Hutchinson and child, who conveyed us with a mule team and sleigh, we left La-Cross Valley, Wis., and passed through cooleys, valleys, and over hills of romantic scenery, and finally on the ice on the Mississippi River for the distance of about forty miles, until we reached Winona, Minnesota. We tarried at Winona with the christian friends a week, being entertained especially by Bro. and Sr. Gilbert, and visiting Eld. Ramer's family and Sr. Rowell's, and held service in a hired hall on the Sabbath, March 6th, where we addressed large congregations at three services. Though the church in that city have lost their place of worship by fire, yet they are defending the truth in private, so that the cause is losing nothing, but rather gaining among the people; and it is hoped that a chapel will be erected the present season for the accommodation of an Advent congregation. Winona is an important point in our State, and the cause needs to be well sustained there. Let the friends there do their duty to the Master.

Mrs. Fassett having taken a severe cold before leaving Wis., and not improving in health, took cars for Minneapolis, our home, while I tarried at Utica and Lewiston to fill appointments. A severe snow-storm however interrupted our series of meetings at Utica until Sabbath, March 13th, when the friends broke roads in every direction, and we held a successful meeting in the evening, of which we have since heard good news. The Lord be praised. At St. Charles we had the Methodist church in which to hold our meetings; but the storm again set in and raged furiously, preventing much of a gathering. The christian friends were present, and a few others. I took cars then for home; but was stayed at Owatonna by the Milwaukie and St. Paul R. R. cars being snow-bound below at Austin; and together with others encamped in the depot all night, and for the space of fifteen hours. Then reached home after six hours more, and fasting twenty-one hours.

We visited West St. Paul the 19th and 20th, and found the "little flock" firm and steadfast in the faith. The congregation was small, owing to the storm of the morning of the 20th, yet our meeting was profitable to all. This is now the place of residence of Bro. E. T. Himes. He has been dividing his labors between this church and the congregation in Minneapolis; but has ceased to visit Minneapolis, and travels more at large. His labors are blest in different sections of this field.

The 24th inst. we visited Rockford and held a series of meetings. We never had a larger attendance, or more interest. The church is prospering. Several are to be baptized. It was here I was turned out of doors by a Methodist minister. His successor has now challenged me to a discussion upon the following question: "Resolved, That man possesses an immortal soul, in a continued state of consciousness between death and the resurrection, and ever existing." This resolution is of his own getting up; and his plan or programme for discussion is the following: He writes out his views for some paper (and they have been published in the Sauk Rapids Sentinel); then I am to answer "in print"; then the debate must take place. I have forwarded my reply to the same paper. The battle will follow when we can arrange. Great interest is excited in all this region concerning this discussion; and the difficulty will be to obtain a place large enough in which to hold it. It is hoped that we shall have the Orthodox meeting-house.

Yesterday I came to Dassel Depot, where I write this letter while waiting for the cars. My meeting was appointed near three miles from here. On my arrival I found no conveyance as I expected. The stage had not come, owing to bad roads or accident; so I swung my carpet-bag upon my shoulder on a stick, and trudged along through mud and water and slosh; and when half the distance began singing:

"Away from his home and the friends of his youth,
He hasted, the herald of mercy and truth."

I had an early breakfast, and had fasted until seven o'clock P. M., when, after supper, I visited the school-house in Steelsville, and found a large congregation, which I addressed for full two hours, and I do not know but they would have heard me until "midnight" if I had had strength to address them, so wrapped in attention were they. This morning—a beautiful spring morning, while birds were singing and the ground frozen, I trudged back again in like manner as I went yesterday. During the night I had been hospitably entertained in a log house, twelve by thirteen feet in size, all one room; and so low that, although I could stand up in it, the man of the house could not! His wife and children also were able to do so. This house had one door in it, opening outside; one window, containing three seven-by-nine panes of glass; a large fire-place with a good, cheerful fire in it, where our food was cooked as I used to see my grandmother and mother cook our food in childhood. It also contained two beds and a trundle-bed, which accommodated all in the house, with myself, and there are seven children in the family! The cat was down cellar, and the dog outside. Three bags of Minnesota flour, and one barrel of the same, were in the room with sink, shelves for dishes, five chairs, and a bench. What other things this compact house contained, beside my carpet-bag and overcoat, I do not know. But here were found big, kind, generous hearts, ready to entertain a stranger with a cup of coffee, nice warm biscuit, splendid Goodrich potatoes, with ham, beans, pie, and cake;—hearts as big, generous, and christian, as any found anywhere; and here we offered up our evening and morning prayer with a thankful and a glowing heart.

When I contemplate that for over a quarter of a century I have traveled so much, and been so exposed to accidents, and infectious and evil diseases, I am surprised that today I am so well. My health has been continually and uniformly good; better than most of my ministering brethren. Well, I often think, in the hands of the Lord we are "immortal till our work is done," as said Napoleon.

Having preached the gospel on the Atlantic coast, in all the New England States and the Canadas; and having canvassed my native State from west to east, and from east to west (New York), and also preached here in the far West, I feel a desire to visit the "Pacific Slope," and carry the glad tidings of the kingdom of God there also. I feel as though Providence may favor this, if the Lord tarry. Yet I shall not run before being sent of the Lord, I trust.

I have left Mrs. F. at Rockford in the sugar-maple region. The Brethren Hall have tapped nearly five hundred trees, and she tarries to enjoy the novelty of the sugar bush. She is better than she has been for fifteen years. Has preached over fifty times since last fall, and to good acceptance. Pray for us. O. R. FASSETT.

OUR NEW YORK STATE TENT.

Dear brethren and sisters in Christ, in the State of New York:—The time to commence our tent-meetings again has nearly come. Do you all understand that we, as a conference, are indebted to our dear brother, Jonas Wendell, for last year's labors with the tent, about one hundred dollars? Dear brethren and sisters, I am going to tell you what I want you to do, in each church in the State. Take up a collection on the first Sabbath in May, for the express purpose of paying off that debt. Send the amount so collected to our treasurer, Bro. B. C. Simonds, of Darien, Genesee Co., N. Y., so that he may be able at our next annual conference in June to pay Bro. Wendell. Will you do that very thing, without fail? Dear brethren, do not disappoint me in this matter. In places where there is no church organized, let every one interested send something to Bro. Simonds for this purpose. Dear brethren, we shall very soon give an account of our stewardship. Will the Master say, "Well done"? Now will this request be heeded? I trust it will.

D. COGSWELL, Pres. of Conference.

For the World's Crisis.

THE BOOK "IMMORTALITY"—By J. H. Whitmore.—I have just closed the reading of this excellent book. I am greatly pleased with it, and do not see where I could suggest an improvement, except in the type. This is a heavy blow upon Platonic Orthodoxy, well dealt; and at the same time a thorough statement of the Scripture doctrine of immortality. I have not seen its equal for the general reader. It is stated more concisely and positively than by Dobney, more mildly and candidly than Ham, is more courteous and lenient than Moncrieff, more direct and easily comprehended than Hudson, more conclusive than Whateley or White, more gentle and christian than Ellis and Reed; more spirited, tolerant and mild than Blain. The author takes a wider range than most writers on the subject, and quotes a large amount of valuable matter from many of the most prominent heathen and christian writers, on both sides of the question of immortality. He states the theories and views of opponents candidly and fairly, and then, without dodges or cants, meets and overthrows them with plain Scripture statements and logical deductions. We think this book worthy of vigorous efforts to circulate it as widely as possible, that it may lead multitudes into scriptural light on one of the most important subjects of revelation. We shall circulate as many as we can of them for the truth's sake.

Yarmouth, Me. I. C. WELLCOME.

For the World's Crisis.

SPIRITUALISM.—I wish to say to the brethren and sisters at large, if you wish to head off Spiritualism, and thereby save your friends and neighbors from that awful delusion that is sweeping so many down to death, send to the Crisis office, and get "Spiritualism Unveiled,—shown to be the work of demons," and send it to your friends, and lend it to your neighbors. Are we doing all we can to save perishing men? One of those little books may save a soul from death. Brethren, send for them, do. God will bless you.

D. COGSWELL.

BABYLON.

What is it? Answer: It is "that great CITY, Babylon, that mighty city." What city is like unto this great city"? "Thus with violence shall that great city, Babylon, be thrown down." Rev. 18; 10, 18, 21. It is "Babylon" five times, "woman" six times, "whore" three times, and "city" five times. These tems are used interchangably. Nay, they are identified with the seven heads, seven mountains, and seven kings. Rev. 17: 9-10. The Roman church polity seems personified, geographized and characterized by these nineteen times, in which these varied designations are employed.

When the city is divided into three parties (as the context seems to indicate and require), then Babylon (another name for it) will come into remembrance for judgment. Thus the great whore will be judged, with all its revealed antecedents and concomitants, by the hatred and agency of the ten kings. Of course, no attempt is now made to exhaust this subject. All we need to aid our apprehension, and give the right direction to our thoughts on this point, seems embraced in the varied and interchangeable use of the above terms. "Babylon the Great" is "the great whore—woman—city"—subject to the coming judgment of God. Amen.

J. B. COOK.

IMMORTALITY IN CHRIST.

DEAR SIR,—You will rejoice to learn that the glorious doctrine of life and immortality in Christ is finding an entrance into many christian hearts. Thoughtful persons, not a few, are discovering that the tradition notion of the creature man, sinful dust and ashes, being in himself necessarily and essentially immortal, is a mere human invention, without a shadow of foundation in God's word. A gentleman in Essex has lately offered a purse of one hundred guineas to any one who will produce a single text of Scripture to prove the natural immortality of the soul. Those who hold the dogma, and denounce all who do not, ought certainly to come forward with one text at least. It is to be hoped that this offer will lead many to search the Scriptures for themselves. Then they will find it written, not that every one, whether believer or unbeliever, but only "he that doeth the will of God abideth forever," he only that believeth in Christ "shall never die." (1 John 2: 17; John 11: 26.)

A learned and pious divine lately discoursing upon the subject, remarked as follows—"On what do I base my faith? Not in what is called the immortality of the human mind. I do not know—not one knows—what matter is, and therefore no one can, with any amount of intelligence, predicate anything about immateriality; not on the instinctive longings which we all have for a future life; not on the constitutional immortality of the human soul, for I believe that the constitutional immortality of the creature is a contradiction. On what, then, do I ground my faith? On the revealed will of God. The duration of any creature's existence must always depend on the will of the Creator, the absolute one. I say philosophically that the continuation of any creature's existence for a day or for an hour must depend upon the will of that God who created the universe, whose we are, and whom we are bound to serve."

Thus we see that the truth is progressing, the good seed is springing up: let us thank God, and take courage. You, sir, and others, have sown in tears; you will assuredly reap in joy, reap a rich harvest of blessing both here and hereafter, for "ye serve the Lord Christ."

I am, dear sir, yours respectfully and gratefully, E. ELCOCK.—Rainbow.

PILGRIM NOTES.

The itinerant preacher, who proclaims the flying angel message, has many items to recount, that perhaps would interest and edify the laity of the "one faith." But in chronicling these items, there is great danger of dissembling, and making self the prominent character in the drama of action. Therefore the necessity of attributing success to the overruling power of a kind Providence, and becoming subordinate to the leadership of the great Spirit, lest we get exalted, and are led "after the flesh" to exaggerate our accounts of labor in the gospel field. O Lord, control our thoughts and pen just now.

For the last few months our labors have been signally blessed of the Lord. Amid the numerous perils of the latter days, our tongue has not been silent; and now, for the encouragement of scattered ones, we break the silence of our pen, trusting that God may be glorified in so doing. The great spiritual dearth prevailing so alarmingly in these last days has caused many hungering and starving souls to ask for "the bread of life." We could not close our ears to the Macedonian cry that came up from various quarters, or heedlessly slight the call of duty. Therefore, with the Spirit of Christ in our heart, and the word of God as our foundation, we have tremblingly gone forth to meet the roaring lion in his den of formality and Sodom-like iniquity. Our field of action is in four counties of northern New York, having a circuit of one hundred and fifty miles. We have only time to speak of new fields recently visited. First,

DAYANSVILLE.

It is a thrifty little village, on the Black River, in Lewis Co., containing a motley set of religionists, a portion of whom are Episcopal Methodists, who kindly gave us permission to occupy their house of worship. But we had not continued meetings long, before their pastor came in, and declared publicly that "he had no sympathy with Adventism whatever, as it was nothing more or less than infidelity hitched on to christianity in disguise;" and furthermore, "it was a system of theology that originated with the Sadducees;" and, to cap the climax, he compared us to a "thief and rascal." But the Lord gave us grace to bear all this with patience; however we thought it was our imperative duty, in kindness to ask the brother to prove his statements in oral debate. This he refused to do, but succeeded in getting the trustees to lock the house against us. Accordingly we repaired to the school-house, which is large and commodious, where God opened to us the door of utterance in a special manner, and we were blessed in dispensing the truth to a large congregation for a number of evenings in succession. As the result many, like the Bereans, searched the Scriptures, and manifested great interest in the same; while some gave their hearts to Jesus, and are rejoicing in his pardoning love.

We also visited the Seventh-day Baptist church in Watson, Lewis Co., where we were kindly treated by Bro. Reed, the minister in charge. By his urgent request, we addressed his congregation, and was prevailed upon to leave another appointment. We filled the same and have reason to believe that our labors were highly appreciated by pastor and people. Four came forward for prayers. At the close of our services Bro. R. helped me scatter tracts, thus showing that he was not bound up in sectarian bigotry. We were invited to tarry longer, but appointments in regions beyond prevented our doing so.

LORAIN.

In a country school-house, four miles southeast of Adams village, we commenced meetings under circumstances that were not so propitious as we could wish, for some of other churches withstood our words for many evenings. Finally, the preachers of modern theology came in, and discovering that the sea upon which they were sailing was very much disturbed, they became spasmodic, and went to throwing the stone of slander and sediment of tradition in our face. This, of course, had to be borne with patience, and met with the word of God, which is always irrefutable. At last, a young man of religious character and collegiate acquirements opened a battery of what the apostle terms "vain philosophy." His charge, however, was so absurd and averse to God's word, that he and his colleagues were ashamed, and quit the field. Our meetings continued, and have eventuated in much good; for a number have come to a saving knowledge of the truth, rejoicing that "the darkness is past, and the true light now shineth." To God be all the glory. Next we speak of

GREENBORO, OSWEGO CO.

In this place we had some trials to pass through before the car of salvation got to moving; but we succeeded in getting the truth before the people, and it germinated in their hearts. The first time we visited the people of this place, we only remained one week, but sixteen persons were hopefully converted to God, and ten were baptized. We have visited the people several times since. The last time twelve more were hopefully brought into the fold of Christ, and eight were baptized. Praise God for his word which is "quick and powerful," and taketh effect when presented in the right spirit. The people in Greenboro are poor in this world's goods, but, glory to God, many of them are "rich in faith." We have had many happy seasons with them, and hope to meet them in the paradise of God.

We might speak of other new fields recently visited, where there seems to be a good interest; but time and spece will not allow. Suffice it to say, that truth is rapidly advancing in northern New York. We are unable to supply all the calls we have, but with the help of God, we will proclaim the flying angel message until Jesus comes. Hallelujah, he will soon be here. C. H. WILLIAMS.

REPORT OF THE R. I. AND EAST. CONN. CONFERENCE.

Held at W. Gloucester, R. I., March 30th to Apr. 1st, 1870.

Wednesday afternoon we enjoyed our usual social meeting, and in the evening Bro. M. R. Phetteplace gave us a clear, logical discourse upon immortality. Thursday, 9 A. M. met for business. M. R. Phetteplace Chairman pro tem.

Report of churches. North Scituate, by Bro. N. A. Angell. Have seventy-six members, most of whom stand well. An increasing interest in the Sabbath school. Meetings well attended. Danielsonville, by Bro. N. Shumway. Upon the whole I think the church stands as well, spiritually, as it has before for years. Foster, by Bro. Eldredge. Interest good. Have preaching most of the time. West Gloucester, by Bro. Phetteplace. About twenty have arisen for prayers during the winter, and there are others under powerful conviction. Wyoming, by letter. God has heard prayer in behalf of this church, and we are enjoying a season of refreshing. Two added to the church, and another converted. Lafayette, by letter. Some added since last conference. Are flourishing in the Lord. We then listened to interesting and heart-cheering reports from the following preaching brethren: J. S. Collins, D. O. Hopkins, J. S. Eldredge, D. V. Corey, N. A. Angell, M. R. Phetteplace, C. H. Sweet, H. F. Carpenter, and E. Bellows. Adjourned until to-morrow at 9 A. M. At 2 P. M. preaching by C. H. Sweet, from Phil. 3: 13, 14. In the evening an encouraging word by Bro. H. F. Carpenter, from Heb. 11: 16.

Friday, 9 A. M., Treasurer's report read and accepted. Bro. H. F. Carpenter presented his resignation of the office of Clerk and Treasurer, stating that he was unable to discharge the duties of said office on account of having removed to Vermont. After some hesitancy, and with much regret, his resignation was accepted. Proceeded to the election of a new Clerk and Treasurer by ballot. C. H. Sweet was chosen. The subject of church organization and discipline came up, and after considerable discussion, in which Brn. Bellows, Carpenter, Collins, Phetteplace and Angell participated, it was voted, That a committee of three be appointed to draft a covenant and rules of church order, to be submitted to this conference at its next session. Brn. H. F. Carpenter, E. Bellows, and M. R. Phetteplace, were chosen that committee.

Moved, That we change the time for the meeting of this conference from the first to the last Wednesday in the quarter. Carried. Adjourned to meet with the church at River Point, R. I., the last Wednesday in June next. At 11 A. M. preaching by D. V. Corey from Jno. 3: 16. At 2 P. M. Bro. Carpenter gave us an able discourse from Heb. 12: 26, showing very clearly that the time was at hand when God would "shake not the earth only, but also heaven.' In the evening a sermon from Bro. J. S. Collins. Text, Rom. 8: 1.

Those who came to this meeting expecting a feast of fat things, were not disappointed. The interest in our Conference is deepening among both preachers and churches.

C. H. SWEET, Clerk.

For the World's Crisis.

CANNOT PREACH NOW.—Bro. Grant,—Please permit me to say through the Crisis, to the various churches and friends whom I have promised to visit, that my lungs and chest have at last failed. My speaking organs are in constant pain, and will not allow that I preach more at present. The over use of them for many months has caused this. I ask, and feel confident I shall have, the prayers of the church, that I may again preach the word. I. C. WELLCOME.

April 2nd, 1870.

ENCOURAGEMENT TO PRAY.—If any are disposed to grow weary in praying, let them read this incident and keep on supplicating:—

"Do you think," I asked, "that the Lord will let me see, in this life, the salvation of the souls for whom I pray?"

"I cannot say as to that. When I was a child in the Sabbath School in the old country," she continued, "my faithful teacher used to say, "I have prayed too much for my class for one of them to be lost. I was a thoughtless girl at the time, and remember wondering at it, and thinking it a very self-confident remark. She was so sure. 'I shall have them all,' she would say, 'I shall say to Christ at the judgment, 'Here am I, and the class thou hast given me.'"

"And were they all converted" I asked.

"Yes; she did not live to see it, but my eyes have seen it—the last of the sixteen gathered into the fold."

Correspondence.

From Bro. L. Reimer.

BRO. GRANT:—It is now more than ten years since I embraced these glorious truths which distinguish us from the rest of the so-called christian churches. It was a hard struggle for me before I could depart from preconceived ideas and traditions of men, and substitute in their stead the plain and simple "thus saith the Lord"; however, God helped me to overcome all obstacles, though I lost an honorable position in a now very fashionable church, and a number of friends with whom I had been on intimate terms for a long time. The truth was so dear to me, the new light (though as old as the Bible itself) so glorious and heart-cheering, that I cared nothing for the consequences. Not satisfied, however, to have found the treasure for myself, I determined, by the help of God, to write these truths down in my native tongue, to scatter them among my German countrymen, wherever I might have an opportunity. My means were limited; yet I was willing to sacrifice my little surplus for the truth's sake. A few friends assisted me; yet the principal burden rested on my own shoulders.

For some time I saw very little fruit of my labor, and almost thought of giving up the contest; when, to my joy and encouragement, I received some letters from several German Baptist preachers in the far West, in which they expressed much pleasure in having come into possession of my German tracts, and in having found in them those glorious truths to which they had all the way along been strangers. To these followed other testimonials of a similar character, and even from far-distant Germany, the land of my birth and youth, I received letters whose contents were expressions of joy and gladness in having read and heard proclaimed the glorious news of Christ's second coming in order to raise the dead, change the living saints to immortality, destroy the wicked, and establish his everlasting kingdom on the earth. The truth now is taking hold everywhere, where it is presented, and many have been the demands lately for more tracts. But how can I comply with all the demands, being (so far as I know) alone in the work of publishing these tracts, of which no more than three are stereotyped; while the others, for want of funds, could not be stereotyped, but have all been given away, without my being able to get them re-printed?

There are some millions of Germans in this country, of whom the greater number reside in the far West; and in order to enlighten this vast number with the truth as it is in Jesus Christ, and to send them the glorious message of the coming King, it requires more than the labor of a few individuals, and more than a few dollars for the distribution of German tracts among such great numbers. In short, it requires the united efforts of all those who are both able and willing to assist the cause of truth, whether it be among Americans or foreigners; as all have but one hope, one faith, one baptism, and one Lord Jesus Christ.

But to come to the point: it is my firm conviction, and has been for some time past, that the time has arrived when a German "Tract Fund" ought to be established, so as to be able to spread the glorious light of the soon coming of our King, as well as other blessed truths, among the thousands of Germans that are scattered all over this land. As for me, I am willing to spend all the time I have to spare, in writing and translating such tracts, without money and without price. But I must have assistance, or else I can do but very little. Dear friends, will you help me? I have assisted the English cause for these last eleven years; have both bought and distributed hundreds of English tracts; might I not with some justice expect at least some help for my German countrymen from my American brethren? Are we not all heirs and joint-heirs with Christ? Though speaking in different tongues, do we not all travel towards the same blessed country, our eternal home?

But enough. You see, Bro. Grant, and all those who may read this appeal, what is wanted. Please act in the fear of the Lord, and act soon, before it is too late. But a short time remains, and what is to be done must be done quickly. Should my humble request receive your approval, and that of the rest of my brethren (and I do not see how it can be otherwise), then you will be kind enough to grant to me a little place in the Crisis, where I may be able to acknowledge the receipts of money that may be sent to me, or to the Crisis office, towards publishing and distributing German tracts among my German countrymen. I have no doubt that many lovers of the truth, many friends of Jesus, had they had any knowledge of this matter, would have assisted me willingly and cheerfully, both with money and otherwise; but thinking that I might add to the many burdens that have already been borne by many of the Advent friends, and impose upon their liberality, I tried to get along as well as I could without any public appeal, and therefore kept silent until now. May the Lord direct in this matter, and bless you and all the friends of Jesus that love his appearing. Your Bro. in Christ,

L. REIMER.

1006 Chestnut St., Philadelphia, Pa.

From Bro. M. R. Miles.

BRO. GRANT:—I am still in the vineyard of the Lord. The world is my field of labor. The Lord has been with me, bless his holy name. About seven weeks ago I was called to preach Bro. Steele's funeral sermon at Alton. I was a stranger in the place, but I saw the sermon had such an effect on the audience, that I said to Bro. Steele's sons, if they could get the house, I would come and preach to them more. They secured the house, and I commenced meetings Jan. 30th. The people came out and filled the house, and gave the best of attention to the word spoken. One of the prominent Free Methodist members said he would bet twenty-five dollars that Eld. Miles' Bible was not like his. An unconverted man standing by said he would bet it was not either; for his was cotton paper, and mine was linen; that was all the difference.

O how blind people are as to what the Bible teaches. I continued my meetings through the week. The people began to read their Bibles, and the interest increased. Sinners began to tremble and cry, What shall we do to be saved? Some of the first people of the place came out. Some of them were bordering on infidelity; others on Spiritualism; but the sword of the Spirit cut them, or their faith, all to pieces.

The Spiritualists had a meeting at Alton last August of about three thousand people. Alton is only fourteen miles from where Spiritualism started by the Fox girls. It had a strong hold on the people, or some of them. The Spirit that first communicated through the Fox girls claimed to be a peddler that was murdered at Hydesville. The peddler was missing for a long time, but has returned, and now lives in Alton; so the spirit lied in the commencement of Spiritualism, the same as the devil did when he said, man "shall not surely die." It is the same lying spirit.

The second week, Bro. B. P. Stevens came and helped me in the meetings. The work went on gloriously, but our quarterly conference was called, and we had to leave; but not until we made a promise we would come back soon. Bro. Stevens staid to conference one day, then returned to Alton. Bro. Jones, from Hemlock Lake, came to the conference to get a minister to preach his mother's funeral sermon. The lot seemed to fall on me, so I left the conference, after staying one day. Sister Jones was eighty years old. She was a firm believer in the coming of Jesus. She sleeps in Jesus.

In the evening we preached again at Hemlock Lake. Three made a start in religion. I then returned to Alton, and found Bro. Stevens preaching to a full house; but he had to leave to fill his appointment in Oneida county, so the Lord and I have been carrying on the meetings since. The Lord is doing a great work in Alton. We have the Christian house. The Baptist minister told the trustee if he let us in, he never would get us out. The trustee said he never wanted to, if we preached as we did now.

From M. E. Otis.

BRO. GRANT:—Many months have passed away since I have penned anything to the readers of your paper, and in the meantime I have passed through some trials sore, but have ever found the Lord to be a "present help" in time of trouble; and this morning while I write, my heart is filled with gratitude to Him whose tender care has been over me from infancy, and whose arm has upheld me in hours of severest trial. He has led me in a way which I knew not. I have not always felt that I could look up and say with that confidence which I desired, Thy will, O Lord, be done, but I have of late been enabled to say, and feel it too,

"To be, to do, to suffer,
Whate'er His will may be;
Prone in my heavenly Father's hand,
I lay me still."

I shrink no more from "darksome paths" that may lie before me; I know the grace of God is sufficient, and I'll travel on. Why should the christian court prosperity and shun trials, when the child of God is not dependent on outward circumstances for happiness, but can be enabled through the grace of God, like one of old, to glory in tribulation? The apostle Paul could shout even while he lay in prison, with back sore and feet fast in the stocks. O, I thank God that to day we can have just such religion as this, and that there are some who can exclaim with the poet—

"Pass away, earthly joys,
Jesus is mine;
Break away, mortal ties,
Jesus is mine;"

and like our colored brethren can sing—

"Jesus here, and Jesus there,
All the way long 'tis Jesus."

Your Sister waiting for redemption,

MARY E. OTIS.

From Bro. B. P. Stevens.

BRO. GRANT:—I have just received a letter saying Sister C. B. Turner is under the doctor's care, having typhoid fever, and wishing me to say to you, that she wishes you to say through the Crisis that "being sick she is not able to answer the letters she has received, and is grateful to God and them for their remembrance of her in her affliction and need." She has been sick for some time, and is in want of help. Any wishing to help bear her burdens, can pray for and remit to her. Address Syracuse, N. Y. It will be thankfully received, and used as those that shall give account. Yours for the right,

B. P. STEVENS.

P. S. I am just home from the close of a meeting (on account of the badness of the roads) in Alton, N. Y., where a goodly number are rejoicing in the power of Christ's gospel to save them from their sins, and that their Bible points the true way to eternal life.

HAUNTED HOUSES.

In various localities, for centuries past, there has been much sensation about "haunted houses," said to be haunted by ghosts of dead people; but these wonders have usually been performed in the night. That much of this has been the result of superstition and ignorance, no one can doubt; but it is questionable whether some of it has not a foundatian in part, in demoniacal deception. The St. Louis Republican gives an account of a house "haunted" in "day-light" by what purports to be the spirit of a girl twelve years old, which speaks with an audible voice (though invisible to all but a little girl in the family, who says the spirit is dressed in "blue"); answers numerous questions put to it, takes clothing off the hooks, and throws it down, then elevates it again to its place on the hooks; pulls the children's dresses, opens doors, takes them off their hinges, moves furniture, barrels of flour, blows out lights, and relights them again, and such like things.

If this is not all falsehood, got up to produce a sensation (and it is said that the Mayor of East St. Louis and many others have pronounced it beyond their comprehension, after a thorough examination), then it is but another exhibition of the "miracles" of demons; and instead of leading men to believe that the dead are alive, it should convince us that the DEVIL is alive, and as usual doing his work in disguise, to deceive men. Demons never come in their own name.

WM. SHELDON.

THE PATH OF THE JUST.

His glory is from within. It is a radiation. Put him where you will, he shines, and cannot but shine. God made him to shine. For instance: Imprison Joseph, and he will shine out on all Egypt, cloudless as the sky where the rain never falls. Imprison Daniel, and the dazzled lions retire to their lairs, and the king comes forth to worship at his rising, and all Babylon bless the beauty of the brighter and better day. Imprison Peter, and, with an angel for a harbinger star, he will swell his aurora from the fountains of Jordan to the walls of Beersheba, and break like the morning over mountain and sea. Imprison Paul, and there will be high noon over all the Roman Empire. Imprison John, and the Isles of the Ægean, and all the coasts around, will kindle with sunset visions too gorgeous to be described, but never to be forgotten—a boundless panorama of prophecy gliding from sky to sky and enchanting the nations with openings of heaven, transits of saints and angels, and the ultimate glory of the city and kingdom of God.

Not only so; for modern times have similar examples—examples in the Church, and examples in the State. For instance, bury Luther in the depths of the Black Forest, and the "angel that dwelt in the bush" will honor him there; the trees around him will burn like shafts of ruby, and his glowing orbs loom up again, round and clear as the light of all Europe. Thrust Bunyan into the gloom of Bedford jail, and as he leans his head on his hand, the murky horizon of Britain will flame with fiery symbols, "delectable mountains" and celestial mansions, with holy pilgrims grouped on the golden hills, and the bands of bliss, from the gates of pearl, hastening to welcome him home.—Ex.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, April 8, 1870. Mr. Inman, one of the proprietors of the Liverpool, Philadelphia and New York line of steamships (commonly known as the Inman line,) publishes a communication, in which he expresses his disbelief that the steamer city of Boston foundered in a gale. He says the City of Boston and the City of Antwerp were twin boats, and they both encountered the same gale, the latter without damage or serious difficulty. All things considered he thinks the Boston collided with one of the icebergs so numerous to the northeast of Cape Race and went down when only two or three days out from Halifax.

PARIS, April 8, 1870. The antiquarians are profoundly interested in the discovery of a great Roman amphitheatre in the excavations now going on at Mount St. Genevieve, in this city.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 6. The Emperor and Empress will soon go on a tour through the Crimea and Caucasian provinces. They will subsequently visit Darmstadt and Ems in Germany.

PARIS, April 6. The news from Spain is important. The Madrid Gazette this morning says that order has been restored at Barcelona, but not without considerable loss of life.

The barricades were attacked by the soldiers, and taken without much difficulty. Many of the rioters were killed and wounded. The whole Province of Barcelona is declared to be in a state of siege. The Governor of the Province has been displaced, and the city is occupied by the military. There are rumors of serious disorders elsewhere, particularly at Valencia and Cadis, growing out of the opposition to the Conscription law lately passed.

MADRID, April 10. The anti-conscription revolt at Barcelona is ended.

PARIS, April 9. The crisis was continued this evening in the Ministerial Council with respect to a definite reply in the matter of the Plebiscite Legislatif, M. Ollivier declared that the Government would employ neither menaces nor promises. He argued that the Emperor and Empress were out of the question. The only question was, "Shall we change an absolute empire for a liberal one?"

Napoleon's syncope was the result of a sprained ankle. The facts, as usual, have been greatly magnified, chiefly by speculators at the Bourse.

DOMESTIC.

INSANITY IN CALIFORNIA.—The San Francisco Bulletin says there is no disguising the fact that the ratio of insane persons increases faster than the sane population in California. Of the causes of this state of things, the Bulletin says:

"The effect of business reverses during the past year is seen in the large increase of patients at the Asylum. But even in the most prosperous years the number of new cases is so large as to attract attention abroad. As homes and domestic and social comforts increase, the per cent. of insanity ought to decrease. But we are confronted with the fact that with all these gains there is an increased ratio of insanity. What are the causes operating so adversely upon mental health? Are we finally to become a crazy people?

We suspect it is still true that more than any other people we live on excitements of some sort. The crowded hotels and restaurants illustrate how little a large proportion of the population are in love with domestic life. We are pepetually keyed up with excitement. The climate stimulates so that all excessive gratification of appetites does its work with fearful rapidity. When we have made all the qualifications, rioting and drunkenness are the disorders here which are sending men and women to the Asylum by hundreds. They do not all go there, because the sharp, quick stroke of death lays them low as a more merciful dispensation. It is not climate, not unavoidable business reverses, though there are enough of these. But it is that social disorder which makes an eternal excitement necessary to the happiness of an average 'Californian.'"—Journal.

Passing Events.

☞ At a recent murder trial in Wyoming Territory, one half the jury was composed of women. The jury were not permitted to separate and go to their homes, but were, under the charge of bailiffs, (one lady and one gentleman) taken to the hotel for their meals, and lodging was provided for them in the adjoining parlors, each under the charge of their bailiff. Every morning during the trial the ladies kneeled together in prayer, at the same time their male associates were engaged in trifling levity.

☞ A letter from Rome calls attention to the fact that all the revolutions that have occurred since 1787 took place under Popes named Pius. Louis XVI. was beheaded under Pius VI., Napoleon I. destroyed the republic under Pius VII., the two catastrophes of the empire happened also under Pius VII.; Charles X. was dethroned under Pius VIII., and Louis Philippe lost his crown under Pius IX. The name Pius thus seems to be as fatal as the number thirteen.

☞ An alarming disease, thought to be spotted fever, prevails at North Haverhill, N. H., utterly defying the skill of medical men. Persons of all ages in life have been stricken down by it, living but three or four hours after the appearance of the first symptoms.

☞ There are said to be more Jews in New York than in all the ancient land of Judea.

☞ There are 7,646,020 gallons of milk consumed in Boston annually, at a cost of $2,599,646 80.

☞ To test the purity of candy not colored, dissolve it in water. If the water remains transparent, the candy is pure; but if milky, or depositing a sediment, terra alba or some equally harmful adulteration has been used.

☞ During the late severely cold weather in Iowa two little children were preserved from freezing to death by a pig, which crawled upon their bed, and reclining across them kept them warm.

☞ The Spanish club at Havana have declared their purpose to reduce every building on the island to ashes, in the event that Cuba should either be ceded or sold by the home government.

☞ The Pope says he don't care whether the French troops leave Rome or not; that he has lived through greater troubles than that.

☞ Imprisonment for debt has been abolished in England.

☞ Brigandage is still rife in Greece, particularly in the mountainous districts, but the government is working faithfully to suppress it.

☞ The Congregationalists and Methodists of East Longmeadow, Mass., are holding very interesting union meetings. The two pastors work in harmony together, and many souls have been hopefully converted to God and some backsliders reclaimed.

☞ A Philadelphia landlord, turned a sick woman and her children into the street, during the temporary absence of her husband in search of work. This brutal treatment caused the death of the poor woman next day.

☞ The largest organ in the world will be the organ now building for the Hall of Arts and Sciences, South Kensington, England. It will have 111 sounding stops, independent of 14 couplers.

☞ Bears have been killed in seventy towns and plantations in Maine the past year. The bounties will amount to about $1,500.

☞ Charlotte E. Ray, daughter of a negro, preacher, has entered the Howard University at Washington, D. C., as a student of law.

To whom it may Concern.

At the solicitation of friends west, in Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota, and to "preach the word," and so do good, if it be possible, to "the household of faith," and others, I now purpose, if circumstances should seem to favor, to leave home for that distant field of labor, about the middle of May next, and go by rail from Swanton, Vt., to Chicago, and so to the points where it may seem best, the exact route to depend upon invitations that may come by letter. Let those who may desire a visit from me, as above suggested, write immediately, stating particulars of location, condition, etc., that I may determine my route, and appoint accordingly. Address me at Stanbridge, P. Q.

My visit of 1864 was pleasant, and I trust a means of good to some, by God's blessing upon imperfect labor by a feeble instrument. May my intended visit be more useful to the cause of Bible truth, in answer to fervent prayer.

Yours in the faith, CHAS. P. DOW.

SPIRITUALISM CONDEMNED

BY THE TESTIMONY OF THE BIBLE AND ITS OWN WITNESSES.

BY [illegible] WELLCOME.

Price 10 cents single copy. Twenty copies for $1.00; $3.00 per one hundred copies.

Evening Hours.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccl. 11:6.

[illegible]

This is the subject of two discourses recently delivered in Boston by Wm. Denton, and reported in the Banner of Light. The question is rather ambiguous, and liable to mislead. It might be shown to a person's satisfaction that certain phenomena, called Spiritual Manifestations, actually did occur, and he might hardly, and thoughtlessly admit that Spiritualism is true. But it is forgotten that the phenomena may be admitted, and attributed to a power entirely outside of human agency, and still, Spiritualism be a lie. And if those who feel so firm in their new-found faith in what, they confidently deem the only demonstration of immortality, would submit their claims, and the facts and suppositions on which those claims rest, to the cool, impartial analysis of that Reason of which they have so much to say, and for the alleged disregard of which they berate Christians in so many bitter words, they would hardly fail to be startled by the bottomless gulf of uncertainty which would yawn beneath their feet. This I say from experience, having felt the terrible thrill which goes through the soul when first is discovered the yawning fact that [illegible].

Many writers on Spiritualism, among whom the editor of the Banner is a marked example, seem never to have had the faintest shadow of a doubt that if the phenomena are proved to be true, SPIRITUALISM must be true. And so, when their opponents admit the phenomena, and claim that the spirits are "lying spirits," they very coolly wonder how we can charge our spirit friends with lying! Is it true that Spiritualists cannot see this point, or what is the matter?

Spiritualism as a system, just like Christianity, is founded on facts, or supposed facts. If the facts are known, then we may know that Spiritualism is true; if they are only believed, then Spiritualists are just where Christians are, compelled to base their faith on belief, and to submit the whole thing to the same test. And the weight of evidence is the only weight which will sink the scale. And if it should turn out, after all the sneering words about a "blind faith," etc., which have been thrown in the face of those who worship Him who said, "I am he that liveth, and was dead; and behold, I AM ALIVE FOREVERMORE," that the Christian's faith rests on impregnable FACTS, while the faith of the Spiritualist rests on that which, by its nearness to us, seems to be so easy of proof, but which is ALL a delusion; perhaps we shall then see the great importance of being able to give a REASON for the hope that is in us.

What is Spiritualism? Not the phenomena which are seen. These are considered by its friends to be the proofs of its truth, but not the truth itself. Taking the admissions and assertions of their own writers and speakers, Spiritualism as a belief, or faith, is the doctrine that the spirit or soul (or something to which these names are applied) of man survives the death of the body, leaves the visible form, and, retaining its full consciousness and power of thought and feeling, lives on thenceforth in this free, untrammelled state, increasing in knowledge, power and goodness forever. And all who believe these leading points are considered Spiritualists. Then it is claimed, as a natural, necessary conclusion of this belief, that these departed spirits can, and do act upon, and communicate with, spirits still "in the flesh," using the same subtler elements of matter which previously served as a link between them and their own bodies. This as a theory is a very legitimate conclusion from the theories first mentioned. As a fact, however, this is the first thing generally believed, the foundation of the whole system. And since this theory is supposed to be proved, we hear a great deal said about the demonstration of Spiritualism as compared with the faith of Christianity. Spiritualists argue, "The spirits of our departed friends communicate with us; whatever communicates information must have life and intelligence; therefore our friends are still alive." But they never say, "Our departed friends are still alive and conscious. Whatever is alive and conscious can communicate intelligence; therefore our friends can (and probably do) communicate with us." And inasmuch as the soundness of the conclusion in the first instance depends on the correctness of the first proposition, we can see how great the error if that proposition be proven false, and how doubtful the whole thing becomes, if we must accept that as extremely probable, but not certain. And right here we find the weak spot of Spiritualism, the unguarded point, where no art or device can prevent the sword of truth from entering its very vitals, if wielded by a skillful hand.

Admitting the phenomena, what do they prove? Simply this, that they are produced by beings of conscious intelligence. Who are those beings? Ah, there we must stop the investigation, and trust wholly to faith. For instance: I receive a communication from a source purporting to be the spirit of my grandfather, and to-morrow another communication is received claiming to have been given by Frederic the Great. Now so far as we can see, or hear, or feel, there is nothing by which we can distinguish between these two spirits, even if it be not the same spirit. What evidence has there been given that it is not the same intelligence? Not a particle of PROOF, not even evidence. The medium speaks indeed of things known only to my grandfather, but the spirit of Frederic the Great (if conscious after death) might have known all about it. My grandfather's tones, ways, familiar words, and even form and looks, may be assumed,—it could all be done by the spirit of Frederic. That this could be done, we have the testimony of every speaker and writer who has touched on that subject; and that they do sometimes thus assume other characters, we have numerous undisputed instances. True, such assumption is a deception, a LIE; but by their own admission, they do sometimes lie, and since in this matter we have no means of [illegible] the correctness of their claims, how do we know that they do not ALWAYS lie? They say they do not, of course; but if the intelligence (for we have no evidence that more than one intelligence ever communicates through any particular medium) ever lies, how shall we feel sure that the truth will ever be told when a lie would serve better?

We are told that it is unreasonable to suppose our departed friends would deceive us so cruelly in matters of such vital importance. But we have not yet settled the question that our friends have anything to do with the matter. If they do, they will probably not deceive us to any great extent; though we are deceived by friends sometimes in this world. If they are the spirits of our departed friends, it is of very little importance whether they deceive us or not, respecting the matters of fact communicated, or the personalities assumed. The fact of their identity being established, Spiritualism would be true, and we could have no dispute in the matter. But while this fact rests upon the veracity of the spirits themselves, it becomes a vital question as to that veracity. A failure here, is a total failure.

So the case stands about like this. We receive certain communications from some intelligence hitherto unknown. This intelligence claims to be the spirit or spirits of dead men. And certain phenomena are exhibited, certain facts are communicated, which are supposed to be evidence, going to show that these intelligences are what they claim to be. But they will LIE—they admit it themselves. And the only argument we have to show that they would not deceive as to their identity, is that they would not be willing to deceive on that point. Why not on that? They do deceive on some points, and we cannot assume that they may not on all. So that the fact on which Spiritualism stands,—the intercourse of men with the spirits of the dead,—rests solely on the ASSERTIONS of "LYING SPIRITS"—assertions of spirits who have lied, and who, for aught any one knows, lie when they say they were once clothed with mortal flesh.

Evidence, to be valid, must be of such a nature that it appeals to the consciousness of mankind at large. The evidence of a clairvoyant as to the form, size, appearance, etc., of the spirits seen, is utterly valueless to prove the point claimed. And for two reasons: first, it is a kind of evidence which the majority of men can not appreciate. A medium sees a spirit, but we fail to discern it. It may be that he does see one, but there is nothing to corroborate his testimony, and we must accept his statements purely on faith;—and faith in a man who is confessedly in "an abnormal [unnatural] condition," with the fact staring us in the face that men often in an abnormal state do see many things which we know do not exist. Second, these images on the brain of the medium may be pure impressions caused by a SUPERIOR WILL. This is also admitted. And this is the foundation of that system which is claimed to be the only "demonstration" of immortality! This is the cornerstone of the system which we are asked to accept in lieu of Christ's gospel of coming peace and eternal joy, whose foundations have been cemented by the blood of millions! These are the conjectures which are to supersede the incontrovertible FACTS of Christianity! Shall we make the change?

YOUNG PREACHERS.

"Let no man despise thy youth."—1 Tim. 4: 12.

I am glad to see in the report of the "Western Ministerial Conference" some action taken in regard to encouraging young preachers; and as but few read conference reports, I wish to say something on this subject. I have long felt a desire to speak out on this subject, as I see in certain directions a disposition to neglect, and keep back, and despise young preachers. There seems to be a jealous feeling growing between the aged, gray-haired veterans, and those that have come in at the eleventh hour. I have known several instances where old ministers have gone around among the churches, and advised them not to employ young preachers to preach for them. One man said to me, in speaking of preachers, "I have been through the battle since '43. I'm none of your rowen." The spirit that was manifested shows the feeling that exists.

There is danger in two directions: 1st. Of young preachers getting above their business, and calling the older ones that "have borne the burden and heat of the day" "old fogies," (which, I am very happy to say, I never yet have heard); and 2nd, of the older ones looking with suspicion upon the younger ones, and feeling that they are stepping in to reap the benefit of their ardent toil, and getting a feeling against them, and do just what Paul commanded them not to do: "Let no man despise THEE"; "Let no man despise thy YOUTH."

It does seem that, if all had for their object only the glory of God, and the salvation of perishing men, there would be no chance for any ill feelings. Some of the brightest stars that have shone in the church since Christ established it have been men that began to preach in their youth. Such men as Huss, Wesley, Whitefield, and a host of others in the reformation, began their ministerial labors young; and some of them very young, and full of zeal and the Holy Spirit. Some of the ablest preachers among us, as a people, began to preach very young, and some of them were very unpromising and inferior in their style of delivery, and ability; but aided by the Holy Spirit, and with a determination not to be turned aside by frowns or sneers, have gone forth weeping, bearing precious seed, and will doubtless in the harvest return bringing sheaves with them, and are now looked up to as the leaders of the people. Have such forgotten that they were once young preachers, and had to creep before they could walk, and walk before they could run? In these days, age is no proof of spirituality, or youth of a lack of it. The greatest work of the Lord I have known in any town for years, has been done through the instrumentality of young preachers; but no trumpet has been blown, or cackling performed. The Lord has had the praise.

Men, who have gone forth and preached nothing but doctrinal discourses for years, until they have dried up the fountain of spirituality within themselves, and the churches where they have labored, cannot throw off the responsibility from themselves, and charge it upon young preachers. Adam tried to screen himself from blame for his sin by throwing the responsibility upon the woman which God gave him; and the same disposition is prominent to-day. It seems evident to all that what is needed now is, not to stop the mouths of young preachers, but for all, both young and old, to [illegible] THE LORD, before the glory departs and Ichabod be written. Is there not labor enough to be done? Are there not doors enough open on every hand for all to labor? [illegible] we believe what we profess, that the judgment is at hand, and sinners must perish forever unless rescued by the power of God, and saved by faith in the blood of Christ? If we did, there would be no chance or disposition for quarrels, or strife, or envy, or jealousy.

Now, shall young men, who are consecrated to God, and are willing to make any sacrifice to preach the most unpopular truth in the world, for the least remuneration of any work they could be engaged in, be put down and kept down? If so, where will the church be in a very short time, if the Lord should remain away? The veterans (and I reverence them, and sit at their feet for instruction and counsel) are falling on every hand, and their places must be filled by young men or be vacant. Shall young preachers be encouraged? Shall they be admonished? Shall they be sustained by prayers, counsel, and means?

If men are afraid young preachers will run things into the ground, let them counsel them and do them good, instead of slurring them, and getting others to turn the cold shoulder to them. I know they are looking for counsel from the older ones. "Old men for counsel, and young men for war." Dare any take the responsibility to discourage young preachers, and say to them, Leave the field? See how the frown of God has rested upon those who have rejected his messengers, whom he has sent in the past, and see if it is safe to do it. Because some young men have been puffed ahead, and got puffed up, and been an injury to the cause, is it safe to class all young preachers with this class, and treat them with coldness, indifference, contempt, and scorn? I pity the man, or men, who have so departed from God as to do it. Have not old ministers made shipwreck also. The great cause of all the wrong feeling seems to arise from our great lack of system and order. But more on that soon. (D. V.) A. P. MOORE.

"TIS THE VERY SAME JESUS."

Yesterday, two of our dear missionaries might be seen leaving our rooms, bearing in one hand a small tin pail, in which was covered some smoking hot soup; and in the other, tracts, papers, and a copy of the Lord's word, to be read among those who are not able to read it for themselves. They were about to visit a retired spot, where there was a quarter of a hundred of colored families quietly stored away from public gaze, and but few of the world ever know how they do, or what are their privations. However, it had been given these visitors to know that there lay a poor sick woman, almost wholly deprived of the necessaries of life. She had been an invalid, to some extent, for the last six years; but now her sufferings are greatly increased, and she doubtless nears the closing scene. She has lain upon her back so long that she can bear it no longer, and has to sit erect, or rather leans forward. There she coughs, moans, and prays, which sounds, alas! are often mingled with the cursings of a brutal husband. Yes, behold she prayeth. She has been sinful, hardened, and indifferent, till within a few weeks, when she became so deeply interested for her salvation that she seemed to forget the absence of fire, and the presence of a poor little hungry child at her side.

Her mind grows more calm now, and she is hopeful, though still seeking a brighter evidence of her acceptance with the Lord. Other missionaries have at length joined ours (those who seldom approach the colored), and the wants of the sick are now being supplied, both temporally and spiritually. We are told that they all reached the hovel about the same moment; one party coming especially to offer spiritual consolation, the other to add to it something to nourish that poor racked body. These christians were of different faith, but soon they were all on one united errand to the throne of grace together, breathing the sweet atmosphere of prayer in behalf of the sick and dying. Their interest was indeed a common one now, and to them all it was truly "The very same Jesus." Their voices then blended in that sweet song which so beautifully invites us to "carry everything to him in prayer," and we doubt not that it fell graciously on the ear of the invalid.

The little party dispersed, each to make other calls in their own district; but who knows the result? Who would not like to have been one of the number, to enjoy the blessedness of thus administering to the destitute and dying? We confess that when we saw the little pail go out, we felt somewhat grieved that we could not follow it; but the Lord had prepared other work, all unknown to us, and soon a precious soul came inquiring, "What shall I do to be saved? Here was something to do, and we got another copy of the blessed Bible, and for hours pointed out passages of wholesome instruction, and marked them in her own neglected Bible. She had waited, she said, "to find us alone," being ashamed to expose her ignorance, and thus that "God who moves mysteriously," appoints us each our own work. If some are out, he goes with them; if one is indisposed, and must remain indoors, he will not allow that one to feel an idler in the vineyard, but he directs sinners to these. Thanks, many thanks, are due him for the facilities we have to make others happy and comfortable; to feed the hungry, comfort the sick and sorrowing, and to teach the erring and inquiring. But it is not to us alone that this experience belongs. Ah! no. Our friends abroad have done some of this work, as well as these who are here in actual service, and we desire to make all feel glad that it is even our privilege to rejoice together in this work. Let us recount his mercies again; let us see what has influenced us to care for the lost; and whether we do the work at home or abroad, in our mission or at the bedside of the sick, we will be compelled to say it was not us, but by the same power exerted on all christian hearts everywhere. "It is the very same Jesus." E. S. MELLEN.

LOOK TOWARDS THE LIGHT.—The sailor on the midnight sea if he would guide himself across the trackless deep, must look not upon the dark, troubled waves, but at the clear, blue heavens. If the sky is overcast and the stars are veiled by the clouds, he must turn to his compass, and its needle, ever true to the pole, will point to the star, though it be hidden from his vision. So we are tossed on many a billow. If we would see heaven's guiding light, we must look not on the waves of temptation that dash and break around; but above to God, should darkness and clouds gather in the sky. Let us turn to the Bible, and it will point to Him who shines beyond the clouds in unchanging glory.—Cyrus Barney.

CHURCH FESTIVALS.

JESUS CHRIST was born to be a King, and his kingdom is the whole world. No monarch on earth's crumbling thrones has such a birthright as He. It is his by creation, and his by redemption. The home of a rebel race, whose crying sins and dark iniquities have spread over it the blighting curse of God; who despised his name, and hate his laws; who scorned his message, and nailed him to the cross!—willingly bearing the heavy burden of sin, gladly yielding allegiance to the Prince of darkness, if they may evade His service:—for all this, whatever men may say or do, though they may doubt his promise, and deny his existence, the day is surely and swiftly approaching, when at his name 'every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall confess'; when the songs of peace, and the rapturous harmonies of 'an endless life' shall wake the echoes from earth's green valleys and vine-clad hills,—while he whose Great Rebellion has made our world the abode of death, shall be destroyed and eternally forgotten.

This kingdom is not yet made manifest. Its very existence is hid from men. The KING is absent,—driven back with curses to his Father's throne. His subjects wear no royal robes, no emblems of their coming power;—bearing with meekness the scoffs and insults of their foes. His kingdom is in the hands of his enemies,—every foot of ground in his broad domain stained with blood, or wet with tears; the Capital of his empire trodden down by wicked men, and the towers of Anti-Christ standing on the ruins of his holy Temple. No wonder men sneer at his claims, and mock his prophecies of coming glory. Never before did a king make such startling claims, and never did one have so poor a prospect of making his promise good. When on trial for his life, knowing that death was close upon him, and not one in all the world who dared to call him 'Friend,' his perfect confidence in his final success never left him, but he could calmly speak those awful words, 'Hereafter ye shall see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of Power, and COMING IN THE CLOUDS OF HEAVEN!'

"The secret of Jehovah is with them that fear him." To those who walk humbly before him, feeling their utter weakness, ignorance, and nothingness in his sight, does he speak those words of hope which lift him above the cares and trials of earth; which give him a steady eye, that never quails at danger, or is blind to sin; a heart that always beats with love for him; an arm strong to work for suffering men, and quick to put aside subtle temptations and besetting sins; and above all, a LIFE that shall be young when the stars grow dim with age.

These are Christ's subjects; they who shall reign with him forever. And while the world passes on, careless and gay, these, his chosen ones, are watching to catch the first sound of his chariot wheels. That will be a terrible surprise to those who have spoken so confidently and bitterly, 'Where is the promise of His coming?'—but not to his waiting friends. They are looking for him every day,—NOW. And since the sad hour when he departed, despite the bitter trials of fire and sword, his Church has never ceased to watch and pray, 'THY KINGDOM COME.'

As a result of this, the Christian stands alone. He is among men, but not of them. The foolery and flippancy, the pomp and splendor which dazzle and befool others, are all lost on him. He sees through it all, and knows that under the whole, after all the winning smiles and honied words, there are hidden hates and passions which, unless restrained by an Almighty arm, would bind him to the stake, and make this world a Hell. He trusts his fellows, not because he has faith in human nature, or confidence in earthly promises, but because there is a God in Heaven who has promised him protection. He walks humbly before God, knowing that on His word alone he can rely for perfect safety; but he stands proudly before men, for he is to inherit a throne,—he is an HEIR OF GLORY. He obeys the mandate of his KING without question, and with reverential fear, promptly and willingly,—and all because he is thus commanded. But when the powers of earth, or the customs of society, demand his allegiance, he obeys simply so far as those commands coincide with his Master's will. And if they should conflict, there is no hesitation, no chance or ground for argument,—his only alternative is to 'OBEY GOD RATHER THAN MAN.'

And this arises not from fear, but from love. Christ first loved him, even when a sinner, and by his death, has opened a way of salvation from the darkness and terror of eternal death. By this salvation he is placed where ever after he can say with tears of gratitude, that he is not his own, but is bought with a price. And there is seen in his soul the first dawning of that mighty love from which even death cannot separate him, and which is surely awakening a counter-love, which shall make all the loves and friendships of earth seem weak and faint and worthless. So that, when he once knows his Master's will, every prompting of love impels him to obedience. And thus he is 'not under the law, but under grace,' Rom. vi. 14. He obeys, not because he fears, but because he loves. Christ himself appeals to this feeling when he says, 'If ye love me, KEEP MY COMMANDMENTS.' John xiv. 15. And so this freedom from the bondage of the law gives him no license to sin, but binds him more closely than ever to the Source of all truth and right, with those 'bands of love,' which cause him to say,

'In thy service pain is pleasure,
With thy favor loss is gain.'

With this new motive power in life, come new views of life, new methods of action, and new plans and purposes. Every desire and purpose of his life—life itself—is henceforth subordinated to the one grand purpose of pleasing his Royal Master. A moment's hesitation, the secret inclination of the heart, fill him with remorse. And like a loving bride, who lives alone to love and honor him whom she adores, so he lives only for Christ. He is emphatically and forever, 'dead to the world.'

Men talk smoothly and sweetly of fraternity and brotherhood, equal rights and universal peace; but the Christian understands it all. He knows that at the only time when God ever gave men a chance to be united in one grand Brotherhood under the King of Peace, the response went up to heaven in the angry cry, 'Crucify him! Crucify him!'—that the great Sin of earth to-day is the rejection of Jesus Christ; and that were he now in their power, the sad scenes of Calvary would be re-enacted. Yes, THE WORLD has rejected Christ, and said, 'We will not have this man to reign over us'; and when His waiting ones think of that, there is very little in the splendor and pomp of earth to charm them. In the light of this, everything is hollow and poor.

And when the Christian looks down deep into human hearts, through the disguises and behind the veils, there is one startling fact which forever blots out whatever of beauty and joy has been cast about sin and folly;—he sees that this strife for pleasure is but a token of the secret unrest within; that the confident words and the proud looks which seem to speak of security and hope, are oftimes assumed only to steel and fortify the heart against the shadows of coming evil which no mortal arm can avert; that the song and the dance, the mirth and the wine, are but the twistings and writhings of guilty souls, striving vainly to hide themselves 'from the face of HIM that SITTETH ON THE THRONE.' Yes, the world is lost, and the world knows it, and the world has rejected its Redeemer.

But above all, the Christian looks forward, and his heart leaps with joy, as he thinks of the time when Christ's loved ones shall meet in the City of God, to go no more out forever. In the light of this coming glory, earth's boasted grandeur grows dim, and her brightness pales. He sees the splendor of the golden streets, the crystal walls, the gates of pearl, and brighter than all this, the unapproachable effulgence of the 'GLORY OF GOD' which shall hide the moon, and make the sun a useless thing; and when this breaks upon his rapt vision, there is no room left for folly, or levity, or sin. And ever after, one purpose alone employs his powers, to obey the command, 'Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, DO ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD.'

And then, when there arises the question of Balls, Parties, Theatres, CHURCH FAIRS, etc., he finds no difficulty in deciding what to do. There is a dividing line somewhere, and though he may not know exactly where it lies, his love for Christ will never let him linger in dangerous proximity to that unseen boundary between right and wrong. He will always keep far over on the safe side. And when he is asked to raise money for the work of Him who has said, 'THE WORLD IS MINE,' and that by means which the Prince of this world has always used to beguile unwary souls unto DEATH; means which find their legitimate results in the gambling hell and the brothel!—and these means used in company with men who hate Christ, and mock at his coming; men whose presence is pollution, and their friendship a shame:—when he is asked to do this in the name of Jesus, he must surely refuse. He will aid as God has blessed him, but 'NO COMPROMISE WITH SATAN,' is his motto, though the 'cause' be lost. He knows that anything in which the church comes down from its high ground of 'separation,' and becomes one with the world, for whatever purpose, must inevitably 'grieve the Spirit,' and give the world the control of the whole affair. SATAN NEVER COMPROMISES, however much Christians may: and what Christ loses, SATAN GAINS. As men, Christians mingle with the world; as a church, they must ever stand alone.

This is a great Principle, wider in its application than is generally suspected. And if applied as it was by Christ, it would do what it did then, REVOLUTIONIZE SOCIETY. But this will not frighten the Christian: he will rather rejoice, for with him the path of duty is the path of joy. Men may call him 'odd,' and 'separate him from their company,' and 'cast out his name as evil'; but his Master's blessing rests upon him. And ever, amid the scoffs and the sneers, he hears the promise of his KING, 'Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee

A CROWN OF LIFE.'

THE MASTER'S WARNING.

THIS KNOW, ALSO, that in the LAST DAYS
PERILOUS TIMES SHALL COME.
For men shall be lovers of their own selves,
Covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy,
WITHOUT NATURAL AFFECTION, TRUCE-BREAKERS, FALSE ACCUSERS,
Incontinent, fierce, despisers of those that are good, traitors, heady, high-minded,
LOVERS OF PLEASURES MORE THAN LOVERS OF GOD,
Having a FORM of godliness, but DENYING THE POWER THEREOF.
FROM SUCH TURN AWAY.

Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and CARES OF THIS LIFE, and so THAT DAY come upon you UNAWARES. For, AS A SNARE shall it come on ALL them that dwell on the face of the WHOLE EARTH. . . . The end of all things is AT HAND: be ye therefore sober, and WATCH UNTO PRAYER . . . WATCH ye, therefore, . . . lest coming suddenly, he find you SLEEPING. And what I say unto you, I SAY UNTO ALL

Gems.

— An hour spent in the worship of God by prayer and good deeds, brings more true peace and joy than years spent for the world's fleeting show or vanity.

— It is by trial God proves the strength of our love for him.

— The christian's armor is kept bright by use and care, like fine steel.

— One can no more judge of the true value of a man by the impression he makes on the public, than we can tell whether the seal was gold or brass by which the stamp was made.

—Some folks are prodigiously penitent over other people's sins, and seem to think they have a special call to confess them before the whole world. They will gouge their brother's eyes out rather than leave a single mote in them.

— They who respect themselves will be honored; but they who do not care about their character will be despised.

— We are never in a better frame than when we find a holy panting for grace in the Lord Jesus Christ.

Use gentle words, for who can tell
The blessings they impart;
How oft they fall (as manna fell)
On some nigh-fainting heart!
In lonely wilds, by light-winged birds,
Rare seeds have oft been sown;
And hope has sprung from gentle words,
Where only griefs had grown.

— The disciples dealt out to the multitude the bounteous feast that Christ had provided for them, but they could not eat as fast as the Lord increased it before their eyes. The ministers of the gospel may experience the same thing spiritually.

— It is astonishing what apologies half-christians will make for those worldly inconsistencies which would cover a true believer with the deepest humiliation.

— Wherever I have traveled, I could never judge of the height of any hill, but from the vale beneath. The height of God's eternal love is only to be discovered from the vale of humility.

— The door of mercy is closed to none but those who shut it against themselves.

— Holy poverty is heavenly riches.

— We look most effectually to the Lord, when we feel ourselves helpless and empty.

— We should not repine at dark providences, for there is light on the other side of them.

— I can never give God all the glory, till I see that in myself dwelleth no good thing.

— Whatever pertains to true religion, comes to us while humbled under a sense of our spiritual poverty.

— Ministers ought to preach the gospel faithfully, boldly, confidently, lovingly, and leave the event to God. Some preachers are so afraid of their congregations, that they dare not speak out. Such never will be blessed.

LIVING EPISTLES.

Some men cannot read the Bible, and many who can read it, will not; but all men can and will read a christian, for he is "known and read of all men," being a "living epistle." It has ever been the duty of the disciples of Christ to be heavenly minded, and pure in heart, but now we have reached the time when we have reason to believe that the day of the Lord is about to dawn, the ungodly about to be engulphed in perdition, and the new earth about to be given to the saints as their eternal abode, and "seeing (we) look for such things," "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness."

We profess to believe these things, and men read our professions, and also read our lives, and then contrast the two. Do they read any thing in our lives that is out of harmony with the spirit of our great message? Do our lives recommend our message to those who "read" us? "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," and "where your treasure is, there will your heart be also;" hence, if we are heavenly minded, this principle will shine out, but if we are worldly minded, it will be a task to conceal the fact long at a time; and even a garb of hypocrisy will prove but an imperfect covering. Men will read us, and thereby be either favorably or unfavorably impressed. Let your light shine; not the theological light merely, but the light of holiness. WM. SHELDON.

SHORT CUT TO MISERY.—Begin by fancying that no one cares for you, that you are of no use to anybody—a sort of nonentity in the household, where your place would not be missed, but easily supplied. Ponder on your want of beauty, and lead yourself to believe that no one can love a plain face, or think you agreeable because there are others more charming. Fancy that every one who looks upon you makes a mental comparison which militates against you in favor of some one else. Imagine that every word said in jest is only meant to cover a more painful and deeper one—that every article of wearing apparel you don is criticized and ridiculed. Do all this, and your tendency to morbidity of feeling will so increase that in a very short time you will become one of the most miserable of human beings.

— Whatever God gives us, we should take it thankfully, and use it to his glory; but when he takes it away, our business is to say, "Father, thou knowest what is best for thy children." We could part with a thousand worlds, if we were but filled with the power of the world to come.

Take the open air,

Freely exercise,
Keep your spirits cheerful;
Let no dread of sickness
Make you ever fearful.
Eat the simplest food,

Then you will be well,
Or at least you ought to.

USING TOBACCO.

When I was a lad but fifteen years of age, I commenced the use of this filthy weed, Tobacco. I got the very foolish idea into my head, that to get a pipe into my mouth, and walk around town, made a perfect gentleman of me. I kept up this bad habit for a number of years, when I began to see what a great mistake I had made, and what a dreadful low, mean habit it was. But it had grown so strong upon me, I hardly knew how I was going to leave it off; so kept on using it awhile longer, when I made up my mind that it was doing me more harm than good, and that it must be broken off; so I went without it a few days, when I began to hanker for it. I could not resist the temptation, so took up using it again, used it a few days, and then left off. I kept on in this way for a number of years, when I saw it was of no use; it had gained the mastery over me. I had become a complete victim to this nasty, filthy weed. But still I knew it was a great injury to my health, and also a useless expense; for what I spent for tobacco might have been used for a much better purpose. But ere long I began to see what a great sinner I was. I felt a heavy burden on my conscience; and as day after day passed away, the burden grew heavier, and I found no relief until I found it in believing in Jesus. And then I could see what a sinful habit was the habit of using tobacco. And once more I resolved to leave it off; this time asking God to help me, for my own strength was not sufficient. When I made this resolve, I had enough tobacco about me to last about one week. The enemy came round, as he always does at such times, and told me I had better use up what I had, and then leave it off. I took the tobacco and pipe and threw them into the stove.

I went without it one week. At the end of that time, as I was walking along the road one day, I met one of my old comrades, and he took a piece of tobacco out of his pocket and offered it to me. This, of course, was a great temptation, after I had used it so many years, and I could not have resisted it in my own strength; but I felt that it was a sinful habit, one that would, if I clung to it, keep me from entering the kingdom of heaven, and I knew that it must be broken off; so I trusted in the Lord to help me, and, blessed be his holy name, he did help me. I thought I would never be tempted to sin again; but in a few days from that time, as I was out in the barn looking round, what did I see laid away very carefully up on one of the beams, but an old pipe and a piece of tobacco; one that I had placed there myself some time ago. I stood there looking at it for some moments, not knowing whether to use it or not. The old evil one kept saying to me, O how foolish. I would use it this once, and then you need not use it again. You have not had a good smoke for some time; so don't be so foolish. Then, on the other hand, I seemed to hear the voice of conscience whispering and saying to me, It is a bad, sinful habit; one that does not at all correspond with christianity; and if you yield this time, it will be easier the next, and thus you will keep on until you get in the same place where you was before; so I saw that it would be more foolish to yield than it would to resist, and, thank the Lord, he helped me that time also, and the tempter left me, and since then I have had no desire at all to indulge in this low habit.

Now, my friends, those who read this who are in the habit of using tobacco, and especially those who profess to be christians, let me say to you that it is a sin, and is a great injury, both bodily and spiritually, and to the cause of Christ. It will gain the mastery over us just as much as intoxicating drinks, and will make us complete slaves.

Why, only the other day, I saw a man over eighty years old, who had got out of tobacco, and was traveling four miles to get more. It was one of the coldest days that we have had this winter. Do you think he would have felt as anxious, on such a cold day, to go to a prayer-meeting? And then just think how very foolishly money is spent in this way, when it might be given to help the suffering ones around us; for God has said, Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, and "inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Some professors say they do not feel condemned for using it. Allow me to say, that we sometimes get into that place where we do not feel condemned for anything we do. We go on from one sin to another, until we entirely hush the voice of conscience, so that although it speaks to us, there is so much rubbish heaped up there that we do not hear it. Now, dear reader, let us all make this resolve, that we will get right into the place where the Lord would have us, and then we shall be willing to feel condemned when we go astray; and we shall hear the low whisperings of the voice of conscience, as it speaks so softly to our hearts, telling us that religion does not consist in any such low, filthy habits as using tobacco; that Christ set no such example for us to follow; and if we are truly his followers, we shall strive to do just as he did in all things; he has said nothing vile or unclean can enter into the kingdom of heaven. Now let us be willing to think of all these things, and pray to him to make us truly his followers, doing just as he did in all things; and then when he comes to gather his children home, how glorious it will be to have him say to us, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, . . . enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." J. L. CHUTE.

RUNNING UP STAIRS.—Often practised, it is ruinous to health. An eminent physician once said to us that he wouldn't go up stairs faster than a walk if the house was on fire and he had valuable property to save; and we believe he wouldn't. Much walking up stairs is especially injurious to women; and frequent running up stairs is a sure ticket to heart disease.

AN ELOQUENT PREACHER MADE A DRUNKARD BY HIS CIGAR.

I knew a young clergyman, whose oratory obtained for him the admiration of many influential persons, among whom was a gentleman of fortune, who courted his company and taught him to smoke. The young minister was warned of his danger, but could not be persuaded to renounce what he considered a harmless indulgence, and claimed that his cigar soothed his mind and composed his feelings. A friend, in reply, told him, the mind never wanted composing, when in health, by artificial means, but only when discomposed by improper causes, or the feelings soothed but when they should not be irritated; and added, "Beware how you indulge in a bad habit." Impatient under the rebuke, the clergyman rejoined, "I smoke but seldom, and could almost do without it." Seldom and almost are two fatally ominous words. Seldom will become regular, and almost be converted into always. And as smoking and drinking are sworn companions, "Let me beseech you," said his friend, "not to make them yours. Ministers should be a fence around the pit of perdition. Some inexperienced youth may see you smoke, and imitate your example, and become a confirmed smoker, and, sooner or later, a confirmed drunkard. The line of demarcation being once effaced, he may soon be lost in the vortex of sin."

Little did this young preacher suppose this to be a picture of his own mournful case. But, by his habits, his splendid talents soon became dim, his hearers forsook him. His wealthy host, who first taught him to smoke, witnessed his growing desire for stimulants, and with a look more expressive than words, would say of him, "that in spite of praying and preaching, professors of religion like the good things of this life as well as others"; and that, after all, saints and sinners were pretty much alike."

The days of this eloquent young clergyman were ended in ignominy. Around a once most promising, talented preacher, a gloomy curtain was drawn; and a life which promised to be happy and illustrious, was early brought to a miserable close. His intemperate habits, it was supposed, killed his young wife, and made a beggar of his child. He died in a mad-house, blaspheming the very Savior he had preached.

A VALUABLE RECIPE FOR BURNS.

Ointment made of sweet oil and lime water has proved to be the most soothing and healing antidote yet used for burns. For a quart, put a piece of unslacked lime as large as a butternut into a pint of cold water, for one half hour; strain, and add about as much sweet oil as will stir together until it mixes, or becomes a kind of ointment. This will keep in a bottle ready for use at any time. Spread it on a cloth, and lay it on the burn. Keep it wet or moist with the same until well. The pain will soon cease after it is applied, so as to keep the air from the burn. Do not undo it to let the air strike it till it begins to heal. H. MUNGER.

ALCOHOLIC RHEUMATISM.—A writer in the British Medical Journal thus alludes to a disease, new in name, if not new in experience, in this country:

1. Alcoholic rheumatism is the result of a distinct cause.
2. It is produced by drinking alcoholic beverages.
3. It is slow in effecting a marked change in the system.
4. It does not usually appear before middle life.
5. Its effects are produced by the accumulation of the alcoholic fluids taken into the system.
6. It causes stupidity, stiffness in the body, hobbling gait, and ultimate lameness.
7. It causes changes of structure, produces chronic alcoholism.
8. The remedy is abstinence from the use of all fermented alcoholic drinks, and taking vigorous exercise in the open air.

CHANGING CLOTHING.—If clothing is to be diminished, it should be done in the morning, when first dressing. Additional clothing may be safely put on at any time. In Northern States the under garments should not be changed for those less heavy, sooner than the middle of May. Woolen flannel ought to be worn next to the person, by all, during the whole year, but a thinner material may be worn after the first of June.

Half the diseases of humanity would be swept from existence if the human body were kept comfortably warm all the time. The discomfort of cold feet, or of a chilly room many have experienced to their sorrow; they make the mind peevish and fretful, while they expose the body to colds and the inflamations which often destroy it in less than a week.—Hall's Journal of Health.

TO KEEP PURE AIR IN A SICK ROOM.—To avoid the foul air produced by burning a kerosene lamp in a sick room or nursery, put the lamp in a wooden box (a raisin box will do) outside the window, with the open side of the box facing the room. The box can be fastened in its place in any convenient way. In ordinary weather the lamp will burn full as well outside, and the air in the room will be much purer.

BLEEDING FROM THE NOSE.—Put a piece of paper in your mouth, chew it rapidly, and it will stop your nose from bleeding. This remedy has been tried frequently, it is stated, and always with success. Physicians say that placing a small roll of paper or muslin above the front teeth, under the upper lip, and pressing hard on the same, will arrest bleeding from the nose, checking the passage of blood through the arteries leading to the nose.

SWEET REST TO COME.

Ye workers in God's vineyard,
Who work with might and main,
Though weak, and faint, and weary,
You labor not in vain.
'T will not be always toiling,
'T will not be always grief;
The happy day is hasting
That brings us sweet relief.
There is sweet rest to come,
There is sweet rest,
There is sweet rest to come.

O, this shall stimulate us
To bear the heat of day,
In service of the Master
Who will the "penny" pay;
In deeds of noble daring,
By brain, and tongue, and pain;
The Master comes at twilight,
We shall be rested then.

Then cheerfully we'll labor,
And mingle toil and song;
In earnest, good endeavor,
The weakest may be strong,
None but the true and faithful
The promises can test,
None but the weary worker
Can know the sweets of rest.

Then up! to work! ye idlers,
The day is waning fast;
This is no time for sleeping,
The time for sleep is past;
The fields are white to harvest,
The gleaning time is come,
The day of toil is ending,
We soon shall rest at home.

IMMORTALITY OF MAN.

BY WM. SHELDON.

Speculations concerning the question of immortality are both abundant and ancient. The fact having been revealed that in some sense man is possessed of a soul, men have taken the liberty to assume, without proof, and contrary to evidence, that the soul is an invisible personality; and not contented with this unwarranted assumption, they have gone a step further and assumed that it is also deathless in its nature. Though they are so ready to assume these two points, they are all afloat when we press them to decide concerning its origin, whether pre-existent, transmitted, or directly created at birth. Immortal shades or spectres of the dead are only creatures of blind imagination.

The Bible introduces the theme of immortality, and presents the matter in its true light; but instead of representing a part of man as already immortal, and destined to outlive the body, as a separate personality, it treats of "mortal man" (Job 4: 17), and never intimates that there are two personalities composing what we call man, the one the exact duplicate of the other, the one visible, and the other invisible, the one mortal and the other immortal; but it treats of man as a unit, having a soul and spirit, but not in the sense of personalities. Neither the soul or spirit are ever pronounced immortal.

We will briefly examine all the statements of the Bible concerning immortality, and thus learn what its teachings are upon this topic.

1. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor and glory forever and ever." 1 Tim: 17. Here the great truth is distinctly stated, that the supreme God is immortal. All believe this.

2. "The blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings, and Lord of lords, who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto." 1 Tim. 6: 16. In Rev. 19: 16, we read of the return of Christ from heaven, bearing this inscription, "King of kings, and Lord of lords;" and Paul speaks of him as now "dwelling in the light," and presents him as the "only" one from the human race who "hath immortality," or the only one from the ranks of men yet immortalized: "Christ being raised from the dead, dieth no more" (Rom. 6: 9): he is now immortal.

3. "Who [Christ] hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel." 2 Tim. 1: 10. Death was abolished in the person of Christ at his resurrection, and he bore away the keys; eternal life was then for the first time conferred on man—"the man Christ Jesus"—and immortality was then imparted, and exhibited in the resurrected person of Christ; for, says John, "the life was manifested, and we have seen it, and bare witness, and show unto you that eternal life which was with the Father and was manifested unto us." John 1: 2. Though Christ was once possessed of a dying nature, and did die, he was not only released from the grasp of death, but was made deathless: "death hath no more dominion over him." Rom. 6: 9.

4. "Who [God] will render to every man according to his deeds: to them who by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life." Rom. 2: 7. Here man is represented as destitute of immortality, and is told how he may availingly seek for it. God will render eternal life to the faithful seeker, at some future time, when mortality shall be succeeded by immortality; for while mortality may be the basis of a short life, nothing short of immortality can be the basis of endless life.

5. "For the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed. For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality. So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, Death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. 15; 52–54.

Here the term immortality occurs twice, and is applied to the condition of the saints at their resurrection. In no other text in the entire Bible can the term be found. This is just what the Bible says on this topic, and all it says. In brief, we are informed (1) that Jehovah is immortal: (2) that Christ is the only one yet immortalized from the ranks of mortals, and is now dwelling in the realm of light, to which mortal man never gained access, and will in due time show himself in the capacity of the "only Potentate" due the world, in which capacity he has never been "seen" by mortal man; (3) that Christ not only abolished death in his own person, at his resurrection, but brought endless life, and an immortalized existence after death, to light, not theoretically, but practically, by exhibiting himself as the "first fruits;" which fact is set forth "through the gospel;" (4) that man may "seek" for immortality by "well doing;" (5) that the righteous will receive immortality at the resurrection.

This is the unperverted theology of inspiration on this topic. Any conflicting theory, no matter how popular, is unreliable, speculative, and both un-scriptural and anti-scriptural.

The prevailing sentiment among modern theologians, that the human soul or spirit is immortal, is without foundation in reason or scripture; and more than this, it clashes with both philosophy and revelation. Who can believe without evidence? and who can believe contrary to evidence? It is weakness to believe without evidence, and rashness to believe contrary to evidence. Where is the evidence that the soul is immortal? What prophet ever affirmed it? What apostle ever declared it? What inspired witness ever pronounced it immortal? Not one. The Bible uses the term soul eight hundred and forty times without once pronouncing it immortal; and why is this? Man is represented as possessing both a soul and a spirit—two distinct things, and not two names for one thing: for we read of "the dividing asunder of soul and spirit" (Heb. 4: 12:) and of "your whole spirit and soul and body" (2 Thess. 5: 23); so that the spirit is as really distinct from the soul as the soul is from the body; and the claim that the soul is a personality would also make the spirit a personality as really as the soul,—thus locating two personalities within each man.

While we freely admit that the Bible often speaks concerning the soul of man, and the spirit of man, we deny that a personality is meant in a single case. Spirit as a personality (as in the case of God, angels, demons, and also when used as a synonym of man) is one thing; but the spirit of a personality is a different thing altogether; for while God, as a spirit, is a personality, who would be wild enough to affirm that seven personalities are indicated by "the seven spirits of God"? Rev. 3: 1.

There is just as much authority for pronouncing the seven spirits of God seven distinct personal deities, as for pronouncing the spirit of man a personality distinct from man. If the "seven spirits of God" are so many influences or elements, instead of so many personalities, why insist, without proof, that the spirit of man indicates an invisible personality within the body? This error arises from confounding spirit as a being, with the spirit of a being. Who does not know that the sun as a light is different from the light of the sun? In the first case, reference is made to a body, and in the second case to something residing in or proceeding from the body.

So "soul" as a personality, is a different thing from the soul of a personality. Let this point be understood, and it will save much needless confusion and speculation.

The term soul is often used as a synonym of "life," and "mind;" but neither life or mind are personalities. The Hebrew term nephesh, from which soul is translated in the Old Testament, is rendered "life" in the singular and plural form one hundred and twenty times. The Greek term psuche from which soul is translated in the New Testament, is rendered "life" forty times in the singular and plural forms. Life is not a personality, but the principle within the personality that causes the personality to live.

The original word translated soul is sometimes rendered "mind;" but mind, instead of being a personality within man, is only a result of a living organism. Mind is feeble in infancy, which could not be the case if it were an immortal personality; as that which can be increased can also be diminished; and that which can be diminished in the least degree, can be reduced to non-existence by the same principle, which cannot be true of immortality. Mind becomes childish in old age, or becomes impaired by disease, and is often deranged, and finally dies; "In that very day his thoughts perish." Ps. 146: 4. These philosophical and scriptural facts clearly negate the assumption that the mind is immortal, even it if were a personality; but this fact, with the fact that mind is not a personality, sweeps immortal-soulism into oblivion.

Life, not being a personality, cannot have a separate conscious existence, even though it is often called soul, as in Job 12: 10. "In whose hand is the soul of every living thing;" and in Prov. 12: 10—"A righteous man regardeth the life [nephesh, soul] of his beast." If life is a personality in man, it must also be in beasts.

Mind, not being a personality, could not have an independent conscious existence, even if it were deathless; but add to this the fact that it does die, and the supposition of its immortality expires.

"Soul" is a term used not only in the foregoing senses, but also as a synonym of person, liable to die, and sleep in the grave, as in these texts:

"All they that go down to the dust, shall bow before him: and none can keep alive his own soul." Ps. 22: 29.

"Thou hast delivered my soul from death." Ps. 56: 13.

"He spared not their soul from death." Ps. 78: 50.

"Let my soul live and it shall praise thee." Ps. 119: 175.

"The eye of the Lord is upon them that fear him, . . . to deliver their soul from death." Ps. 33: 19.

"My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than my life." Job 7: 15.

"The soul that sinneth, it shall die." Ezek. 18: 4.

"Eight souls were saved by water." 1 Pet. 3: 20.

"Every living soul died in the sea." Rev. 16: 3.

"What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" Ps. 89: 48.

"O Lord, thou hast brought up my soul from the grave." Ps. 30: 3.

"His soul draweth near unto the grave." Job 33: 22.

"He will deliver his soul from going into the pit." Job 33: 28.

"Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption." Isa. 38: 17.

"God will redeem my soul from the power of the grave."—Ps. 49: 14.

"Deliver my soul from the sword." Ps. 22: 20.

"They smote all the souls that were therein with the edge of the sword: utterly destroying them." Josh. 11: 11.

Many similar texts might be quoted in opposition to the doctrine of soul-immortality.

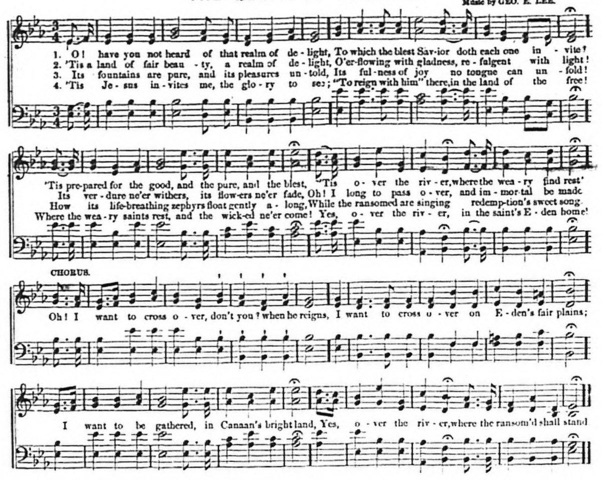
But I may be informed that man has a spirit which may be immortal, even if the soul is not. We fully believe that man has a spirit, but do not believe that it is a personality within him. Spirit, as a personality, is different from the spirit of a personality, as before shown. In Eccl. 3: 21 we read concerning "the spirit of man," and also "the spirit of the beast," and all this in the same text; and the original word ruach is used for spirit in both cases—"ruach of man" and ruach of the beast:" and more than this, it is affirmed of men and beasts in verse 19 of the same chapter, "They have all one ruach." The spirit of the one is as really an invisible being as the other. If the "spirit of the beast" is an element, the spirit of man cannot be a personality, as they have "one ruach"—one in kind. An element must be meant in both cases, or an organized being in both cases. The latter conclusion would involve the existence of a future world for disembodied beasts. We read that "the spirit shall return to God who gave it" (Eccl. 12: 7); but did God give it as a personality? If so, it will return to God as a personality; but if it came from God as an element, it will return as an element. In the record of man's creation, we learn that after man was formed out of the dust of the ground, God "breathed into his nostrils the breath of life," or "the spirit of life"; not an entity, to distinguish him from the beasts, but something as really possessed by the animal creation as by man, in proof of which we read: "And, behold, I, even I, do bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, wherein is the breath of life, from under heaven." Gen. 6: 17. "And they went in unto Noah into the ark, two and two of all flesh, wherein is the breath of life." Gen. 7: 15. "And all flesh died that moved upon the earth, both of fowl, and of cattle, and of beasts, and of creeping things that creepeth upon the earth, and every man; all in whose nostrils was the breath of life, of all that was in the dry land died." Gen. 7: 21, 22.

Thus we learn (1) that the only spirit that is to return to God is the spirit that God "gave" man; (2) that the only spirit that God gave man at his creation was "the breath of life," or "spirit of life"; (3) that the animal creation also possess the "breath of life"; hence, to assume that it means an entity instead of an element, in the case of man, is virtually to admit the same in the case of the animal creation. We have already seen that the mental spirit, or human mind, being a result of the physical organization, and not a superadded entity, lives and dies with the human organism. It is not a personality in men, God, nor angels.

We are often referred to texts that speak of "giving up the ghost," as though a personal ghost were meant—the very thing to be proved instead of assumed. That the giving up of the ghost is synonymous with dying is evident (1) from the fact that in the Old Testament the original from which "gave up the ghost" is translated, is sometimes rendered "died," and by other equivalent words; (2) in the New Testament ghost and spirit are both from the same original term; and we have already seen that the spirit of a man is not a personality, but a life-producing element, which man yields up in death; so "the body without the spirit is dead." This is the only kind of ghost to be delivered up by man in death. A personal ghost is a creature of imagination.

THE REALM OF DELIGHT.

Music by GEO. E. LEE.



For the World's Crisis.

MUSINGS UPON THE PRESENT IN CONTRAST WITH THE WORLD TO COME.

BY S. S. BREWER.

While musing upon my surroundings, amid the scenery of a beautiful landscape, my mind was deeply affected at the mutations of nature. Autumn once more had tinted the beauties of the past summer with the hectic flush, the unerring precursor of its speedy dissolution. While gazing upon a beautiful plant, attired in virgin green, seemingly as vigorous as in early spring-time of nature, I could but exclaim—Alas! like poor, frail humanity, it stands unconscious of the death-breathings of the autumnal winds, sighing in mournful strains through the soon-to be leafless groves and forests.

O how beautiful are the mutations of nature! and how instructive to the meditative and thoughtful mind. Poor, frail mortality, like vegetation, is ever in a transition in the present state. But how soul-stirring and heart-cheering to anticipate the soon-to-be realities of the Christian's hope.

The frosts of autumn have breathed like an angel of death upon the beauties of nature. The foliage of grove and forest presents a rare combination of colorings; the beautiful vermillion, the light and deep red, every tint from the delicate, pale yellow, to the deepest shade, blending with the various-hued green; and frequently, as though nature would present the contrast in her sublimest manner ere the last fibre of its attenuated existence is severed by the rude breath of winter, the pendant beauties become more beautiful, till, trembling, the last tiny fibre loosens its hold and falls to earth, and, like all departed beauty, is seen no more.

While vegetation has its spring, summer, autumn, and decay, myriads of beasts, birds, fishes and insects come into being, and perpetuate their existence by devouring each other, and in turn being devoured, presenting a constant and ever-mindful evidence of the apostle's inspired declaration: "The whole creation groaneth and travaileth in pain." While man, to whom his Creator said, "Have dominion over every living thing," at every pulsation of his heart approximates nearer the dismal and gloomy confines of the grave. Disease, whose name is legion, has made earth a charnel-house to hide the lord of creation, whom death makes an object so repulsive that its surface cannot allow it to rest upon. Sin hath spread far and wide the

"Lazar house, and noisome dark, wherein are laid
Numbers of all diseases, all maladies
Of ghostly spasm, or racking torture qualms,
Of heart-sick agony, all fever kinds,
Convulsions, epilepsies, and fever catarrhs,
Intestine stone and ulcer, colic pangs,
Demoniac frenzy, and moping melancholy,
And moon-struck madness, pining atrophy,
Marasmus, and wide wasting pestilence,
Dropsies and asthmas, and joint-racking rheum"

The cup of humanity is mingled in the present state, in a greater or less degree, with calamities and suffering. Man's probationary term is like the prophet's flying roll—"Full of lamentation, mourning, and woe." And who, that has been permitted by faith to enjoy a prelibation of the world to come, can possibly refrain from exclaiming in the apocalyptic aspiration: "Surely I come quickly. Amen. Even so, come, Lord Jesus." Or in the heart-gushing desire of the sweet singer of Israel: "Let the whole earth be filled with his glory." Amen.

All this side will continue to be as it hath been; all the other side will be eternal light, life, sacred rest, and perpetual, supreme liberty. Earth this side will quake, vibrate, and totter beneath six thousand years' accumulated and precipitating curse. Heaven, once so calm and serene, will continue to scowl, blacken, and pour its devastating floods in hoarse, destructive mutterings, with fierce lightning's flash, and thunder's booming roar. Until the day breaks and the sun of eternal day arises, the gloom of sorrow will hang still heavier, and earth continue as it has been, the realm of sickness, dying, and death; monumental emblems will continue to wake afresh the sad, fond memories of departed joys, and the warm tears gush in bitter sadness from our eyes.

Till then, the tolling knell of death's indiscriminate victims, just gathered and gathering amid the death-rattling gasp and piteous moans of heart-rending grief, will never cease to fall in gloomy, dolorous, monotonous sounds upon the ears of weepers o'er tenderest affection's nearest ties. Till then, o'er earth abroad the sick shall be thickly strewn, and all around the dead. Till then, the groans of nature will resound in mournful dirges upon the ears of mortality: "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Till then, we must sing in mingled grief and glorious hope of immortality at the appearing of our ever-living Head—

"Saint after saint on earth,
Has lived and loved and died,
And as they left us one by one,
We laid them side by side;
We laid them down to sleep,
But not in hope forlorn;
We laid them but to rest in hope
Till that bright, glorious morn.
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come."

Then, infinite power, love, greatness and perfection will be manifest in the consummation of the promise: "As I live, the earth shall be filled with my glory." Then the seraphic vision of the son of Amos, whose heart was lit with inspiration's hallowed ken, will appear in all its full-orbed sublimity to the ecstatic admiration of the blood-besprinkled multitudes "out of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues." Then "thou shalt no more be termed forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah; for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married."—Isa. 62: 4.

God will celebrate that sacred nuptial tie at the appearing of the Bridegroom; and never, no, never will infinite wisdom permit that covenant to be violated; beyond that Satan nor sin will ever more intrude. The last enemy, which is death, will then be destroyed.

"Earth's chosen ones shall live again,
A countless, tearless throng!
To wake creation's voice anew,
And swell the choral song.
Go, earth, go wipe thy falling tears,
Forget thy heavy woe;
Hope died not with thy first-born sons
Six thousand years ago."

Till the regenerating trump sounds, we must exclaim with the aged Jacob, "Few and evil have the days of the years of my life been"; or, with the patient seer of Uz: "My days are swifter than a weaver's shuttle."

"Forty years once seemed a long and weary pilgrimage to tread. It now seems but a step. And yet, along the way are broken shrines, where a thousand hopes have wasted into ashes; footprints sacred under their drifting dust; green mounds, whose grass is fresh with the watering of tears; shadows even which we would not forget. We will garner the sunshine of those years, and with chastened step, and heavenward hope, push on toward the evening, whose signal lights will soon be seen swinging where the waters are still, and the storms never beat."

O come, precious Redeemer; haste and consummate thy promise; thy loving bride hath often, with warm affection's tears streaming from her uplifted eyes, looked and listened with deep intent to hear the rumbling of thy chariot, or catch the first glimpse of the coming "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory," now reserved for all the pure in heart; until the day dawns and the shadows flee from the top of the mountains.

Clouds and darkness hang pensively o'er the face of nature. It is the gloom of Autumn. The sighing of the winds through the branches of the trees hard by where I sit falls in mournful cadence upon mine ears. 'Tis nature's voice pealing its dirge o'er the forever faded and transient beauties of the past. It seems but yesterday nature smiled and the feathered choir warbled their sweetest notes of praise from their blithe and merry throats in joyous glee. They have fled to sunny climes, and the hoarse breathings of Æolus fall in gloomy contrast with their fascinating melody. We are amid nature's bloom and nature's gloom. Nature's morn, noon and night will chase each other in rapid succession, until the fiat of the mighty One shall "make all things new."

Reminiscences of a few short years wake to mind sad memories. Alas, what changes have transpired. O death! how indiscriminate has been thy unrelenting sway. Eyes that were wont to sparkle with sweet delight are now dimmed and closed in the dark, damp grave. Faces once beaming with joy and radiant with smiles of christian grace are hid away. Hands that once and again were extended across the door-sill to grasp the weary pilgrim, and bid a hearty welcome, are folded and rigid across bosoms that ever pulsated with fond, loving and tender hearts. Tongues that out of the fulness of those warm hearts uttered fervid supplication, thanksgiving, and words of tender sympathy and love, are silent in death. These sad recollections of the loving and loved, time can from memories of the present never efface. Fathers, mothers, children, alternately mourn in bitter grief, and from the depths of mental anguish, their fondest loves, their early dead; bright skies are mantled in gloom, and clear suns are obscured at noonday.

The exiled bride of the "Man of Sorrows" mourns the loss of her sacred dead. 'Tis her night of sadness and weeping; her habiliments are weeds of widowhood. Sanctified ties, entwining around and cementing holy hearts in bonds of heavenly union, are constantly severed and severing, and with the weeping son of Hilkiah she oft exclaims: "She wept sore in the night; her tears are on her cheeks"; or, like the son of Jesse: "I have mingled my drink with weeping." O! who can behold the grief-heaving bosom of fathers, mothers, and juvenile innocence gathering and standing around and beside the bed of the death-stricken victim, as the dim taper of life is flickering into darkness and death's cold embrace, and "refrain our voice from weeping and our eyes from tears"? "Jesus wept" o'er one he loved. It is truly Christ-like to weep.

Since tracing these thoughts, what multitudes have gathered up their feet in death. The hand that sets this in typical form for the imprint, may move with great dexterity; but reflect with what greater velocity mortals are every instant groaning out their existence in the agonies of death, and each pulsation of our hearts beating a dead march in closer and still nearer proximity to the domain of death. One eminent writer estimates the amount of death's victims per annum at thirty-two millions, per day about eighty-seven thousand six hundred and seventy-one, per hour three thousand six hundred and fifty-three, per minute about sixty-seven. Thus at least every seconda human life is ended. How solemn the thought! This very instant multitudes are heaving their expiring groan. Truly earth is one wide, extended, universal ante-chamber of death.

Dearly beloved reader, in view of the mutability of everything in this present state, can you fail to perceive how positively essential it is that we should seek to obtain an admittance into the "land of the living," where sin can never taint, sickness blast, nor death devour? Time is fast making inroads upon some of us; it is ploughing deep its furrows; its frosts are blanching our scanty locks, dimming our vision; but few of our grinders remain, and "the few that look out are darkened"; and with tremulous and broken strains we often sing:

"I am weary of sighing o'er sorrows of earth,
O'er joy's glowing visions that fade at their birth;
O'er the pangs of the loved that we cannot assuage,
O'er the blightings of youth and the weakness of age."

And thus it will remain until the Nobleman returns to redeem the purchased possession. Then the "goodly pearls" down deep in the dark blue sea, precious dust, hidden in caverns o'er which its ever restless billows have surged and dashed its briny foam amid the war of elements, will hear "the voice of the Son of God, and come forth." O happy, blissful morn! Then the palm-bearing, victory-crowned martyrs, who laid down their lives for the love of Jesus and his precious word, will "shine as the brightness of the firmament, and they that turn many to righteousness as the stars for ever and ever." Then praise the Lord, oh my soul. The bones that have been calcined by the fires of the horrid Papal "auto da fe" will be resurrected, and come within the city of the living God with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads. Then the whole new earth will be at rest and break forth into singing.

O illustrious morning, dawn! Dark clouds gather fast around. Darkness is settling o'er all the earth. The ways of Zion mourn. Few love her solemn assemblies. Fairs, festivals, picnics, "broad churches," broad ways, and every way but the strait and narrow way, with few exceptions, are well sought for, well paid, and well patronized, by sadly-deceived patrons and easy-minded teachers, who must mourn and howl in bitterness of spirit when the Almighty shall make inquisition for blood.

The professed spouse of Christ has broken her vow and committed adultery with the world. She taketh more pleasure in the giddy halls of mirth and frivolity, where the jeer, jibe, and the empty laugh from unregenerated hearts resound, than where the meek and lowly in heart assemble to greet each other in holy communion and offer prayer and praise. O merciful Redeemer, hasten, oh! hasten thine appearing. Millions of earth's teeming population are crossing the line of accountability, and, comparatively speaking, but few, very few indeed, are brought in a scriptural sense to a saving knowledge of the truth and obedience to the requirements of the gospel. Come, oh come, glorious Emancipator; hasten the Jubilee of jubilees, when every yoke, bond, chain and fetter shall eternally disappear at the brightness of thine appearing. Then thy multitudinous host, redeemed by thy sacred, all-cleansing blood, shall break forth in rapturous, holiest and grand acclaim: "Alleluia! for the Lord God Omnipotent reigneth."

Dear, weeping one, then we shall have sacred and eternal reunion. Then heaven, earth, air, mountains, hills, vales, rivers, purling rills, crystal fountains; every atom above, around, beneath, throughout a redeemed universe, will bear the impress of perfection. O then the wondrous, amazing change! Earth's almighty Architect will spread throughout his re-created, immortal realm his garniture, inviting the admiration of the white-robed, immortal host. O transporting, ravishing thought! a universe instinct with IMMORTALITY. Who, oh, who that possesses an "earnest of that inheritance" within his heart, can avoid joining in harmony with the aspiration of the seer of Patmos, in view of the glory then to be revealed: "AMEN; EVEN SO, COME, LORD JESUS." Then this long-predicted glory will be consummated: "The Lord thy God in the midst of thee is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will rest in his love, he will joy over thee with singing."—Zeph. 3: 17.

"Hallelujah! hark! the sound,
From the centre to the skies,
Wakes above, beneath, around,
All creation's harmonies.
He shall reign from pole to pole,
With illimitable sway;
He shall reign when, like a scroll,
Yonder heavens shall pass away."

NOT EVERY ONE.

"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."—MATT. 7: 21.

Many persons will go to church regularly, and make long prayers, using large words, just to be heard of men; come to the Lord with lip service, while their hearts are far from him. And daily they will think in their own hearts, Lord, I am a great deal better than such an one, for I do this, that, and the other, and I am always seen at church, always make good prayers, and give good exhortations, and so on.

But, my friend, do you do all these things (that you boast of) as Christ would have you do them, in the spirit of meekness, and for the upbuilding of his cause? or do you do them merely to get a great name in the world, and feel that you are exalted far above your humble christian neighbor, who is doing all that he can for Christ in his humble way?

God has said, "He that humbleth himself shall be exalted," and "he that exalted himself shall be abased." Now what is it to humble ourselves? Let us go to Christ our Savior, he who was so meek and lowly on earth, and bow low before his throne, smiting our breasts like the poor publican, and ask him to have mercy upon us poor sinners, and show us ourselves just as he sees us. And when we thus see ourselves, poor, unworthy, sinful creatures of the dust, and consider what a lowly, humble life he led here below; when we think that this great King, our Savior, who had such power, could condescend to come to this earth in the humble manner that he did, taking upon himself our infirmities, bearing the cross of shame and suffering, meekly submitting to having the crown of thorns placed upon that noble brow, and when being reviled, reviled not again, all for our sins, paying the debt for us that we could not pay by bearing all these things, and shedding his own precious blood;—oh, when we think of all these things, shall we not feel that surely we have no merits of our own to plead; that we can only come in the name of Jesus, this blessed Savior, and cry, O Lord,

"I'm a poor sinner, and nothing at all,
But Jesus Christ is all in all."

When we get into this place, Christ will reach down his strong arm and lift us up; and by faith we shall be enabled to exclaim, Glory to God, I have seen the Mount in all its beauty and holiness. We shall feel that our feet are placed upon the rock Christ Jesus, that our hope is sure and steadfast, like an anchor to the soul. We shall feel that we have indeed been exalted by Christ himself; and oh, how much better this honor that Jesus can give us, than all the honor that can be conferred upon us by a thousand worlds like this.

God looketh not at the outward forms of religion, nor to our own self-estimation; that will never save us; but he looketh at the heart. "The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." In meek humility bend the secret soul to him, and let it be known that penitence is there.

Thus let us humble ourselves before the Lord and follow Christ's example, remembering that he has said, "Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven."

QUERY.

A question for the advocates of the immortal soul doctrine: As a child born into the world has a mortal body; how and when does it get an immortal soul? Does the Lord create the immortal soul just as men are born into the world, or has he immortal souls ready since the creation, to put one after another, for a longer or shorter period, in a mortal body? B. KNEPPER.

— I find that when the saints are under trial and well humbled, little sins raise great cries in the conscience; but in prosperity, conscience is a Pope that gives dispensations and great latitude to our hearts. The cross is therefore as needful as the crown will be glorious.

OUR NEW OFFICE.

We are much pleased with our new office. It is on the corner of Hanover and Salem Streets, over the "Boston drug store," directly opposite the old office. The entrance is at No. 1 Salem Street. We believe we were directed to the place in answer to prayer.

RUTLAND.

Saturday, April 9th, we returned to Rutland, and had another good meeting, when several more started in the service of the Lord. We learned that their prayer meetings had been good during the week. The Lord is truly doing a great work in R. Sabbath day, April 10th, was one of special interest. Four more were baptized, and several new ones have decided to serve the Lord. There appears to be no abatement yet in the interest felt in the meetings. Many are under conviction, whom we hope to see yield to Jesus, and thereby obtain pardon for their sins, and a right to the tree of life.

On our arrival in Rutland, we were shown the following from the Rutland Herald:—

ELD. MILES GRANT AND CHRISTIAN UNION.

Censure has been cast upon many of the churches, and upon the pastors of the churches because they have not and do not co-operate with Elder Grant in the meetings he has held and is holding in this place. He, and those who labor with him, claim that his efforts are unsectarian and are of such a character, that all can and should labor with him in advancing that cause, so dear to every truly christian heart, and the advancement of which is so greatly needed in our community.

If this be strictly true, then, indeed, such censure is deserved. Especially is it deserved by such, as, like myself, have earnestly wished, and do yet as earnestly desire, the union of all Evangelical societies in behalf of a common cause, and against a common foe.

But for one I am compelled, however reluctantly, to keep myself as a pastor of a church, from joining actively in the meetings with Mr. Grant. I am and have been compelled to do it in self defense. When this gentleman first came to town, and even before he came, I was assured by others and by himself after he came of his determination to be unsectarian, and to avoid issues that would engender controversy between different societies, or lead to division among themselves. It is true that many, judging, as they said, from a knowledge of his peculiar tactics in former years in this and other places, distrusted all such pretensions and predicted very much such results as have, unhappily, been realized. For one, however, I felt, and acted for a time on the feeling of giving Elder G., a full and fair opportunity to redeem himself from these imputations and suspicions. I hoped that he would; for a time it seemed as if he would.

But it has not been altogether so. For, while he has thus refrained from openly advocating those peculiar views which are most obnoxious to us as a religious people, yet he has not kept himself free from interfering, at least, in fact, with our rights as pastors and churches. He may not have intended this; I trust that he did not; but, if not, he has evinced a sad lack of judgment. It certainly is and has been most trying to us, as pastors, to see members of our churches so warped in their judgments, and so absorbed in their new affection toward him, as to prefer him and his counsels to ours; and through his counsels be led to violate their covenant obligations. It has been a sore evil to us and to the great majority of our members, to see, as the result of his teaching and position; members of other churches running hither and yon seeking to lead unwary minds to conform to Elder Grant's wishes and ideas. It has been more especially so, to know, that he, personally, has solicited members of at least one church, to do what he must have known, would prove both afflictive to us and in direct violation of our views of a sacred ordinance.

I grieve, Mr. Editor, to write this. I had hoped better things from the labors of one, whose christian character I dare not impeach, and from being familiar with whose writings, and with the spirit manifested therein, together with his protestations against all sectarian issues, had led me to hope, that his coming and his labors would be attended with great good and no considerable drawbacks. I now believe that he has done good. There is clear evidence of this. Many of us have heard his sermons and have rejoiced in their utterance. Absence from the place and pressing duties at home have prevented me from hearing him but thrice. I was much pleased with two of these sermons, the preaching of the other I then deplored; I deplore it still; I said so, substantially, at the time; I say so still; it was ill advised; its results have been unhappy.

If Elder Grant wished to baptize those converted by his immediate labors, no one would seriously object; though laboring, as he claimed to, wholly in an unsectarian way, and for, ostensibly and professedly, the promotion of christian union, it would have been, even with respect to such persons better to have left their baptism to the pastors of the churches they should elect to join. Such is the course of Mr. Earle and all other eminent evangelists. No other course can avoid antagonism with different churches; no other way is consistent with a strict unsectarian course, or can be promotive of christian union.

Wishing Elder Grant all manner of success in well doing in his Master's cause, I cannot, in conclusion, Mr. Editor, but express the hope, that he will in future, both here and elsewhere, wherever he labors for the advancement of a common and vital christianity, take such a course as will really and most widely promote it. A. F. BAILEY.

Bro. Bailey is the pastor of the M. E. church in Rutland. The sermon which he "deplored" was on baptism. Several members of the Methodist church were baptized; and judging from their shouts when they came out of the water, and their testimonies since, we think the "results" have been very HAPPY.

WOMAN FOR PRESIDENT.

It is a fact that there is serious talk of an effort to make some woman the next President of the American people. Should it be accomplished, it would be no more strange than many other events that have transpired. One woman is already named—Mrs. Victoria C. Woodhull,—who has a reputation among the bankers and brokers in Wall St., New York, in the firm of Woodhull, Claflin & Co. What next?

AFFAIRS AT ROME.

Affairs at Rome are in a very unsettled state. The Pope's condition is critical. He does not know which way to turn. His way is hedged up on all sides. He may well say that the Mene, Mene, tekel, is already written against him. The days of Rome are numbered.

Says the New York Herald:—

"Our letters and our cable news are full of trouble so far as France versus the Council and the Holy See are concerned. The Syllabus and the dogma of infallibility have aroused France from one end to the other. A cable despatch assures us, as our letters from Rome had warned us, that France will not have the Syllabus confirmed or infallibility declared. The one and the other will compel France to reconsider her position and in all likelihood to modify her concordat with Rome. Count Daru, though a good Catholic, is a man of sense and imbued somewhat with modern ideas, plainly speaks out and warns Rome that if the Jesuits who now surround and govern the Holy Father carry the day, France will have no choice, but to break off from all her obligations Rome-ward, and that it may be necessary to withdraw her troops from the Holy City and, indeed, from the entire Papal territory. For some such result we have long looked, and, although it is not yet absolutely certain that France is committed to this policy, we have every reason to believe that under their new conditions the French people will not submit to any Roman tyranny. France is not unwilling to protect Rome; but the day has gone by when the French people will submit to be governed by Rome."

CHURCH LOTTERIES.

It is strange that any one, who professes to be a follower of Jesus, should have the least sympathy with the lotteries, grab-bags, and other gambling operations practiced in church fairs at the present day. Is it not time to awake to the perils that surround us in these last days? These gambling operations have gone so far that worldly people cry out for reform. The following is from the Watchman and Reflector:—

"The practice of disposing of goods at church fairs by lottery has been adjudged by the city court at Waterbury as partaking of the character of gambling. An action was brought to recover the value of an umbrella disposed of in this way, and the judge in rendering his decision, assumed strong grounds against the legality of such lotteries, and cited a late decision of the Supreme Court of the State, in support of his decision."

HERETICAL POPES.

It is claimed by the Catholics that the popes are holy because they are the successors to St. Peter. As well might all mankind claim that they are pure because they are the descendants of Adam, who at the first was innocent. It would be strange reasoning to argue that there can be no filth in a stream that starts from a pure spring. Those who talk of the "holy apostolic succession," should first prove that all the popes have been holy; and that no corruption was in their nature. If it can be shown that a single pope was an unholy heretic, then the purity of the apostolic stream ceases.

It should also be remembered by those who claim that ordinations are not valid unless administered by some one in the priestly succession, that their stream is but an offshot of the Papal river; hence partakers of the same nature. It is sheer nonsense to talk of any pre-eminence in sacred things, because we have descended from any man, or set of men. The stream of human nature became corrupted in Adam, and can be purified only by receiving the divine nature individually through the operation of the Holy Spirit, as the result of confessing and forsaking our sins.

We have been led to these thoughts by reading the following:—

The Neue Freie Prese of Vienna, has been excluded from circulation in Rome on account of a masterly article of which the following is a resume:

"From St. Peter (in supposing that he ever was at Rome) to Pius IX. there have been 297 Popes, including 24 anti-Popes, and one female Pontiff; 19 of them left Rome, and 35 reigned in foreign countries; 8 ruled a month only; 50 one year; 22 two years; 54, five; 51, fifteen; 18, twenty; and 9 only for a longer period. Among the 297, 31 declared usurpers and heretics; out of the 266 legitime, 64 died violent deaths; that is to say, 18 were poisoned and 4 strangled, the rest perishing in other ways. Independent of the Popes of Avignon, 26 Pontiffs were deposed, expelled, and banished from Rome; 28 others could only maintain themselves by the aid of a foreigner. Out of the whole number, 153, or more than half, showed themselves unfit for the office; 5, in spite of their vows, had children; Leo IV., it is said, was a woman, and died in child-birth. Urban V. confessed his fallibility, and submitted to the censures of a council; two other Popes, Victor III. and Adrian VI., confessed in public that they had sinned, etc. . . . Certain it is that in this long history of Christ's vicars, note may be taken of frequent absences of the Holy Spirit."

THE NEW FRENCH GOVERNMENT.

Napoleon is making some important changes in the government of France, which are well calculated to add much to his popularity, and general influence. He is managing with great skill and success. He keeps in advance of all other rulers, and seldom fails to accomplish his object.

When speaking on the situation in France, the editor of the New York Daily Herald, April 12th, says:—

"The Emperor's letter to Prime Minister Ollivier has, as we expected, given France a new sensation. France is again before the world as prominently as she has been any time this last half century, and France is, perhaps, more occupied with herself than she has been during the same period. No one in or out of France of any note has a thought for Prince Bonaparte or for Henri Rochfort, or, indeed, for any of the names so recently so prominent. Our minds are filled, not with thoughts of coups d'etat or of centralization or of the one man form of government, but with thoughts of great changes, of large concessions, of peaceful revolutions, of mysterious self-abnegation and the probable results of the same. . . . It must be admitted that the reform which the Emperor has initiated is a big sensation for France and the world generally.

Our news from day to day shows that in the Senate, in the Corps Legislatif, and, indeed, among all ranks and classes of the French people, the proposed experiment of the Emperor is occupying men's minds to the exclusion of almost every other subject. It is so novel, so unexpected and so revolutionary that it is not much to be wondered at that the country should be divided between those who think it an imperial dodge and those who think it an imperial blessing. . .

It is not our opinion that much difficulty will be experienced by the Emperor at the hands of the Senate; for, of all legislative bodies, the French upper chamber, since the days of the Council, of the Ancients, downward, has been at once the least active and the most obsequious. In the meantime the Senate is a body of the Emperor's own creation; there is, therefore, but little likelihood that it will oppose his plans. The real difficulty in the case is the reconciliation of the empire with universal suffrage and with paid deputies. We await the action of the Corps Legislatif on the Senatus Consultum and the Emperor's proclamation with some interest. The immediate future is big with the fate of Napoleon and of France."

EVANGELICAL ALLIANCE.

The conditions of membership in the Evangelical Alliance have of late been the subject of considerable discussion in several European branches of the Alliance. The German branch in reconstructing its standing committee, establishes the principle that every evangelical christian is a member, and that formal enrollment is merely a matter of convenience. No test of membership is adopted. In the English branch, the Rev. T. R. Birks, the honorary Secretary, has resigned on account of a complaint by certain members against a book published by him; as containing sentiments contrary to the fundamental declaration of the Alliance of the everlasting punishment of the wicked. The "Evangelical Christendom" regrets the introduction of a controversy on this subject, especially as Mr. Birks professes to maintain, with the "Alliance, "that the reward of heaven and the punishment of hell are eternal."

Dr. Blackwood. who was chosen to succeed him as Secretary, declined the place, because he would not seem to cast censure upon Mr. Birks, or undertake either to approve or condemn the book, especially at a time when it is so necessary that christians should be in harmony and love, undisturbed by abstruse speculations.—The Methodist.

It is evident from the foregoing, that Mr. Birks, a very able minister, has taken a bold stand against the doctrine of eternal misery. The punishment of the wicked is eternal death in hell, or hades, not eternal life in misery. Quite a number of ministers, eminent for piety and intelligence, are advocating the Bible doctrine, that the wicked will be eternally destroyed, and for ever cease to exist as conscious beings. On this subject we have not a shade of doubt.

At a meeting of the Advent Christian Publication Society, September 2nd, at the National Campmeeting, it was

Resolved, That we raise THREE THOUSAND DOLLARS for the Tract Fund the ensuing year.

It is proposed to raise this amount during the year for the publication and free distribution of tracts. The value of these little preachers in the work of enlightening and saving men from darkness and death can hardly be overestimated; and the generous and liberal stewards of the Lord's money are earnestly invited to contribute according to their ability in aid of the good work. Send on your dimes and dollars, brethren, with a liberal hand, and receive, by and by, the reward of the liberal giver.

PASTORS.

As a people we have been so opposed to following any of the denominations around us, that we have not been willing to profit by any of their experience. Some have had so much to say about a settled ministry, and men preaching for a salary, that they are not willing to acknowledge their wrongs, but still they will not go and preach unless they are sure of about so much pay. It must be evident to all observing people, that we greatly need order. It is one of heaven's first laws.

There are in New England more than fifty preachers that are going around in a well-beaten path, and often running across each other's track. One Bro. arranges a string of appointments, and then when he takes up the Crisis he sees some other Bro. has in his string run across his track, and they conflict. Now, either one or the other must change their programme, or they both be present, which is a common occurrence, and is apt to cause jealousies and ill feelings, and some are inclined to think there are altogether too many preachers. There are, in some sections, with our lack of system. In sections where there are not churches organized, it is well to have evangelists to break up the soil, sow the seed, and raise up churches; but after that I am satisfied that our system (or lack of system) of running is not in God's order. Christ gave some evangelists, and some pastors and teachers. After evangelists have raised up churches, pastors are needed to feed, care for, and watch over them, and add to them by the blessing of God.

Our ministers accomplish little comparatively, because they do not stay long enough in a place. Many churches among us need pastoral labor, but they have fought so hard against a settled ministry, that they are not willing to concede their error, and get a faithful man of God to settle among them and take the oversight, "not for filthy lucre, but of a ready mind," for fear they will be accused of following other denominations.

If we would come into some kind of system, our ministers would be better sustained, and there would not be any need of so much being said about their being poorly paid for preaching. About one third of what is paid for preaching goes to pay car fare, and oftentimes it takes nearly all, and sometimes more than all ministers receive to get to and from their appointments; which would be saved if men did not have to go so far to preach. I do not see the sense or propriety of one man's going from seventy-five to a hundred miles to preach on Sunday, when there is a minister close by, in full fellowship, who has to go as far in another direction.

A great many churches seem to be converted to certain men, instead of to God and his truth, so that they cannot listen to the truth unless it comes through just such a channel. If it is the message we love, we will love that if God chooses his own messenger. A minister going to a place on Sunday does not get acquainted with the wants and needs of the people; and they sometimes act just like some quack doctors,—give certain doses for everything. If a minister shows himself "approved unto God," he will rightly divide the word of God, that he may give to each their portion, which he cannot do if he knows nothing of their wants.

It is an easy thing for men to have a set of doctrinal sermons, and preach them everywhere; but look at the effect. Backslidden preachers can do that, and they do it, and are sapping the vitality from our churches in many places. One man may come along and preach a doctrinal sermon, and the next Sunday another come and preach on the same subject, and the next Sunday another on the same; and in one place they told me they had heard the same thing preached for six Sundays, I think, until the lambs were well nigh starved to death. Surely, I thought, a reform is needed. The lambs are neglected, and are suffering for food. They are starving on dry theory. It is good to have a frame to a building, but when it is all frame it will not shelter from the storm. A garment needs warp, but if it is all warp what is it good for? Where we preach one doctrinal sermon, we ought to preach at least two practical ones.

Much labor is in vain, or nearly so, by our ministers going to a place and preaching two or three sermons, and then off. This pleases the ministers of the different denominations, for they well know that after the minister is gone, by judicious pastoral labor, they can counteract the most of his influence; when, if they thought he was going to stay among them for a time, at least, they could not muster forces enough to do it. They well know their forte is pastoral labor.

Again, many preachers go to places and labor hard in tears, and get the soil all mellow for the seed, and then go elsewhere for some one to come along and sow a crop of tares, and divide and distract the flock. This might all be avoided if we had system, or order. There is danger of killing everything by formality; and in avoiding this we have gone off the bridge on the opposite side. Some seem to think that the first thing to be done is to make a creed, or declaration of faith, in order to have system; but I fail to see the necessity or propriety of that. Where others have gone too far, can we not see their wrong and avoid it? Because some have gone too far, shall we say we will not go at all?

We as a people have accomplished much for the last thirty years in awakening the theological world, and getting many to leave the papal dogma of inherent immortality and eternal torment, and embrace the Bible truths instead. Many in all the different denominations have seen the truth, and confessed it, and others are now shaking like a leaf; but we have done and are doing little, compared to what we might do if we were a unit, and worked in harmony, and with some kind of system. Can we not do more than we are doing? We ought to fortify and save what territory we have taken, and press into new fields, or into the "regions beyond."

Some of our ministers are just calculated, by God's help, to break up the fallow ground, and they ought to keep at it. Others are calculated to teach and instruct and visit and labor as pastors, and they ought to do it. We often hear it said of some man, "He is a real good man, but not very much of a preacher." Such men are better calculated for pastors than the class are that are said to be "great preachers and mighty reasoners, but have not got much spirituality." Think of these things, ye men of God, and with prayerful hearts look to Him for wisdom in this matter. It does seem that something more might and ought to be done than we are doing, and that some system ought to be adopted; not that we ought to lay out work for years to come, but go at what we are about as though we meant work, and we may expect God's blessing to attend us.

ELDERS GRANT AND CORNELL'S "DISCUSSION."

Some few days since this work of 126 pp. was placed in my hands, by the kindness of Sr. M. E. Orr, the same having been left in her care by an adherent of the fourth precept in the decalogue. I grasped the work readily. Full of interest to know how the battle commenced, was carried on, and concluded. I in a few hours reached the negative's last declaration—"And thus I leave the subject with you." I then returned to the commencement of the work, with the determination to read, study, compare, reflect, and meditate upon every word, phrase, sentence and argument in the book, noting and referring to every passage of Scripture referred to. This I did, and I read a host beside. I am exceedingly and deeply interested in this friendly, earnest, and enthusiastic debate. In my judgment, it will in due time accomplish much good.

It is a question of much interest to me, and has been for nearly twenty years. I have studied and searched it through and through years ago, as many as fifteen or twenty times. Some ten years ago, I bade a friendly farewell to my last doubt on the question in debate, and my mind has not been disturbed any since with fears as to the binding obligation of the fourth precept. I am (blessed be God, whose light shines out of darkness) full of peace relative to it. After reading the discussion through the second time so thoroughly, I still find myself without a doubt, and in no way discontented. I lost my last doubt touching this theme in the gospel according to St. Matthew, 23:1–3.

As soon as I found myself on the "rock Christ Jesus," I commenced an earnest labor with my erring brethren. God blessed my labors, and in a short time I was instrumental in leading six of their ministers out of it, and many of their private members. The success I met with caused the leaders of the Sabbath interest to shun me, and not love me as the "royal law" and "new commandment" require, but J. H. Chase chose to publish me to their churches as a "wolf in sheep's clothing," all of which I frankly and freely forgive. It is enough for me to know that I have the truth and enjoy the love of it, for these "elements" are nearer and dearer than life itself to me; so I am forced by facts immutable to stand on the side of Christ, with his affectionate "Bride"—the "Lamb's wife"—the knot having been tied thoroughly over eighteen hundred years ago. And as many children have been begotten since by the "law of faith," or "the gospel of Christ," or "of your salvation," we have now quite a good, loving, earnest "brood" of children hovering around Christ, with tears in their eyes, imploringly looking into the face of Jesus for counsel, wisdom, guidance and grace, to meet the demands which their loving and sympathizing hearts call for; even the "bread of eternal life," and "the rest that remaineth for the people of God."

Having canvassed this "Discussion," and finding sentiments that I cannot conscientiously endorse, I would, by the blessing of God, like to present what to me is permanent and sanctifying truth, and will stand the ordeal of investigation.

It is announced publicly that the seventh-day Sabbath is a memorial of creation. Frankly admitted. Now their God gave this memorial day to his "Bride"—the Jewish church, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt into the wilderness, as a memorial not only of God's labor of creating the world in six days, but also of their own bondage in Egypt under the slave-holding hand of Pharaoh, continually reminding them of their own labor, as well as that of God's; and at Mt. Sinai God makes obligatory upon his dear "Bride" the Sabbath commandment, as well as all other "commandments," "statutes," "ordinances," and "judgments," all of which were to be observed from their exodus onward throughout their generations for a perpetual covenant; yea, even until Christ Jesus our Lord, by his great love, mercy and grace to a doomed world, wrought out the good, exceedingly great, superlatively grand, beautiful, and sublime in the highest degree of infinite magnificence, the soul-cheering system of eternal redemption, which by far surpasses the work of creation, even as much as the "ministration of the Spirit" surpasses the "ministration of death written and engraven in stone." That world of "far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" infinitely outshines the creation of anything belonging to this mundane system.

And permit me to ask, in all candor, whether the day upon which this "redemption" was lawfully secured to the church, by Christ's resurrection early upon the first day of the week, and that too by divine appointment, ought not to be faithfully observed by his Bride—the Lamb's wife, as a memorial throughout an endless eternity. I answer, Yes, and beyond a doubt I believe it will be so. Isaiah says (66: 22–23), "For as the new heavens and the new earth which I shall make shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain. And it shall come to pass that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. Then every day in the week will certainly be a Sabbath. It is an endless rest. Glory be to God and his dear Son our Savior. In the second will, or testament, through or by which we are sanctified (Heb. 19: 9, 10), we find the following phrase: "Upon the first day of the week," eight times. The original word for this first day is Sabbaton, precisely the same word that is used for the original Sabbath (Saturday). Sabbaton is here used figuratively, and applies to the whole week, to be kept as a memorial of eternal redemption. It must be so, for it is impossible for the church of Christ to observe any one day of twenty-four hours, scattered as they are among all nations, and in all latitudes; but when the whole week is embraced, then all can with ease observe the "law of Christ," or "of liberty," or that "law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus [not in Moses] which has made us free from the law of sin and death." "The Sabbath [of the Lord, it is said] was made for [the] man." Mark 2: 27. Very true, but for what man?

The term "man" has three different significations in the Bible. 1. 1 Cor. 15:47—"The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." Here is its primary signification,—one organized being. Job 14:1,—"Man that is born of a woman is of few days and full of trouble." "But man dieth and wasteth away, yea, man giveth up the ghost, and where is he?" "So man lieth down." "If a man die, shall he live again?" Here the term is used in an unlimited sense, and includes all mankind. Mark 2:47; James 1:1, and 2:20; Rom. 9:20, 2:1, 3, 17.

All these passages refer to the Jews as a nation, and consequently the Jews as a body are called a "man," "vain man," "a Jew." The original Sabbath was made for the (this) man. Christ addressed this man when he said, "The Sabbath was made for man." This Jewish man is no longer a man now; the nation has been destroyed long since, and dispersed among all Gentiles nations, and has become part or parcel of other kingdoms.

But is there no man in this latter sense now in being? O yes, verily. Paul says in Eph. 2:14, 15, "For he is our peace, who hath made both one [Jews and Gentiles], and hath broken down the middle wall of partition between us, having abolished in his flesh the enmity, even the law of commandments [and the "covenant of ten commandments" is certainly included] contained in ordinances, for to make in himself one new man, so making peace." Here, then, we have in this age, under "the ministration of the Spirit," one new man. Christ is lord, or governor, of this second organism. No Sinaiatic Sabbath is obligatory upon this body of Christ; not the first word of it. Whatever the Holy Spirit wrote out upon the fleshly tables of apostles' hearts, is obligatory upon christians in this age, or dispensation; nothing else. The Holy Spirit on the day of Pentecost never set one type for that sentiment. If so, the apostle would have mentioned it somewhere in his writings; for he "shunned not to declare the whole counsel of God," and kept back nothing that was profitable to the church. If it is really there, why, then, it must read on his and their hearts just as it did read on the tables of stone, and they must have expressed it in some of the writings of the second will, or testament; or if not, then they withheld some of the Holy Spirit's correspondence; hence are culpable, and proved themselves traitors to the government of God as clearly revealed in the "face of Jesus Christ."

Where is the seventh-day Sabbath? Let me ask, Where are the tables of the old covenant? In the Jewish synagogues? at Battle Creek? or have they been translated to heaven? or where are they? It is said "the ten commandments" were engraved on two tables to be preserved and perpetuated throughout time. The direct and overwhelming truth is, that that whole system of God's government connected with the Jewish nation,—call it what you may, testament, will, covenant, ordinance, book of the law, constitution, institution, commandments, statutes, judgments, handwriting of ordinances, etc.,—all, all, literally all, in the mind of God, closed up business, having honorably discharged its obligation when Jesus Christ bowed his head and gave up the ghost. And there is not in my judgment one fragment of evidence in the entire book of God that militates against this position. The seventh-day Sabbath is an ordinance, a shadow; and Paul says, "Wherefore if ye be dead with Christ from the rudiments of the world, why, as though living in the world, are ye subject to ordinances (touch not; taste not; handle not; which all are to perish with the using), after the commandments and doctrines of men? which things indeed have a show of wisdom, in will worship and humility and neglecting of the body, not in any honor to the satisfying of the flesh." Col. 2:20–23.

The above words—"touch not; taste not; handle not," are so direct, pointed, searching and withering touching the Sabbath ordinance, I conclude that, as I never have, so I never will violate this express command of Jesus Christ, and advise all others to do the same thing. Those who have can repent and find pardon, provided they go direct to Christ for pardon; for the blood of the new covenant still cleanses from all sin, and sin is the violation of the law of God given by Christ, which is the second will or new covenant by which we are sanctified.

Christ is Lord over all. God says, "Hear him." "He shall speak all that I shall command him."—Deut. 18:15–18. Christ said to his chosen embassadors, "Go teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost; teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." Did they preach a full gospel after they were endowed with the Holy Ghost or power from on high? Judge ye. A. N. SEYMOUR.

THE COMING OF CHIST IN INDIA.

The following extract, which we cut from the letter of a Madras correspondent of the Chicago Interior (Presbyterian), will be read with interest, showing, as it does, the universal expectation of a coming One in all lands, especially in heathen India, and among the followers of the "false prophet." W. B. H.

"It is remarkable how the whole world seems on the tip-toe of expectation, looking for some remarkable event shortly to happen—just as it was in the days immediately preceding the birth of Christ. And surely the day of his second Advent is drawing nigh. What a glorious prospect it is when 'the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and when he shall reign from the river even unto the ends of the earth." A remark I read in the Madras Times, an entirely secular paper, impressed me greatly. After giving a brief summary of the events that took place in the world during last year, and the present position of things, it said:

"Surely none but the most foolish and senseless of men, but must pause at such a time as this, and ask what do all these things mean? Surely the crisis of the most remarkable events the world ever saw are at hand.'"

When worldly men see these things, how is it that christians do not awake? I do feel every day more and more convinced that 'the night is far spent, the day is at hand'—the bright and glorious day of Christ's coming.

"We have been talking on these subjects, and Mr. Tracy, who has been a missionary in southern India for over thirty years, said:

"Let me tell you what the people down there think. The Mahometans say that for the next few years there are to be a great many troubles all over the world, wars, earthquakes, storms, and famines. Then their tenth and greatest Imaun (prophet or high-priest) since Mahomet, is to appear. Then all the wicked are to be cut off, and he is to reign in righteousness all over the earth. The Hindoos also state that there has been a recent incarnation of Vishnu; that he is at present in the north of India, somewhere in the neighborhood of Cashmere; that he is now about thirteen years old; that he is being thoroughly educated, as as soon as he arrives at man's estate, he will proceed to Delhi, where he will be placed on the throne of his ancestors; that immense treasures are still concealed in that city, which he by his divine wisdom will soon discover; that before this, however, there will be the most dreadful wars, and plagues, and the strangest sights seen both in earth and heaven. Kings and queens, from all parts of the earth, will come to bring him presents, and to worship him, and those who do not, he will destroy. All those who are very wicked will die, but the good will all continue to live most happily while his reign shall last, which will be many thousands of years.

"Mr. Tracy tried if he could not trace these traditions up in some way to the Bible, but they are believed and held where the christian religion was never heard of Is it not singular?

"COME OVER AND HELP US."

To the flock of God scattered abroad, greeting. Peace be multiplied unto you. We are preaching the gospel in this great western field, alone, excepting a few raised up since we came here, to help preach the glad tidings of the soon coming King. Wherever we go to preach this truth, it moves the people; but the Lord wants more help in this field. Will not some faithful minister of Jesus Christ come over and help us? We want good, godly help; men that are willing to hazard their lives, if need be, for the cause of our Lord Jesus Christ. We do not need any "hobby riders," for there are a plenty of that stock here now. I have a big tent boxed in Minnesota, ready for shipping at any time. We can use a tent eight months in a year in this country. If some one or more will come, I will send for it. I cannot use it alone. May the Lord stir some good, able minister to come over at once. You can live here as cheaply as anywhere, and it is the finest and healthiest country under heaven.

You would be astonished to see the darkness that broods over the minds of the people. How true, "Like priest, like people." Come on, and get out of each other's way, where there is room enough and to spare. We have great reason to rejoice at the blessed work in this town, which at first looked very discouraging. One young brother of the Christian church, who had been licensed to preach, came out first, very strong in the faith, and has been talking it everywhere through the town, and scattering tracts. His church abused him, demanding his papers, and finally turned him out. He bears it all meekly for Christ's sake. He is now preaching in the surrounding towns. Since the Baptist minister gave his lectures to prove "eternal torment," two of his best members, young men of talent and promise, and who had long thought of the ministry, and have been studying for that purpose, have come out strong on the truth, and are very happy talking it everywhere. They told us, at the close of our little prayer-meeting (which was a blessed one), that "we had three sheaves sure in this town." How wonderfully the Lord moves. Three ministers raised up as our first fruits in California. The truth is spreading, and many are interested. The Lord is at work in his own way, and no one can get the glory but him, for it has moved so silently and unperceived.

We are drawing near the end, and the battle is waxing hot. He that endureth to the end shall be saved. God help us to endure, and make full proof of our ministry. Brethren, pray for us. In hope, D. D. REED.

GRAINS FROM CLINTON ARCH MISSION.

The gleaners have been out gleaning till near eventide. Wearied with the labors of the day, and heart-sick at what our eyes beheld, we bent our steps homeward, still smelling and tasting the poisonous effluvia we inhale as we tread the various courts of filth. One man, I believe, had spent the night in dissipation, returned home early in the morning, with violent pain in his head. In a few hours he was a corpse. They sent immediately for a coroner, who kept them waiting nearly two days and nights before he came near them. They of course could not bury or move him till the coroner came, if it was not in six months.

As we entered, there sat a woman the picture of despair, with one little child on her lap, and three or four others around her: while the dead man lay upon a lounge near the fire, with his feet in a chair, and the cockroaches running over his face. Such a stench arose from his discomposing body, and everything was so saturated with the fluids oozing therefrom, that we turned from the sickening scene with horror and disgust, that man's inhumanity to man, should make such countless thousands to mourn, because a sable face was their's. Then with stomachs already nauseated, we passed through the filthy court, and held our breaths as we climbed the rickety stairs before us. O what a spectacle presented itself, as the wretched abode admitted us to its unhallowed precincts. Every element of our nature revolted, as we glanced at its filth, poverty, and misery; but its most formidable feature was the vice which stood out in such bold array. We saw at once, the house was of the vilest character. White and colored mingled together like pepper and salt. Females who had sold their virtue for a mess of pottage, had evidently become more abandoned than man can be. One writer has remarked, "It took angels to become devils;" so, in proportion, does high-toned, pure-minded woman sink to corresponding depths of vice and crime. We felt our hearts yearn over them, in their degraded condition, and God gave us a message for them; which, attended with his Spirit's power, we trust was not without its effect upon them. As the judgment, with its scenes was portrayed to their view, in contrast with the advantages of a life of purity, the Lord helped. The upheaving bosom, the flowing tear, and the saddened tone, showed that the virtue was gone, and friends gone, and reputation gone; yet mercy lingered, and the Spirit of God still strove with unhappy Magdalenes. After singing, praying, and giving them tracts, we left them in the hands of him whose compassion embraced in its sacred folds such vile outcasts as these.

Gleaning still a little further, we turned our steps toward our twilight home, still nauseated and weary; and in spite of ourselves, we could not forget the comforts we used to enjoy at our homes. Could the history of this little mission be written, it would be one complete panorama of trials and blessings, emergencies and deliverancies. This mission was instituted on a very small scale. Its operations have been quiet and unobtrusive; but the convicting and converting power of God has been manifest in its results. I have never seen such humble, unpretending endeavors so signally crowned with success, as has attended the labors of these missionaries. True, it was opened under very inauspicious circumstances; and is not a stranger to the trials, and dark days which generally characterize the infancy of an institution of this kind. But the Lord has given repeated assurances of its divine authenticity. Four weeks ago, as I came to this field of labor, I found Sisters Mellen and Dow both considerably worn down, by over-taxation, both of body and mind. The work is somewhat arduous. We have a flourishing Sabbath School, and an adult Bible class, with meetings in three several directions, and a long way apart. At almost every meeting we we have one or more seeking the Lord.

We do not enter the whitened field with a nice chapel of Gothic structure or gilded signboard; but with meekness and humility we glean a wisp here, and a grain there, which the reapers have left; and we trust in the great harvest day these gleaned sheaves will be gathered into the garner of the Lord, to whom be all the glory. Yours in the courts and alleys, A. E. BENNETT.

Correspondence.

From S. D. Sinclair.

Brethren and Sisters:—Jesus says, "In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer, I have overcome the world." "Be of good cheer" implies that something glorious in the future awaits the suffering ones, who have made Jehovah their everlasting strength, and are drinking from the sweet fountain of his love. The Spirit reveals unto such what has never entered into the unregenerate heart to conceive of the things that he hath prepared for those that love him. The soul that has pitched his tent close to the fountain of wisdom, and plunges within its sacred depths, quaffing the pure streams issuing therefrom, enjoys a precious season of fat things, which one in bondage by the carnal mind cannot comprehend. The chastened soul rises from the low vale of humiliation, and soars to Pisgah's heights; and what a glorious view of the promised inheritance of the saints is there beheld. We draw nearer to Jesus, singing—

"Nearer, my God, to thee; Nearer to thee";

and he draws near. We find ourselves in the living vine plucking sweet clusters therefrom. The delicious fruit is so enlivening and refreshing, it makes the desert heart rejoice and blossom as the rose; makes the parched land like a pool; opens the eyes of the understanding, giving wisdom to the simple, unfolding the prison doors and loosing the captive soul; giving beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, and the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness.

As we receive the rich clusters, we scatter some abroad, thinking of the word, "Cast thy bread upon the waters, and thou shalt find it after many days." Also, "In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thy hand; for thou knowest not which shall prosper, either this or that; or whether they shall both be alike good." Therefore let us go "forth weeping, bearing precious seed"—the word of life; if not faithless, we shall "doubtless return with joy," bringing some precious "sheaves" for the garner of the Lord. Shall we hear the gracious words—"Well done," and wear the glittering crown in the kingdom of glory? "Go work in my vineyard," says the Master to every believer in Christ, "and whatsoever is right I will give thee." Shall I have the approbation of my Savior, saying, "She hath done what she could"? "The day is far spent," and what is done must be done quickly. Shall I receive a "penny"?

How have the precious gems committed to our trust been improved? Have we been faithful, an example to the believers in word, in conversation, in charity, in spirit, in faith, in purity? May we not hide our Lord's money? These thoughts are solemn, thrilling, appalling, to my soul, and I cry, Lord, save, or I perish. Shall we say we cannot serve God, trials press so heavily, sickness lays his palsied hand upon us, poverty's vale to tread, the rod of persecution to encounter, and many evils arise to hinder our advance?

Ah! there is just the place to glorify God and honor our blessed Savior—in the fires. For unto us it is given not only to believe on him, but also to suffer for his sake; and if we suffer with him we shall also reign with him. Thus by patient continuance in well doing, and rejoicing in tribulation, we may win a starry crown, a coronet of bright gems, when the Master appears, and be of those who, having come out of great tribulation, have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb; and we shall see his face forevermore. The dark night of sorrow will surely end, and, behold, He cometh whom our souls love. The chariot wheels rumble in the distance; the sound of the bells on his garments floats on every breeze. O let us be ready to hail the glad day, bringing many sheaves with us. Your sister in Christ,

Brewer, Me. SARAH D. SINCLAIR.

BRO. O. BENDIXON writes from Chicago, March 29th, 1870:—"Our meetings in Chicago have stirred up the people, and some of the ministers especially. Two of them have begun to write articles on the immortality of the soul. When trying to prove that the soul of the wicked goes down to hell-fire at death, he quoted Job 21: 13:—"They spend their days in wealth, and in a moment go down to the grave." To prove that the soul of the righteous goes to heaven, he quoted such texts as Ps. 31: 5; 73: 24, 26.

The other day, I went to this minister, and after talking for awhile, I asked him this question concerning the soul: If the soul, as you affirm, can now live without the body, and act, think, sing, praise, or do anything, could it not do so before it entered the body? and if it could, what need of giving it a body, and thereby introducing an innocent thing to partake of all the miseries, sorrows, and tears, to which the body is exposed in this world, and, according to your doctrine, in the world to come much more? Then, half angry, he told me not to speak like that, for it was blasphemy."

SR. S. CARLEE writes from Lunenburg, Feb. 8th, 1870:—"I have been climbing up Mt. Zion all alone. There is no one here who believes with me that Christ is about to appear the second time. My friends are all against me. It has seemed sometimes that I must sink under the trials I have had to endure. But glory be to God, the door is opening for the truth to be preached here in L. The Methodist minister, Bro. Johnson, is one of God's honest, christian men. He is from Nova Scotia. He called on me last summer. He said he thought the coming of Christ was very near. He said he had never heard a sermon on the subject. I told him I had got a sermon in the 'World's Crisis' that I would like to have him read; and the text was, 'Search the Scriptures.' He read it, and, to my surprise, said, 'Sister Carlee, will you lend me those papers?' With all my heart, Bro. Johnson, I replied. In two weeks from that time he called again. Said he, 'I want to get more of your papers. They are the best papers I ever read.' Of course I gave him all he could carry home.

Bro. Johnson has been holding meetings here in L. for three weeks. I must tell you the good Lord sent Bro. Albert Jordan, from Cannan, Vt., to this place. As soon as Bro. Johnson heard he was here, he invited him to come in and help him. He said if Bro. Jordan could not have a seat in his pulpit, he could not. Bro. Jordan came full of the Holy Ghost, and it came down upon us in great power. The church went to work, backsliders were reclaimed, and sinners converted. The work is still going on."

BRO. D. D. REED writes from Santa Clara, Cal., March 7th, 1870:—"The battle goes well here. Truth is taking effect; churches are stirred, and the devil is mad. My health is greatly improved, and by the help of God, I mean to press this battle to the gates through this State. Then my eyes turn to Oregon, and the Sandwich Islands, if time lasts. But I believe we are drawing very near the end, and my whole soul cries out, Come, Lord Jesus. But while time lingers, I mean, by the grace of God, to blow the trump, and give it a certain sound too, that will startle the ears of somebody. There is too much holding back, speaking soft words, and fearing the people. My whole soul is sick of it, and I feel like pressing the truth and thundering it in their faces. God help me to make full proof of my ministry."

BRO. C. S. EMERSON writes from Pittsfield, N. H.:—"We have had some encouragement from the Lord of late, to make a rally, and do more in this place to stir up the people to make preparation for the coming kingdom. We want help, and would say to any of our preaching Brn., who have the cause at heart, and would like to come to Pittsfield, please write me."

BRO. J. W. BURROUGHS writes from Ancona, Ill., March 12th, 1870:—"I have been laboring here in this place for the past three weeks with good success. A church of over fifty members has been formed. I baptized thirty-two, and have organized a Sunday school and Bible class. I have engaged to preach to them every first Lord's day of each month."

ARE YOU ON THE RIGHT ROAD?

Whither are you going? are you prepared for your journey? are you on the right road? Three travelers from Frankfort to Bale fell asleep. They had entered a wrong carriage, and were taken away toward Strasburg. They never discovered their error until they reached the bank of the great river where their tickets were asked for. Their vexation on discovering what their sleep had cost them, suggested a solemn lesson. I thought of another journey of thousands who are passing on toward eternity fast asleep; of the speed with which they are hurrying along; of another river; of other sleepers awakening to find that they have been on the wrong way, and that they must face an eternity undone. "Awake thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall give thee light."

I have read a story of a professional fool, one of those men who once formed an appendage to every great house. The king, his master, on investing him with the badges of his office—the staff, and cap, and bell—told him to wear them till he found a greater fool than himself. The king was dying. He sent for the fool, and told him that he was going on a journey—a very long journey—and that he would never return. "What provision have you made for your journey?" said the fool. "None," said the dying man. "What!" said the other, "are you going into eternity without making any provision for it?" "Yes," said the king, with a heavy sigh. The fool dropped his staff, cap and bell, and laid them before the king, saying, "I was only to keep them till I had found a greater fool than myself, and I have found him.—Ex.

HOLT. Died, at Manchester, N. H., March 25th, Sr. Hannah E. Holt, aged seventy-seven years and five months.

Sr. Holt was converted some thirty-nine years since, and united with the Baptist church; but in the year 1853 became interested in the doctrine of the soon coming of Christ, and from that time the Adventists were her people. She lived and died a Christian. The funeral services were conducted by the writer. Sermon from Ps. 17: 5.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, April 11. The Memorial Diplomatique of Paris is assured that it is the intention of the Ecumenical Council to adopt the dogma of Papal infallibility by acclamation on Easter Monday, and that the representatives of the foreign Powers in Rome have resolved not to be present at the public session of that day.

ROME, April 13. The Ecumenical Council has voted almost unanimously in favor of the entire text of the dogma of Papal infallibility.

LONDON, April 13. The Hungarian prelates of the Ecumenical Council who vote for the dogma of Papal infallibility will be excluded from the Upper Chamber of the Diet.

MADRID, April 14. The Spanish priests acting under orders from the Vatican, refuse to take the oath prescribed by the new Constitution.

DUBLIN, April 14. The magistrates of Waterford have asked the Government for additional troops for the protection of life and property during the hearing of the election petition.

PARIS, April 16. It is now tolerably certain that the formula of the plebiscite will be: "Do the people desire constitutional reforms in 1870, which assure liberty, placing it under the guarantee of the empire and the dynasty?"

The Figaro (independent organ) announces today that the Emperor Napoleon has written a letter on the signification of the plebiscite for the instruction of the people. Eight millions of copies of this document will be printed forthwith, in order that it may be placed in the hands of every voter of France.

It is understood that at the termination of the plebiscite the Duke de Persigny will proceed to Berlin to propose a general European Congress.

MADRID, April 16. The republican journals of Spain demand a separation of Church and State, and that all priests or bishops refusing to take the oath to the constitution be sent to Rome.

ROME, April 15. The authorities keep themselves well informed of the projects of Mazzini and his partisans for another attempt on Rome, and are obliged to increase their vigilance and severity. Within a few days a party of suspected persons have been arrested in Rome and in the neighboring Pontifical towns, and the avowals elicited at their examination leave no doubt of the existence of a conspiracy within the Papal territory, the leaders of which are acting in concert with the revolutionary party outside.

RELIGIOUS REFORM IN SPAIN.—The Spanish government has submitted a measure to the Cortes, which, if adopted, will leave the union between Church and State in that country but little more than nominal. The bill proposes to give to the clergy the same civil rights as are enjoyed by other citizens of Spain, and to grant them freedom of action in all religious matters, but takes from the bishops all the temporal jurisdiction to punish, banish, and remove curates, etc. At the same time, great reductions are made in the number of bishops, canons and other dignitaries, as well as in the salaries of those who will remain. The sums assigned for expenses of worship, which in many cases were most exorbitant, have likewise been curtailed or taken away. In short, a reduction of £311,680 will be made in the amount already voted for ecclesiastical purposes for the current year. Notwithstanding this diminution, it is said the revenues that will remain will make the Spanish clergy better paid than their brethren in France and other Catholic countries.

DOMESTIC.

Havana, April 12. The Spanish bank has loaned the Government $5,000,000 with which to finish the war.

HIDEOUS FACTS IN MORMONDOM.—A Salt Lake correspondent of a San Francisco paper ventilates one of the hideous features of Mormonism as follows:

"George D. Watt, church reporter, and, who had attracted some attention by his articles in the Alta California on the subject of silk culture in Utah, married his half sister. Johnson, the Mormon Bishop at Springville, has four nieces among his dozen wives. Bolton, some years ago clerk to Forney, and respectably connected in the city of New York, being the son of one of its well known old merchants, married two women, who were mother and daughter; and there is a Mormon who has three wives who are said to bear to each other the relation of grandmother, mother and daughter. Of course this strange intermingling makes anything but a happy home for the parties thus united. That such a state of affairs should exist in an organized Territory of the United States is a disgrace to a boasted civilization and christianity."

Passing Events.

☞ The Russian Government has decided to admit women to the lectures in the medical department of the University of St. Petersburg. They are also to be allowed to practice as physicians, but not to be admitted to degrees.

☞ The traffic through the Suez canal is reported to be increasing steadily.

☞ The leading London editor says: "An editor is generally right when he rejects an article, but almost always wrong when he begins to give his reason for so doing."

☞ It has been ascertained that one square mile in the east end of London contains twenty thousand children, the most uncared for in the community, "receiving no regular instruction"—in fact, gutter-children.

☞ Efforts are being made in India to put a stop to the ancient custom of destroying female infants, and a bill for this purpose is now before the Council in Calcutta. So general had the practice become that in one native community of 10,000 not one girl was to be found.

☞ It is now believed that the Fenians are concentrating largely on the Canada border, although quietly. The depots of arms in New York are said to be emptied.

☞ A negro in Kentucky has invented a machine for breaking hemp, which is likely to produce for him a large fortune.

☞ Business men will be glad to learn that it is in contemplation to put on a train to run between Boston and New York in six or seven hours. There will be only five stops on the route.

☞ The Treasury Department last week destroyed more than half a million dollars' worth of mutilated currency.

☞ The Ku-Klux-Klan of Tennessee have changed the name of their nefarious order to that of "Pale Faces."

☞ They say in Rome that Queen Victoria is strongly leaning toward Catholicism, and Archbishop Manning is reported to have asserted that in case her Britannic Majesty should abdicate her crown she would at once embrace the Catholic faith.

☞ The Pope, giving a practical instance of his infallibility, has just decreed that horse racing, which hitherto was heretical in Rome, shall now be an orthodox pastime.

☞ The Russian Czar has fifty-two titles.

☞ There is a famine in Jerusalem.

☞ It is said that Mrs. Stowe lost over $16,000 by her Byron book.

☞ Through tickets are now sold from Chicago to China and Japan.

☞ At Yeddo, China, five thousand houses were destroyed by fire, February 5th.

☞ There are 8,000,000 of horses owned in the United States.

☞ An article in Appleton's Journal states that "Spiritualism has long existed among heathen nations and savage tribes. One of the old Moravian missionaries, a century ago, gives an account of Sorcery, as he found it in Greenland, corresponding precisely with the manifestations of modern mediums."

☞ There are over two hundred Jewish congregations in the United States, who are the most enlightened, and taken on the whole, the most wealthy and enterprising of their race. The American Jews exceed in number all those of Palestine.

Notice.

The Alton Bay campmeeting committee are requested to meet on the camp-ground, Friday, May 13th. For the committee, J. G. SMITH.

To whom it may Concern.

At the solicitation of friends west, in Illinois, Iowa, and Minnesota, and to "preach the word," and so do good, if it be possible, to "the household of faith," and others, I now purpose, if circumstances should seem to favor, to leave home for that distant field of labor, about the middle of May next, and go by rail from Swanton, Vt., to Chicago, and so to the points where it may seem best, the exact route to depend upon invitations that may come by letter. Let those who may desire a visit from me, as above suggested, write immediately, stating particulars of location, condition, etc., that I may determine my route, and appoint accordingly. Address me at Stanbridge, P. Q.

My visit of 1864 was pleasant, and I trust a means of good to some, by God's blessing upon imperfect labor by a feeble instrument. May my intended visit be more useful to the cause of Bible truth, in answer to fervent prayer.

Yours in the faith, CHAS. P. DOW.

Evening Hours.

BY

E. P. WOODWARD.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11:6.

"THE LOVE OF CHRIST."

Much has been said and written of the power of love. Men of all races and ages have not been slow to perceive that gentle words and loving deeds could tame the savage heart, and still the raging tumult of passion, when all other means were unavailing. And he who has laid aside the thought of redress for his wrongs, and has given kindness for injury, love for hate, has ever been considered as walking in another sphere. And of all earthly love, the love of the mother for her child has been deemed the most unselfish and enduring. Owing his existence to her; in a thousand cases protected and rescued from impending danger by her watchful eye and loving hand; accepting her proffered bounty with no words of gratitude, no thoughts of recompense; selfish, unfeeling and unsympathizing; growing up with hopes and plans in which she can have no part; spurning her counsel, and scorning her words of admonition; leaving her to pass down the dark decline of years in sadness and alone, heart-broken and comfortless at the thought of her darling's wayward steps and bitter words;—in all this the untold yearnings of that mother's love, the self-devotion of that mother's heart, are all the same. Cruel words may break her heart, and lay her in the grave, but her last look is one of pitying love. The highway of crime may be the chosen resort of him who should have been her glory and her pride; but through it all, when every other earthly friend has forsaken him, when the laws of God and man hang o'er his head, and he is hunted through the earth by the ministers of justice, the mother of his early days overlooks it all, and sees in him only the prattling babe, the first dawnings of whose young life filled her with such a new and holy joy.

But the loves and friendships of earth are changeful and uncertain. He who to-day holds the warmest place in our heart, to-morrow looks on us with coldness and hate. The busy tongue of slander, the blasting breath of jealousy, the chilling influence of selfish purposes and plans, the blinding mists and darkness of misunderstanding and human short-sightedness, make ofttimes fearful work; and no one, whose friendship rests on man alone, can rise in the morning and know that his friends will not pass by him on that day in silence and contempt. And he whose hopes are built alone on the assumed stability of earthly love and esteem, stands above a slumbering volcano, whose genial, inviting warmth is only a snare which shall engulf him in irremediable ruin.

But while all this is true, there is one place where we may be sure of unchanging and abiding love. Far back in the days that are past, when the stern rule of law and justice was required to hold back the world from the pit of utter corruption, and to vindicate the honor of the Holy One, we hear the words of Him who is love pleading with the people he had chosen, to trust in his abiding love: "Can a woman forget her sucking child? . . . Yea, they may forget, YET WILL I NOT FORGET THEE. . . . And all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy SAVIOR and thy REDEEMER."

But in Jesus Christ alone is seen the fulness of the Father's love. The love of God in Christ,—"THE LOVE OF CHRIST"—here we find no dark spot to mar the living beauty, no dark chasm impassible to mortal feet. Here we may rest, and rest forever. Friends may forsake and foes destroy, but Christ is still our Friend. Adversity may be our lot, death may be our portion, but no man can rob us of "the love of Christ." The Great Adversary of souls may shower upon us the pitiless hail of doubts and fears as we enter the dark "valley of the shadow of death"; but

"If Jesus himself will be our guide,
We shall walk through the valley in peace."

And though the King of terrors may mockingly pile above us the clods of the valley, our loving Friend can never forget us, but will surely bring us again from the land of the enemy. And whatever may be our lot in life, to all the assaults of Satan we may give back the answering cry, "For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, NOR ANY OTHER CREATURE, shall be able to separate us from the love of God, which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."

With such a deathless love flowing down to us from the great Fountain of love, there can be but one result to him who feels its power. There is born in him a love beside which the mother's love is an empty thing. And many a one who could look with joy and pride on the friends he cherished, and who thought he knew the utmost limit of earthly love, has found the friendships of earth vanishing or changing to bitterest hate, while the love inspired within him by his new-found Friend, hides the memory of his former loves in its enduring brightness. And when the choice comes before him, either to give up Christ, or those he once loved so well, there is no chance, no time, for doubt or hesitation. Everything of earth, even life itself, is a willing gift on the altar of this love. The mighty fact which lies beneath his hopes, and stands as an eternal bulwark between him and the flood of evil, is "the love of Christ"; and the grand inspiration of his daily life, which no created power can ever quench, is his love to Christ as his Redeemer and his Friend.

Men may "separate him from their company," and look upon him in his separation as a man of loneliness and solitude, but they little dream that his pulse is quickened by the pressure of a loving hand, and his life guarded by the protecting power of an unseen arm. And while men tremble amid the swaying of earthly passions, and the ruin of worldly friendships, his eye betokens no alarm, for the love on which he leans,—which is his life,—is ETERNAL.

"He that loveth father or mother more than me, is not worthy of me." So says our Friend, and the world calls it folly, says it is impossible. But to him who has known the bitter anguish of sorrow for sin, and the untold joys which follow repentance and forgiveness, they are not idle words. He knows what it is to love his Redeemer more than all the world besides. And while men make this command a ground of cavil and doubt, it is to him a confirmation of his faith.

Man of God, fail not to preach "THE LOVE OF CHRIST." Men may be reformed somewhat by other motives, but that transformation which makes of fallen, lost, ruined man, "a new creature," can only be effected by love,—"the love of Christ." That motive can never lose its power. And he who has lost his love for earthly friends, his love of duty and right, his love of self, if once awakened by the love of the Lamb of God, may yet stand forth as a free man in Christ Jesus. Preach the whole word, but as the source, and life, and beauty of that word, let nothing hide "THE LOVE OF CHRIST."

And when the scenes of earth are over, then we may know more fully than ever, "the love of Christ, which passeth knowledge."

For the World's Crisis.

THE THREE UNCLEAN SPIRITS.

"And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared. And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are the spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."—REV. 16: 12-14.

It will be noticed that one of the prominent transactions under the sixth vial is the coming of the three unclean spirits from the mouth of the dragon, the mouth of the beast, and the mouth of the false prophets, and their going forth to the kings of the earth to gather them to the battle of the great day of God Almighty—to Armageddon.

It is advocated by some expounders of the prophecies that these three spirits represent the spiritual teachings of the present day, or that they symbolyie Spiritualism; but to our mind there are some inconsistencies, even impossibilities in the idea. Without pretending to be wise above what is written, or to have any extensive or superior knowledge of the prophetic portion of the Bible, and with due respect for the opinions of other people, we would like to give expression to some ideas on this subject through the "Crisis."

In the first place it will be noticed that the three spirits had each of them a separate origin, that they proceeded from three different, three distinct sources, so that, if the idea just referred to is correct, Spiritualism must have sprung from three different sources, must have had three distinct origins, and must, therefore, be possessed of three phases or natures, each distinct from the other two.

And again, if the idea is correct, each of these three spirits must symbolize one of these phases or natures of Spiritualism; the spirit from the dragon the phase or nature derived from the dragon; the spirit from the beast, the phase or nature derived from the beast; and the spirit from the false prophet, the phase or nature derived from the false prophet. Now will some advocate of the common theory please tell us which part of Spiritualism is symbolized by each of these spirits, or which part of the phenomenon of Spiritualism is produced by the action of each of these spirits, and throw some light on this subject, for the benefit of some persons who are very much interested in the same?

But again, it will be noticed that the three spirits not only had, each of them, a different and distinct origin, but that, without uniting or blending together, they each went about their work, went to the kings of the earth to gather them together. Now from these facts we can, we have a right to, infer and deduce that the three spirits, instead of symbolizing three phases or natures of the same thing, symbolize three radically different, three entirely distinct things, although the three are engaged in the same work, and have been sent on the same mission, namely, to gather the kings of earth together.

The spirit of a thing is not the thing itself, but something produced by, or emanating from, the thing itself; the something produced by or emanating from a certain thing always, of course, to a certain extent, partaking of the properties and principles of the thing by which it was produced, or from which it emanated. Thus, for instance, corn produces a spirit called whisky; whisky is not corn, but something produced by corn, and partaking of its properties.

Apples produce a spirit called cider; cider is not the apples, but something produced by apples, and partaking of their properties. God has emanating from himself a spirit called Holy Ghost; the Holy Ghost is not God, but something emanating from God, and partaking of his attributes. The three spirits coming from the mouth of these three beasts, are not the beasts, but something emanating from them, and partaking of their properties and principles.

Eminent Bible students will say that the dragon brought to view in the passage at the head of this article is Paganism; that the beast is Papacy, and that the false prophet is Mohammedanism. Now if these eminent Bible students are right in this exposition, of course the spirit coming from the mouth of the dragon must symbolize something emanating from Paganism; the spirit coming from the mouth of the beast, something emanating from Papacy; and the spirit coming from the mouth of the false prophet, something emanating from Mohammedanism.

We must in the first place find out what the properties and principles of each of these three things are, in order to find out what is symbolized by the spirit coming from the mouth of each of them—Paganism, Papacy, and Mohammedanism.

1. Paganism. Paganism is infidel and unbelieving in regard to God, and all things purporting to come from God, and, as a matter of necessity, that emanating from it must be infidel and unbelieving in regard to God and his word, and all things purporting to come from God.

2. Papacy. Papacy possesses a belief in natural immortality, and a character of corruption, and that emanating from it must possess a belief in natural immortality and a character of corruption.

3. Mohammedanism. Mohammedanism is immoral and licentious, believes in polygamy and other things of that nature, and that emanating from it must be immoral and licentious, and believe in polygamy and other things of that nature.

Here we have three pictures, and do we not see three things or classes of things exactly filling them? We will give our humble opinion in regard to the matter, in regard to the three things symbolized by the three spirits, and let some one else show us to be wrong if we are out of the path of truth.

I. The spirit from the mouth of the dragon symbolizes infidelity and infidel teachings. For the past thirty years this spirit has been on its mission, going north and south, east and west, to every land and clime; to kings and princes, to potentates, and rulers and peoples of all classes and positions. It has gone into the councils of kings and chambers of senates; it has gone into the home circle and the worshiping congregation, and swept up to the very altars of the sanctuary, and into the very pulpit itself.

Here is an item copied from the Portland Transcript of Jan. 8th, 1870, showing the boldness of this spirit:

"The lectures of Prof. Fiske, Prof. of Positive Philosophy in Harvard University, are attracting much attention because of the boldness of the antagonism to the religious faith accepted by all denominations. This philosophy rejects every thing that is not proved to be a fact, whether in science, philosophy, or theology. Its disciples take nothing for granted, not even the need of a designing mind in the construction of the universe. There is no room for faith in this system of philosophy."

Even in the churches of our day this spirit is doing its mighty work. The great mass of religionists possess only a nominal faith, and, if any thing out of the path of science takes place, they brand it with "fanaticism" and "delusion," and raise the cry "the day of miracles is past."

II. The spirit from the mouth of the beast symbolizes Spiritualism and its satellites, as are seen everywhere at the present time. This spirit has gathered to its fold twenty million souls. Spiritualism is sweeping through the world as no other imposition ever did. It is too well known to be further noticed here.

III. The spirit from the mouth of the false prophet symbolizes Mormonism, free-loveism, and the doctrine of spiritual affinity between husband and wife. This spirit, these doctrines, are more wide-spread than is generally expected. And they have done a mighty work; they have had a mighty effect. This country has one of their blighting plague-spots—Utah. There, in open daylight, polygamy is practised; and our Congress does not, and dares not, take steps to prevent it. Not only does this doctrine, this spirit, find a foothold in our country, but in other parts of the world it is on its mission, doing its work. And the ease with which a divorce is obtained, as taught in the Richardson—McFarland tragedy, and its attending incidents, and the increasingly great number of divorces, show that the marriage tie is exceedingly loose, and that this spirit is rapidly doing up its mighty work, fulfilling its mighty mission. We can see the outside, but who can tell the vast amount of corruption which is pent up within this moral volcano? Yes, who can tell?

Here we have three things possessed of the properties and principles of the three symbolizing spirits; and do not they fill the picture drawn by the inspired Revelator? Do they not fulfill the prediction of the Revelator? Are not these three spirits in the world? And do not they come from the mouths of the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, and manifest the two-faced natures of the frog? Do not they go to the kings of the earth to gather them together? Do not they set God and his word one side, and tell that God is soon to come forth and plead with all flesh?

These are our ideas in regard to these three spirits, and we are willing that they should stand the test of criticism. If they are wrong, let some one show it, so that we can have the truth. We want the truth; let us have it.

Whitefield, N. H. E. S. MOULTON.

UNQUENCHABLE FIRE.

Man, as a descendant of Adam, is uniformly spoken of in the Bible as a mortal being, and as a sinner doomed to perish, for "the wages of sin is death." Rom. 6: 23. On the other hand, immortality, or deathlessness, is always spoken of as belonging to God, or to such as, on certain specified conditions, he has declared his purpose to confer it. It is by overlooking this truth, and assuming that the Bible teaches that all men, converted or unconverted, are born into the world immortal beings, that such statements as the following are used to support the belief of the eternal existence of the wicked in misery: "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire" (Matt. 3: 12); "If thy hand offend thee, cut it off; it is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to go into Gehenna, into the fire that never shall be quenched." Mark 9: 43.

The words, "fire that never shall be quenched," in Mark 9: 43, are the same in the Greek as "the unquenchable fire" in Matt. 3: 12; and should have been similarly rendered. Probably, the reason for introducing the terms "never shall be quenched" in translating Mark's narrative, was to render them more expressive of the idea of eternal torment, which the translators believed to be the final doom of impenitent sinners. Suppose, however, that we use the rendering "unquenchable fire" instead of "the fire that never shall be quenched," it will still be thought by many expressive enough of the idea that the unsaved shall be doomed to endure the most excruciating agonies throughout unending duration. If it could be demonstrated, from the usage of the language, that the casting of a person into "unquenchable fire," necessarily implies the everlasting existence of that person; or that the words, "unquenchable fire," are in no other instance applied in Scripture to objects which we know do perish, then I confess we would be shut up to accept the doctrine of immortal misery, with all its weight of melancholy sadness, unless it were elsewhere positively denied. If, however, on the other hand, we find the same language applied to objects which we know have ceased to exist, then surely we are bound to maintain, in the absence of direct testimony to immortality of impenitent men, that such language by no means expresses, or implies, the idea of unending being.

The phraseology which our Lord here employs was familiar to his auditors. From their childhood, we may presume they had frequented the synagogue on the Sabbath, where the Scriptures of the prophets were read in their hearing; and they must often have listened to these words of the Lord by the prophet Ezekiel, "Son of man, set thy face towards the south, and prophesy against the forest of the south field; and say to the forest of the south, hear the words of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every green tree in thee, and every dry tree; the flaming flame shall not be quenched, and all faces from the south to the north shall be burned therein. And all flesh shall see that I have kindled it; it shall not be quenched." Ezek. 20: 46-48. These words contain a threatened desolation of the land of Judea, which lay towards the south of the river Chebar, where the prophet resided. The terrible and thorough character of the desolation, is represented as "unquenchable flames" in a forest; and we plainly perceive that the language simply denotes the complete scattering of the Jewish people.

In the prophecies of Jeremiah also similar language is used. "If ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the Sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the Sabbath day; then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched." Jer. 16: 17. No sane man will assert that these palaces and gates of Jerusalem are indestructible, because the fire that destroyed them is termed "unquenchable;" so far from that being the case, the figure is justly understood to represent their complete destruction. Jehovah kindled the flames, and none could extinguish them; they would continue to burn till their purpose was completely effected. Destruction, not preservation, is the idea meant to be conveyed; and why not also the same idea when the doom of the wicked is represented by the same language? Why affirm that they are indestructible because Jesus said, they shall be "burnt up like chaff in unquenchable fire"?

The meaning of the words "unquenchable fire" may be further illustrated by the use which Eusebius, the ecclesiastical historian, makes of them in recording the death of those who suffered at the stake for their adherence to the Christ. In his history, Book VI., chap. 41, he gives an account of those who suffered death at Alexandria. "The first of these was Julian, a man afflicted with the gout, and neither able to walk nor stand, who, with two others that came with him, were arraigned. Of these the one immediately denied, but the other, named Chronion, surnamed Eunus, and the aged Julian himself, having confessed the Lord, were carried on camels throughout the city,—a very large one as you know,—and in this elevation were scourged, and finally consumed in an immense fire" (puri asbesto, the same terms rendered unquenchable fire" in Matt. 3: 12.") After these, Epimuchins and Alexander, who continued for a long time in prison, from the scourges and scrapers, were also destroyed in an immense fire" (puri asbesto.) These faithful witnesses, by being cast into "unquenchable fire" were reduced to ashes, not tormented for ever and ever; and when Jesus uses the same terms to describe the fate of the incorrigible sinner, how can these terms be fairly understood to mean anything else? The language of Jesus no more expresses the indestructibility of sinners, than does that of Eusebius express the deathlessness of those who for the truth's sake were consumed at the stake. "Unquenchable fire," then, means fire that irresistibly destroys that which is committed to its action.

Had the Savior's words been properly attended to, they would never have been used as an argument for the doctrine we are combating. Would any one who had not previously believed such a doctrine, ever imagine that when Jesus, alluding to the end of the wicked said, "He will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire," he taught his hearers that the wicked were unconsumable? Certainly not. It is the wicked who are like the chaff; and though the fire might never be quenched, in the most absolutely literal sense, the chaff would be consumed. Jesus positively asserts that it shall—"The chaff he will burn up." What emblem more expressive of the complete destruction of the wicked? Dream not then, O impenitent sinner! that thou art an immortal; unless thou yield thee to the love of God, and heartily believe the gospel of his Son, the Messiah, who loved thee and gave himself for thee, perish thou must, like chaff before quenchless flame. Ponder, I beseech thee, the love warning of Jesus; "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him might not perish, but have everlasting life."

Not less expressive of entire destruction is the Savior's language recorded by Mark, which has been already quoted: "It is better for thee to enter into life maimed, than having two hands to be cast into hell, into the fire that never shall be quenched, where their worm dieth not and their fire is not quenched." The word here translated "hell" is in the Greek "Gehenna," or valley of Hinnom, a small valley at the south-east of Jerusalem. In this valley the idolatrous Israelites caused their children to pass through the fire to Moloch. After the captivity the place became an object of the greatest abhorence, on account of these abominations; and, following the example of Josiah (2 Kings 23: 10,) they made it a receptacle for the filth of the city, the carcasses of animals, and malefactors. To prevent the deleterious effects of the consequent putrefaction, great fires were constantly kept burning; hence the valley was called "Hinnom's valley of fire," or "Gehenna of fire." It was thus a noisome and hideous spot. Its lurid fires, constantly burning, and the loathsome worms feeding on the corpses, were indeed a fit and expressive picture of the most abhorrent and complete destruction.

This view of the subject is confirmed by the closing sentences of Isaiah's prophecy. Speaking of the future glory of the nation of Israel, and its capital, Jerusalem, and the terrible overthrow of the opposing Gentiles, the prophet says, "Behold the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire; for by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many." Chap. 66: 15, 16. "And it shall come to pass from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord. And they shall go forth and look on the carcasses of the men that have transgressed against me. For their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh." Verses 23, 24.

Doubtless the scene here depicted is one of real carnage; yet the language, "their worm shall not die, neither shall their fire be quenched," is applied to the carcasses of dead men. Here we have a key to the language in Mark; which, indeed, is but a quotation from Isaiah, that would be familiar to the disciples of Jesus. So thinks Albert Barnes, though a believer in the immortality of the wicked. In his notes on Mark 9: 44-46, he writes: "This figure is clearly taken from Isaiah lxvi. 24. In describing the great prosperity of the kingdom of the Messiah, Isaiah says, that the people of God shall go forth and look upon the carcasses of the men who have transgressed against God. Their enemies shall be overcome. They shall be slain. The people of God shall triumph. The figure is taken from the heaps of the dead slain in battle, and the prophet says that the number of them shall be so great that their worm—the worm feeding on the dead—shall not die, shall live as long as there are carcasses to be devoured; and that the fire which was used to burn the bodies of the dead shall continue long to burn, and shall not be extinguished till they are consumed." "The word 'their,' in the phrase 'their worm,' is used merely to keep up the image or figure. Dead bodies, putrefying in that valley, would be overrun with worms, while the fire would not be confined to them, but spread to other objects, kindled by combustibles through all the valley."

It is rather remarkable that this writer, after such a correct exposition of the language, should affirm that the picture represents "dreadful and eternal suffering." Putrid, decaying carcases, the image of dreadful and eternal suffering! The worm luxuriating on a painless corpse, an image of the most painful anguish! The consumption of dead bodies in the devouring flame, a symbol of deathless spirits, tormented by fire which pains but cannot kill them! Oh, the blinding effects of heathen philosophy on the minds of those who submit to its teaching! The words of God, in defiance of all the laws of rhetoric and common sense, must be made to sustain the baseless theories of human imagination; and thus poor mortals, condemned to everlasting destruction, inflate themselves with the vain conceit of their immortality, echoing with true filial earnestness and joy, the words of the old serpent, the devil—"Ye shall not surely die!"—Rainbow.

APRIL.—A FOREWARNING.

Delicious April comes at last; I feel the promise now
Of music in the humid air, and blossoms on the bough.
The crocus and the hyacinth above the mold appear,—
The first-come guests to celebrate the bridals of the year.
Yet not for me this balmy earth, these moist and weeping skies;
Upon my heart a weary weight of inmost sorrow lies,—
The weight of those who in the land of nether darkness dwell:
Ah! woe is me! it seems to make the very earth a hell.

Alas! alas! in vain the clouds are bright with sudden showers,
That swell the woodland's budding leaves and summon out the flowers;
For human hearts are winter-cold, and sit with clouded eyes,
Nor heed the love that fain would make this world a paradise
The south wind blows his elfin horn; the butterfly and bee
Wake from their winter sleep to find the daisies on the lea;
But, in the torpid human breast, a death-like silence reigns;
Nor will they hear though fall from heaven the blessed angel strains.

In pleasure's barge of painted sail the gay and careless glide,
Nor heed the distant hurricane that sweeps adown the tide;
With careless jest and easy sin the hours consume away,
While at the very portal stands the world's great judgment day.
How thrills the breast! how throbs the heart! that portents dark and drear
Within the spirit's midnight vault all terribly appear!
Yet still the worldling counts his gains, the minstrel tunes the lyre,
Blind to the dread Apocalypse of inward burning fire!

It comes! it comes! o'er land and sea! but still the human mind
Laughs down its fears, to every sign of change and judgment blind;
And, like a cruel beast, the earth for spoil and rapine roars,
While ONE with vestures dipped in blood is standing at the doors.
How will the nations reel before the fury of the blast,
Smit by consuming pains, that turn to blood and fire at last!
While loving hearts, though faint and few, who sadly, vainly yearn,
Behold the blissful Eden-years all deathlessly return.

Though few may heed the warning now, my spirit shall not pine;
Arouse, my languid heart! and lift thy prophecy divine;
'Tis thine to bear, 'tis thine to do, but 'tis not thine to plan,
The blast that sweeps the threshing-floor is moved not by the fan.
Lift up, lift up thy voice again, before thy work is done,
The clouds shall break that now obscure the great Millennial Sun,
And, through the deep heart of mankind, a burst of music roll
From Him whose judgment angel opes the gateways of the soul.

THANKFULNESS.—If one should give me a dish of sand and tell me there were particles of iron in it, I might look for them with my eyes, and search for them with my clumsy fingers, and be unable to detect them; but let me take a magnet and sweep through it, and it would draw to itself the most inevitable particles, by mere power of attraction. The unthankful heart, like my finger in the sand, discovers no mercies; but let the thankful heart sweep through the day, and, as the magnet finds the iron, so it will find, in every hour, some heavenly blessings; only the iron in God's sand is gold.

— It does n't follow that, because we have taken a perilous step, we ought to retrace it. She wasn't a wise old woman who crossed a bridge, and on being told that it was labelled "dangerous," turned and re-crossed it in all haste.

— Men's lives should be like the day, more beautiful in the evening; or, like the summer, aglow with promise; and like the autumn, rich with the golden sheaves, where good works and deeds have ripened on the field.

— The same spirit of faith which teaches a man to cry earnestly, teaches him to wait patiently; for as it assures him the mercy is in the Lord's hand, so it assures him it will be given forth in the Lord's time.

— Truly it is a glorious thing to follow the Lamb; it is the highway to glory; but when you see him in his own country at home, you will think you never saw him before.

— As Noah's dove could find no rest for the sole of her foot, so the Spirit of God can find no residence in that heart which is deluged in sin.

— The cross of Christ is the sweetest burden that I ever bore. It is such a burden as wings are to a ship, to carry it forward to a desired haven.

— Our conscience is as a fire within us, our sins as the fuel; therefore, instead of warning, it will scorch us; unless the fuel be removed, or the heat of it removed by penitential tears.

— Those who by faith see the invisible God and the fair city, make no account of present losses and crosses.

— That Christ and the sinner should be one, and should share heaven between them, is the wonder of salvation; what more could love do?

— The christian is called to be like Abraham in conduct, like Paul in labors, and like John in spirit.

— In doing good to others, there is an enjoyment of which the sordid, selfish man knows nothing.

NELLIE OF SOME USE.

One lovely afternoon, early in the month of June, a little girl, not more than eight years old, sat at a window overlooking a beautiful lawn and fish-pond. She had been reading; but the book had fallen from her hands. There was a sad expression on her countenance; for she was thinking how she used to love to run about in the green fields, and play with her hoop or her skipping-rope. But those she had to exchange for a crutch: she was a cripple.

Just then, some little sparrows came to pick up the crumbs which the child had thrown from the window. She watched them with the deepest interest as they hopped about in happy freedom; till at length, having satisfied their hunger, with a chirp they flew away to join their companions.

The little girl turned away sorrowfully from the window, and stopped to reach her crutch, which had fallen to the floor. In vain did she try to drive back her tears; they would come: and, covering her face with her hands, she wept bitterly. Whilst thus troubled, she felt a hand laid softly upon her head; and, looking up, she saw her mother bending over her with a mingled look of anxiety and love in her face.

"What is the matter with my Nellie?" she asked in a gentle voice.

"O mamma!" exclaimed the child, as she threw her arms around her mother's neck, "it is of no use for me to live now that I am lame. I can never be of any use."

The mother, breathing a silent prayer to God for a blessing on her instruction, seated herself on a low chair, and, drawing Nellie on her lap, whispered words of comfort to the troubled little one. She told her of the Redeemer's love to children; of his sufferings and death on the cross. She told her also of the lame and the blind, the deaf and the dumb, who were brought to the loving Savior, and were healed; and then with a mother's tenderness she pressed the child to her heart, and tried to show her in how many ways even a cripple might be useful. She told her of the glow-worm, whose tiny light cheers the traveler on his way in the dark night.

"But, mamma," said Nellie, "I am not a glow-worm."

"No, dear," said her mother; "but you may do what the glow-worm does,—you may 'let your light shine.' Have you forgotten those lines which your papa taught you not long ago?—

Do what you can, being what you are,
Shine like a glow-worm, if you can't be a star.

You cannot do much, I know, and yet, by your example, you may be made a blessing to others. You may sow the seeds of kindness and love, and mercy and truth, which by and by will, with the divine blessing, grow up bright and beautiful flowers, that shall bloom throughout eternity."

"But, mamma, how can I do this?"

"Well, my dear," replied her mother, "by giving up your own will for another's pleasure, you sow the seeds of love and kindness; by immediately confessing when you have done wrong, you sow the seeds of truth; and you were sowing the seeds of mercy when you gave your dime to the poor blind man at the door this morning."

With a bright smile of hope, the child looked up into her mother's face; and, pressing a warm kiss on her cheek, she said, "Thank you, dear mamma: I will try to be more happy and useful."—Children's Guest.

HELPING ONE ANOTHER.

Dumb animals sometimes set us good examples. I will tell you a true story of two horses.

In the town of Indianapolis there was a blind horse who, one day last summer, wandered into the river, and then did not know how to get back to dry land. Now, there was a good horse, whom the boys called Dick, and who was grazing near by, when he saw the blind horse swimming round in a circle in the river, and trying in vain to find the solid shore.

Dick must have thought to himself, "That poor horse can't see, or he would not act in that strange way. I will call to him; perhaps he will mind my voice."

So Dick began to neigh as loud as he could, but the blind horse was still at a loss to know which was to turn. Perhaps he was deaf as well as blind; for, though Dick would neigh quite loud, the poor blind horse still could not find his way out of the river.

Then Dick must have thought, "That poor horse will get tired by and by, and sink and drown if I do not help him."

Then Dick went down the river, and swam out to where the blind horse was, and touched noses, so much as to say, "Follow me," and then guided the blind horse safely to the shore.

This kind act was seen by a great many people on the shore; and they cheered loudly as Dick came back upon the bank with the blind horse behind him.

I hope you will be as ready to help a friend in need as poor Dick was. We must learn to be kind to one another, for kind acts and kind feelings will make us happy.—Nursery.

MANNERS.

Young folks should be mannerly. How to be so is the question. Many a good boy and girl feel that they cannot behave to suit themselves in the presence of company. They feel timid, bashful, and self-distrustful the moment they are addressed by a stranger, or appear in company. There is but one way to get over this feeling and acquire graceful and easy manners, that is to do the best they can all the time at home, as well as abroad. Good manners are not learned from arbitrary teaching so much as acquired from habit. They grow upon us by use. We must be courteous, agreeable, civil, kind, gentlemanly and womanly at home, and then it will soon become a kind of second nature to be so everywhere. A coarse, rough manner at home begets a habit of roughness, which we cannot lay off if we try, when we go among strangers. The most agreeable people we have ever known in company, are those that are perfectly agreeable at home. Home is the school for all the best things, especially for good manners.

HOME CHEERFULNESS.—Many a child goes astray, not because there is a want of prayer or virtue at home, but simply because home lacks sunshine. A child needs smiles as much as flowers need sunbeams. Children look little beyond the present moment. If a thing pleases they are apt to seek it; if it displeases they are prone to avoid it. If home is the place where faces are sour, and words harsh, and fault-finding is ever in the ascendant, they will spend as many hours as possible elsewhere. Let every father and mother, then, try to be happy. Let them talk to their children, especially the little ones, in such a way as to make them happy.

THREE LESSONS.—My children remember these three lessons:

1st. Learn to love: Jesus loved you.
2nd. Learn to give: Jesus gave himself for you.
3d. Learn to deny yourselves for others: Jesus denied himself for you.

LOVE every body, and every body will be likely to love you.

THE CROWN.

Seek not, my soul, to grasp the crown,
If Jesus' cross ye would lay down;
Who wins the crown must bear the cross,
And count all worldly honors dross.
Nor think, vain soul, thy hand to join
With this proud world, whose current coin
Is pride of equipage and dress,
To win a crown of righteousness.

To win for us the blood-bought crown,
Our Savior laid his dear life down;
And for his sake I'll suffer loss,
And glory in his shameful cross.
Forsaking all for his dear name,
Brave martyrs have endured the flame;
Their lives have joyfully laid down;—
They bear the cross to win the crown.

Come, fainting soul, and bravely bear
The cross, if you the crown would wear,
And lay it only with life down,—
Beyond the cross behold the crown.

HAVE THE 144,000 GONE TO HEAVEN?

When asked whether the one hundred and forty-four thousand, spoken of in Revelation, have gone to heaven, I give a negative answer, for several reasons:

1. Christ, our High Priest, was to enter "alone" into the "holy place," which is "heaven itself," instead of entering with one hundred and forty-four thousand. Heb. 9: 7, 24.

2. In the type "no man" could enter while the High Priest remained in the "holy place," and the same prohibition holds good in the antitype, which principle would not allow one hundred and forty-four thousand to enter. Lev. 16: 17.

3. We are expressly told that "no man hath ascended up to heaven, but he that came down from heaven, even the Son of man which is in heaven." John 3: 13. This statement cannot be reconciled with the claim that one hundred and forty-four thousand ascended with Christ to the Father's throne. Even Enoch and Elijah, though taken up into the atmospheric heaven, never went to the heaven of Christ's abode, but were taken to some other locality, for some unrevealed purpose.

4. Paul speaks of the Divine Potentate as "dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto."—1 Tim. 6: 16. This affirmation is not in harmony with the claim that one hundred and forty-four thousand are dwelling in that realm of light.

5. The one hundred and forty-four thousand are not "sealed" till "after" the sixth seal is opened, and the day of the Lord dawns; and not till then are they "redeemed from the earth" by a resurrection, or sealed with immortality. Rev. 7 and 14. For a special purpose they are spoken of in contradistinction to the "great multitude." As they are not sealed till this epoch, they could not have gone to heaven over eighteen hundred years ago.

6. Besides all this, it is nowhere stated that one hundred and forty-four thousand went to heaven with Christ; and it is not possible that such a mighty event as this would have been, could have escaped the pen of every inspired writer who officiated after the ascension. The inferences deduced in support of this theory are all illegitimate, as we shall soon discover.

7. No one ever saw one hundred and forty-four thousand resurrected saints ascend to heaven with Christ, for if they had witnessed such a sight they would have told of it, and not kept it a secret; and certainly the eyes that could behold Jesus rise, could as easily have seen this great multitude go up, as to have seen Jesus; and it is but folly to say that Jesus might have gone up to the Father with them on the very morning of his resurrection; for first, if they rose from the dead with him, there was not time for them to go into the holy city and appear unto many before his ascension, and then rise to heaven with him, unless he left the tomb before his "three days and nights" were out; and second, his friends were told by the angels at the sepulchre, while it was yet early, that he had gone to Galilee, instead of having gone to heaven; and they probably told the truth; and third, if Christ really went up to heaven with one hundred and forty-four thousand saints, on the morning of his resurrection, and got back again before daylight, it would not only be making good time, but would make his return a second coming, and thus overthrow the doctrine of Christ's second coming in the future; but long after Christ's ascension Paul affirmed, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time."—Heb. 9: 28. If the second coming of Christ was future when Paul wrote, Christ did not descend from heaven in person on the morning of his resurrection; and if not, he did not then take one hundred and forty-four thousand up to heaven.

The theory which we are opposing claims scriptural support, which we will now examine.

First text. "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of the graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many."—Matt. 27: 52, 53. Let it be observed (1) that not a word is here said about one hundred and forty-four thousand; that is all guess so; and (2) not a word is said about their going to heaven; that is taking for granted the very thing that needs proof; but they "went into the holy city," Jerusalem; and though some have said Jerusalem could not be called "holy," it is nevertheless true that Christ called it "the city of the great King." As to what became of these resurrected saints we are not told, any more than in the case of Lazarus and the widow's son. But we are nowhere informed that they went to heaven.

Second text. "Wherefore he saith, When he ascended on high, he led captivity captive," or, as the margin reads, "a multitude of captives." Eph. 4: 8. In his own person, one of death's captives ascended on high, as a sample, or representative of a multitude, bearing "the keys of death and hades," having really "abolished death" in his own person, and prospectively abolished it for all his saints. Christ has conquered the foe that holds the captives, and gone on high as conqueror, and will soon return and liberate the prisoners. There is no intimation here that "captivity" held only one hundred and forty-four thousand, or that the "multitude of captives" were only one hundred and forty-four thousand in number. As their leader, he went before, and they are hereafter to follow; his liberation came first, but "afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

Third text. "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son, that he might be the first-born among many brethren. Moreover, whom he did predestinate, them he also called; and whom he called, them he also justified; and whom he justified, them he also glorified." Rom. 8: 29, 30. Did God "foreknow" only one hundred and forty-four thousand? Are only one hundred and forty-four thousand to "be conformed to the image of his Son"? Are the one hundred and forty-four thousand the sum total of Christ's "many brethren"? God's foreknowledge is not restricted to one hundred and forty-four thousand, but includes all the saints; and the "many brethren" include the entire redeemed throng, and Christ is the "first born" among them all, or "the first born from the dead" to an immortal life; hence born before any of them, but not cotemporaneously with any of them. But it is said some are "glorified." How many? Not merely one hundred and forty-four thousand, but "whom he did foreknow," let that include as many as it will,—them he did "predestinate," "called," "justified," and "glorified" in the plan of salvation; but that plan existed before any of it was executed, and many still are unjustified in reality who will hereafter be saved, and none are yet glorified in reality. If one hundred and forty-four thousand were glorified eighteen hundred years ago, why could not all be glorified without a judgment just as well? Prospectively God has called, justified and glorified every saint, but part of this work is yet to be executed.

THE ALARM BELL.

THE BRAND-MARK OF ANTICHRIST.

"It is pleasing to know that both the French emperor and his son are now inclined to pay particular regard to the interests of religion. His majesty recently took occasion to assure a French archbishop that such doctrines as undermined the immortality of the soul should receive no favor whatever at his hands. Shortly after Napoleon the Third had taken this ground, his son, the prince imperial, went a step further, by saying, 'When I become emperor, I shall not permit any one to be without religion.' What Frenchman now will refuse to support 'my dynasty?'"—Buffalo Courier.

Amid agitations and discussions upon a dogma of "infallibility," we may be sure of the absolute infallibility of God and his word. We have taken occasion to point out from time to time, according to the pre-portraiture of antichrist, both the character and identity of that last remarkable representative of Satan. And in the paragraph prefixed to this article, there is furnished another infallible signal of the policy and personality of the imperial figure, destined for a brief but terrible moment, under demon inspiration, to dominate the world. How shall we describe the emotions which a profound conviction of the near and fearful reality is adapted to beget?

We honor and love our English brethren* who have borne faithful testimony to the character of coming events. We mean no disparagement to the zeal and devotion of American Adventists, who have united in the emphatic protest of swiftly coming judgment on the nations of the earth; but we are compelled to think that some of our transatlantic friends have shown greater accuracy in a fore-delineation of developments signified by the apocalyptic scripture. (Of course we except individual instances of uniting with the symbolic a literal understanding of the book, which we are constrained to conceive, to a large extent, the true principle of interpretation. Some in America have done this.) While thus cheerfully conceding to the correctness of prophetic rendering in other countries, and in our own dear ancestral England, we have to raise a cry of loud and affectionate entreaty to all people who love Jesus, in all the world: be, to the utmost, we beseech you, admonished to recognize what is infallibly certain to become a reality of portentous purport. We can modestly say, we think, that we have searched this matter thoroughly, and we lift up our call of alarm to all men, to beware of the craft and snare of the enemy. We can not shrink at wounding sensibilities, or crossing traditions,—there is no alternative but plainness and faithfulness and earnestness.

We humbly certify to those who love the kingdom and appearing of Jesus, be assured of a truth indubitable and indisputable as the sun in heaven. We call to you in no doubtful tones or terms of entreaty; we beseech you by all that is eternal in truth, and precious in the gospel, behold, observe and consider, in this moment of intense expectation and vast transition, the positive and diagnostic brand-mark of antichrist. It is the championed but baseless tenet of the IMMORTALITY OF THE SOUL.

The intimation contained in the quoted paragraph is but the fulfillment of an expectation awakened by a series of circumstances, especially the assurance beyond question that the last elect of Satan, the imperial idol of the demonized multitudes, would build up his system of religious blasphemy upon the dogma of the consciousness of the dead. For it would not answer to admit the fact of intercourse with demons and the prince of demons, whose baneful operations have cursed the earth and race since the fall. It would be the expedient of a study, intent to allay misgivings of something darkly sinister in the copious and startling supernaturalisms of the career of antichrist, to refer these marvelous prodigies to some source quite other than the foul and powerful arch-rebel against heaven. In fact, the entire universe of the dead will be held to be in sympathy with the ministers and doctrines of the new religion, and the whole invisible world of air will be held to be populous with intelligent spirits of the former inhabitants of earth, bringing in their vehement testimony to the lawful warrant of antichrist to lord it over men. Voices countless and incessant will confirm the prerogative of the new imperial Apollyon, and clamor to extend the sphere of his dominion, and emphasize with impressive prodigies the rectitude of his supremacy.

But, O miserable device of demons and Beelzebub the prince of the demons! For we know and understand, and insist in no mincing or mistakable terms, that the whole series of antichrist's operations is demoniac and infernal, and that the basis on which the new religion of blasphemy is built, is a foul deception. We see already what is to be the ruling dogma of the dynasty of desolation—the very marrow of the false gospel of the apostasy; mark it well! read, recognize and remember it. It is (again we say) the Immortality of the Soul. But this is false. There is no foundation for it in the word of God. A revolution of faith or opinion is instantly and imperatively demanded among christians, in the whole habitable earth. For there is no net,—be assured, there is no trap, no device, so keen, so subtle, so cunning, so powerful, so dangerous, whereby thousands and millions are in imminent hazard of being captivated and subjected to homage of the great dagon of infidel democracy—as this very commonly accepted article in the faith of christendom. But as it was the great first lie of the enemy, so it is also the last, and will be held either as a bait to catch the uninstructed, or hung and swung in terrorem over the weak and vacillating votary of christianity, to coerce his allegiance to a system which, because it is built definitely on a belief and teaching popular among almost all denominations of christians, will therefore be all the more seductive and deadly.

It is perfectly plain to see that in the present exceedingly critical exigency of the Roman priesthood and papacy, the French emperor, in aiding and fostering a diversion of European homage toward himself, as a solace for perplexed ecclesiastics and a repairer of threatened desolations, would most naturally magnify a doctrine dear to the alarmed dignitaries whom he would succor and console. Who does not know that the immortality of the soul has been the very life of Romanism? and who can not see that in championing this vital tenet of the Catholic church, the "man of destiny" does exactly that which will commend him to the confidence of the Catholic people and powers? Who can not see that it is precisely this declaration of intention, contained in the language he has uttered, which will qualify him to become the trusted receptacle of a mighty interest, the guardian, the protector, and the official head, both secular and religious, of immense communities and masses of people, that in the fulness of nefarious times rise up to salute their chief?

Yes, brethren, be perfectly settled in your profession, which is but the voice of your established conviction; there is no alternative. You know there is no truth in the allegation of immortality in man. Be therefore firmly established in the present truth, and gird your loins about with the immutable word of God. You may depend upon it you may expect the hostility of Satan, and you may well believe that "such doctrines as undermine" the dogma of the chief of the fallen host, the ruler of spiritual wickedness in high places, "will receive no favor whatever at the hands" of the subtle vicegerent of the demon powers, the emperor of the French, who, we are persuaded, is on the verge of his rapid development into antichrist. It is a solemn and tremendous period. Be ready for any event whatever, of prosperous or adverse fortune. We should expect no favor from a power pledged and devoted with the utmost energy to the maintenance of the great fable. Look for the speedy appearing and kingdom of Jesus; but let not one such heir apparent of the future glory of Christ, in one imagination of the thoughts of the heart, feel otherwise than ready, by divine grace, to render up instantly this present earthly, mortal life a sacrifice, if required, in testimony of the word of God. Let there be among you all, at least, the true spirit of martyrdom; and, perchance, if you are thus surrendered in heart to the perfect will of God, his powerful hand will bear you away untouched into safety, while the host under antichrist are ready to perpetrate their deeds of vindictive frenzy upon the unwatchful left behind. Let no one lay to his soul the flattering unction of temporal security, who does not love the kingdom and appearing of Jesus. An hour of temptation is coming on the whole world.

It will be noticed the prince imperial is quoted as saying, "When I become emperor, I shall not permit any one to be without religion"; which, when interpreted, signifies the enforced acceptance, by all classes and languages of people embraced in the sphere of the imperial rule, of the religion of blasphemy on pain of death. But will the prince imperial live to be emperor? Will he succeed to the position held by his father? Can the restrictive necessities of prophetic periods, seemingly at the point of exhaustion, allow such a delay as the advance of the young French prince into manhood with imperial prerogatives? We think certainly not. It is true, that if he lives, he may with the empress Eugenie his mother bear a part, and even a conspicuous part, in the pending developments; but still subordinate, since the period yet remaining for the complete consummation of all prophecies antecedent to the destruction of antichrist (personal), can apparently not reach beyond six or eight years at the utmost, and the prince is yet a boy.

In conclusion, we can and do diligently insist on the importance of detecting and appreciating what we have pointed out as an incipient token of the coming mark, which we have designated the brandmark of antichrist. And this false doctrine may be reasonably anticipated, we presume, to take expression in some manner in the engraved charagma, or character, which will be imprinted on the votaries or worshipers of the beast. Such is the vaunted virtue and worth of the satanic dixit—"Thou shalt not surely die," amplified or refined to the popular phraseology and illusive notion of the "immortality of the soul."

CLINTON COLEGROVE.

* We wish to call attention again to the great value of the English monthlies published by Purdon and Baxter. They are intensely interesting as aids to a right understanding of coming developments. We can not refrain from expressing our appreciation of the arduous and useful labors of Mr. Baxter in disseminating information relative to the identity and operations of antichrist. We do not abate our confidence in the correctness of that identity, notwithstanding the development has been delayed several years beyond the time first designated by Mr. Baxter as the probable date of the commencement of the manifestation. So much the greater will be the astonishment of those who, on account of the imputed decrepitude and advancing years of Napoleon, have assumed the utter improbability of his accession to power as the head and expression of the demon-energy and false philosophy of spiritualism and its congeners. These things will doubtless come suddenly. The world will wonder. Alas! how many will wonder and perish, who have not the armor of Christ!

BE KIND TO ONE ANOTHER.

Be kind to one another:
This is a world of care;
And there's enough of needful woe
For every one to bear:
But if you ease the burden
That weighs another down,
That work of christian charity
Will lighten half your own.

Be kind to one another:
Scatter the seeds of love
Wide o'er the field of hearts, and rich
The harvest wealth will prove:
A wealth more truly precious
Than aught beneath the sun,
Which India's diamonds could not buy,
And yet—how lightly won.

Be kind to one another:
Not to the good alone,
E'en to the cold and selfish heart
Let deeds of love be shown.
So shall ye be his children
Who rains his gifts on all,
And even upon the thankless ones
Bids his bright sunbeams fall.

—American Messenger.

SIGNS OF THE TIMES.

"Can ye not discern the signs of the times?"—MATT 16: 3.

In the first verse, we learn that the Pharisees and Sadducees came to Jesus, and desired him to give them a sign from heaven. What kind of a sign they wanted, does not appear, nor for what purpose,—anything, probably, which would settle the question of his Messiahship. The Savior, knowing that they were not actuated by a sincere desire to know the truth, did not comply with their request, but rather upbraided them for their want of spiritual discernment. From their knowledge of natural signs, they could tell whether it would be fair, or foul weather on the morrow, but they could not discern the spiritual meaning of those important events which were passing before them. It was their duty to do so. Hence we infer, that it is still a christian duty, carefully to observe the signs of the times. It is not every future event that is foreshadowed by signs—only those of the most vital importance to men. The first and second advents of our Savior are events of this kind. The latter, no less than the former, is clearly pointed out by unmistakable signs.

1. The era of the second advent will be immediately preceded by a great running to and fro, and by a great increase of knowledge. See Dan. 12: 4. The prophet connects these things with the time of the end, and the full unfolding of his prophetic visions; see the same verse. But the end here spoken of, agrees in point of time with the coming of Christ, for in the foregoing context it is connected with the standing up of Christ, the great prince, for the deliverance of all who have their names written in the book of life. It is also connected with that fearful time of trouble, which will be visited upon an ungodly world, at the coming of Christ, with the resurrection and the rewarding of the righteous with unfading glory. But we are now living in the time indicated by these signs. Within the past forty years the world has undergone an entire revolution in these respects. There is now a constant running to and fro, a ceaseless mixing and mingling of the nations. Aided by the application of steam to the propulsion of the railway carriage and the ocean steamer, and stimulated by an insatiable thirst for pleasure, for fame, for gain, and for knowledge, the present age stands out boldly marked, and clearly defined, above and beyond all that have gone before it, as the age of travel. But the present is no less clearly marked as an age of knowledge. Not that we understand better than our fathers the doctrines of christianity; but in many, if not all the departments of human knowledge, we have far outstripped all the generations of the past. There is not only great advance, but wide diffusion. The printing press, the telegraph, the railway and the steamer, are rapidly developing new thoughts, new habits and aspirations, in all places of the earth. It is doubtless, then, the age indicated by the prophet,—an age of running to and fro, and of the increase of knowledge.

2. The coming of Christ will be immediately preceded by the world-wide preaching of the gospel. See Matt. 24: 14: "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come." The end here spoken of, is the end of the world, that with which the coming of Christ is associated. Before this end comes, the gospel is to be preached in all parts of the world, not for the salvation of all the world, but for a witness unto all nations. For the past forty years this work has been in a special manner accomplishing. During this period have come into effective operation, all our missionary, Bible and tract societies. These, aided by great improvements in the art of printing, and still greater facilities in travel, and stimulated by the Macedonian cry, from large portions of our world hitherto effectually barred against the gospel, have even now, for aught any one can decide positively to the contrary, fulfilled to the letter, this witness-preaching of the gospel to all nations.

But we have additional testimony on this point in Rev. 16: 6, 7: "And I saw another angel fly in the midst of heaven, having the everlasting gospel to preach—to every nation, and kindred, and tongue, and people." The substance of this preaching is, Fear God, and give to him glory, and worship; and the reason assigned is, "For the hour of his judgment is come." Hence we are told in the next verse, "And there followed another angel saying, Babylon is fallen, is fallen." The flying of this angel preacher marks the rapidity with which the gospel is to be spread, and identifies it, beyond dispute, with our own day; while the immediate subsequent fall of Babylon proves that it immediately precedes the coming of Christ, for the Roman anti-christ is to be "consumed by the Spirit of Christ's mouth, and destroyed by the brightness of his coming." 2 Thess. 2: 8.

3. The age immediately preceding the coming of Christ, will be an age of great pleasure-seeking, and of business enterprise. See Luke 17: 26–27: "As it was in the days of Noe, so shall it be also in the days of the Son of man." They ate, they drank, they married wives and were given in marriage. Likewise also as it was in the days of Lot, they did eat, they drank, they bought, they sold, they planted, they builded; even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed." Men have eat and drunk, have planted and builded in every age. The Savior knew this perfectly well. But he also knew that the times of Noah and Lot were distinguished for these things, that then men and women had become so engrossed in worldly things, in the pleasures and business of life, as that they had in a great measure, lost all regard for the authority of God. These were almost, or altogether, the only things for which they lived; even so shall it be, in the age immediately preceding the advent. But here the question arises, Are not these the characteristics of our own day? Is not this a pleasure and a gain-seeking age? Was there ever an age like it in the history of our race, unless we except those marked as it parallel, by the Savior? And they were only like in kind, not its equals in degree. Their facilities for acquiring gain, and gratifying pleasure, were comparatively limited. The wonderful inventions of modern times have aroused and stimulated, to a degree hitherto unknown, both the power to acquire wealth, and the dispotion to spend it in all the ways which a voluptuous age can invent. Nor are these alone the characteristics of the world. The church, too, notwithstanding all her activity in the great and good work of spreading the gospel, is largely under the influence of this worldly spirit. The Savior, foreseeing that his church would be in danger, from this source, issues a timely warning. See Luke 21: 34: "Take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting, and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares." This warning has almost the force of prediction. Is it not true that the church is largely engrossed with the cares of this life? so living, as that should the day of the Lord now come, it would come upon her unawares? And this word, unawares, reminds us of another point of resemblance between the times of Noah, and Lot, and the time of the coming of the Son of man. For as the flood of water came on the antediluvian world, and as the rain of fire came on the cities of the plain unawares, even so will the coming of the Son of man be. The great mass will, as then, be taken by surprise.

4. And this naturally brings into view another sign of our times,—viz., the unbelief of the church and the world as to this great doctrine of the advent. The world will scoff at the doctrine of the advent altogether, while the language of the church will be, "Our Lord delayeth his coming." The sentiments of the former, we find recorded in 2 Peter 3: 3, 4: "Knowing this, first, that there shall come in the last days, scoffers, walking after their own lusts, and saying, Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation." What period of time is included by the last days here named, need not be positively decided. It is sufficient to say, that the last days of the gospel dispensation, those immediately preceding the coming of Christ, are doubtless included. Yet in these days, down to the period of the advent, the men of the world will scoff at the idea. But is not this true of our own day? "No," says the superficial observer; "does not the church preach this doctrine of the future advent? and where is the scoffing of the world?" But hold; just give this subject a little prominence, half that which the Scriptures give it, preach as the Scriptures preach it, as an event near at hand, intensify this truth, by the lapse of eighteen hundred years, and the concurrence of all the signs of our times, strike boldly and plainly, until you arrest public attention, and, having done all, mark the result. The man who will do so, who has the fortitude and ability to do so, effectually, will call down upon himself such a tirade of abuse and ridicule, as no other course of action would secure, however simple, mean or criminal. Miller's experience is an example in point. Long before the error of his chronological dates had been developed by the lapse of time, he was the butt of ridicule. The license to abuse and vilify him was absolutely universal and unchallenged. Why was this? From the great mass, this opposition, this abuse arose not from the detection of his chronological errors, but from unbelief of, and hatred to, the doctrine of the advent altogether. And this belief, this hatred, still pervades the masses; and were the doctrine preached to-day, as then, plainly, boldly, powerfully, the results would be everywhere similar.

But the church's unbelief is of a different type. She does not, like the world, deny the doctrine in toto, she simply postpones the event. "Our Lord delayeth his coming." And should the question be asked her, How long? the reply would be, at least a thousand years. But why put this language into the mouth of the church? We answer because the Savior puts it into the mouth of the evil servant, who would not watch for his returning Lord; and that servant must be understood as the representative of a class,—a class, who should be found in the church just prior to the advent. And if that class does not constitute the church of to-day, it is not because her position on the subject of the advent is not the same. If that unfaithful, unwatchful servant, dees not represent the church of to-day, on this subject, then we will look in vain for the represented.

But again, the unbelief or indifference of the church, just prior to the advent, as it respects this event, as illustrated in the parable, is a prophetic description of the state of the church immediately preceding the advent. We do not understand, however, that the definite numbers used, represent the exact proportion of the true and false professors of that day. There will be many of both classes. But what we wish to notice particularly, is that just before the midnight cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh," these virgins "all slumbered and slept." This language points out the great want of watchfulness which will characterize the church at that day. Now where shall we look for a realization of this prophetic picture, if not to our own day? On this subject the church of to-day is most assuredly asleep. We are told the form of salutation among christians in primitive times, in very common use, was, "The Lord cometh." We know from the Scriptures, that the early christians longed for this event. But it is not so now. The subject is not talked of, nor thought of. The pulpit and the press proscribe it. Truths pertaining to the church's faith are discussed a thousand times over, but those pertaining to her hopes are neglected. Many excuse themselves by saying, "The great matter is to know that we are united to Christ." Yet the wise, as well as the foolish virgins are censured, not because they had no oil, but because they went to sleep when they ought to have watched. We conclude, then, that the unbelief and indifference of the church and world on the subject of the advent, constitutes a marked and well-defined sign of the near approach of that event.

5. The period immediately preceding the advent will be distinguished as a time of great trouble, anxiety and consternation among all classes of society; see Luke 21: 25, 26: "And upon the earth, distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring, men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth." The Savior speaks of these as immediate precursors of his second coming. They certainly refer to a time which is to be remarkable for the things named. But are we not now beginning to realize something of this distress of nations—much, very much of this perplexity, and fear, and evil foreboding? Nations like individuals sometimes have presentiments. This was true at the time of the first advent. Men, as it were, held their breath, sure that something remarkable was about to transpire. And so it is now. The civilized world is fairly oppressed with the conviction that we are upon the threshold of some grand crisis; some great turning point in the history of our world. If we are not living in the time indicated by the Savior, it is possible we will fail to know it when it comes. . . .

6. Finally, the last days, and therefore the days immediately preceding the advent will be noted for great laxity of morals in the church of God. See 2 Tim. 3: 1–5: "This know, also, that in the last days perilous times shall come: for men shall be lovers of their ownselves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemers, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy. Having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof." This is a sad picture, yet since the apostle tells us that the persons spoken of have a form of godliness, we must look for its original in the church of God; nor need we look long to find it in our own day. Is it not very largely true, that there is now scarcely any such thing as discipline known in the church? What enormity can the imagination paint which some one or more of the churches does not tenderly cover over with the mantle of religion? Even the slaveholder, who seems the embodiment of all that is wicked—whose crime is "the sum of all villainies," finds a safe lodging-place in many of the churches. Besides, it is an age distinguished for selfishness, pride, insubordination, and formality. No part of the church can plead not guilty to these charges. Is it harsh, then, is it uncharitable, to say that the apostle describes in the above language the church of our own times, and that consequently we are living in the time closely trenching upon the coming of Jesus Christ?

Such are some of the signs of our times—signs which all point with unerring certainty to one grand coming event—an event so glorious, that its prospect should fill every christian heart with an ecstacy of joy.

From the foregoing we may notice the following practical deductions.

1. We should study this subject. "Blessed is he that readeth, and they that hear the words of this prophecy." "We have, also, a more sure word of prophecy, whereunto ye do well that ye take heed, as unto a light that shineth in a dark place, until the day dawn." The mariner examines his charts, and takes his observations. He is not satisfied unless he knows his latitude and his compass points. So the christian should know his position upon the great stream of time. He, too, should take his daily observations. Prophecy is his only chart. Without its light, he can know nothing of the future; all would be impenetrable darkness. Without this light to guide and cheer us amidst the darkness and the storm, we are like the sea-tossed mariner, who, without compass or helm, abandons himself to the winds, and drifts—he knows not whither. We may know everything that is to be known: but diligent, prayerful study, here, as in every other department of Bible literature, will be amply compensated.

2. We should watch for the coming of Christ. It is not enough that we have the oil of grace in our lamps—that we are children of God by regeneration; we have a duty beyond this; we must watch; for we know not at what hour the Son of man cometh. Nor is this a watching for the event of death simply. Death is no pleasant prospect. It is not desirable for its own sake—not, says the apostle, that we would be unclothed. He did not desire it for its own sake. But the coming of Christ is to be looked for with very different feelings. It is regarded as a joyful prospect. "Looking for," says the apostle, "and hasting unto the coming day of God." We are even taught to pray for it: "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

Preparation and watchfulness for death are not what our Lord enjoins in connection with his glorious advent. But how, says an objector, can I watch intently, in any true sense, for an event which I believe, and christians generally believe, to be over a thousand years distant? We answer, you cannot. But should you believe as you do? Are you not occupying the position of the evil servant who said, "My Lord delayeth his coming"? Do not the Scriptures teach us to watch for it as an event which may transpire at any day? Let us watch, then, lest the day of the Lord should overtake us as a thief.

3. If the foregoing reasoning be correct, then we cannot have the millennium before the advent. If the advent is near, as indicated by the signs, there is no room for the millennium this side of it. The signs cannot occur, and all pass away a thousand years in advance of the thing signified. Then they would be no signs. They cannot occur during the millneium—these, or any like them. It would suppose a state of things wholly unlike the millennium. They cannot transpire at the close of the millennium; for between that and the final judgment, there is but a "little season," and that little season is so completely taken up with events peculiarly its own, that there is no time nor place for these signs. Yet if we put the advent at the close of the millennium, we must put the signs there too. And what a strange confounding and misplacing of events that would be! The kingdom does not come in its power before the King; the millennium does not come before the advent.

4. But, finally, if the advent is near, then what new zeal and life should be infused into all who hear this good news. Now is the time when the servants are to make their last and best efforts to gather guests. We must go out into the highways and hedges, and gather up the lame, the halt, and the blind, and compel them to come in, that the wedding may be furnished with guests. The door of our New Testament ark is not yet closed. Let us tell the prisoner to hasten and escape to Christ, the only ark of safety. Tell him that the time is short, that now is the accepted time, and now is the day of salvation. Tell him that the Master cometh. And let our prayer be, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, come quickly."—United Presbyterian.

— Little faults become great, and even monstrous in our eyes, in proportion as the pure light of God increases in us; just as the sun, in rising, reveals the true dimension of objects which were dimly and confusedly discerned during the night.

— Morality without religion is only a kind of dead reckoning—an endeavor to find our place on a cloudy sea by measuring the distance we have run, without any observation of the heavenly bodies.

People in the States are so accustomed to paying only three cents postage on a letter, they often forget to put on an extra stamp for Nova Scotia, or Canada.

OUR NEW OFFICE.

We are much pleased with our new office. It is on the corner of Hanover and Salem Streets, over the "Boston drug store," directly opposite the old office. The entrance is at No. 7 Salem Street. We believe we were directed to the place in answer to prayer.

THE BOSTON CONFERENCE.

We learn that the late conference at the Lowell St. Chapel continued with unabated interest during Saturday and Sabbath, April 9th and 10th. Without hesitation it is said to be the best one we have ever had in Boston. The Lord smiled upon the conference, and filled his children with great peace. It was a cross to leave the conference before its close; but we have long since learned that the path of duty is the path of pleasure. Such gatherings are a great blessing to the church of Christ. We gain strength by association that can be obtained in no other way. For this reason, no doubt, the Jews were required to meet annually at Jerusalem to worship the Lord.

We had a very large gathering at the Boston conference. Many could not get into the house. The occasion was like the ancient feasts at Pentecost. We are expecting that soon all the saints will be gathered at the great feast of tabernacles in the kingdom of God. Let us be ready and waiting.

THINGS AT ROME.

The Pope's matters are in a very interesting condition, and we may expect some important movements soon. The Italians are awake to the state of things, and preparing to make the Pope serious trouble. It is now known that a conspiracy is in operation, with Mazzini for a leader, with the avowed object of ridding Italy of the Papal power. The future prospect for Pius IX. looks very dark and threatening. The eyes of the whole civilized world are turned to see how the Pope will escape from his perilous condition. He seems to flatter himself that it is coming out right; that the Lord will deliver him in some miraculous manner. We shall see. It is truly sublime to be living in these days, so near to the great day of the Lord, when the dead will be raised, and the kingdom of God established.

PERSONAL.

BRO. EDWIN BURNHAM is some better, but is far from being well. He is sweetly leaning upon Jesus. Pray for him, that he may again be able to preach the word with renewed energy and success.

BRO. ADAMS is improving slowly, but is not yet well. He is able to come to his store every day, and pay some attention to business.

BRO. WM. SHELDON is now in New England, and purposes to spend a few weeks near the sea-shore, hoping to receive physical benefit. He is better, but not yet able to do full work. He can preach once or twice on the Sabbath; and those churches who wish the labors of this faithful servant of the Lord, and also feel willing to help him "after a godly sort," can address him at the Crisis office.

"THE PROGRAMME."

We were a little surprised to learn that it has been supposed, at least by one of our readers, that "the programme" of the festival, published a few weeks since, was one to be held by those who are looking for the coming of Christ. We trust they have nothing to do with such things. The festival was held by those who have no sympathy with the blessed hope we love so well. When those who take the Crisis attend and assist in festivals, and other such scenes of amusement, we think they cannot have much comfort from the Holy Spirit of God.

☞ The Jeffersonville, Ind., Conference is postponed one week, or until Thursday, May 5th. See notice.

"THE CHURCH OF UNIVERSAL UNITY."

The enemies of the cross of Christ are busily engaged in efforts to establish what they are pleased to call "THE CHURCH OF UNIVERSAL UNITY." Satan has turned pretended reformer, and is making a grand effort to unite all men into one great confederation, under the watch-words of "LIBERTY, EQUALITY, AND FRATERNITY." He well knows the magical power of these words. The liberty proposed is expressed as follows: "Each man, and each woman, if you please, has a perfect right, under all circumstances, in all conditions, and in whatever locations, to do as he or she pleases." In addition to this, he would have all made equal by the law of universal suffrage, and then a universal brotherhood in "the church of universal unity."

All these things are sure tokens of the preparations for "the battle of the great day of God Almighty (Rev. 16: 14), when the enemies of the Lord must meet an eternal defeat. "The church of universal unity" does not accept Jesus as our Savior, but only as a "good man." This system is known in many places by the name of "Liberal Church." Such a church meets at Horticultural Hall, Boston. Sabbath, April 3d, it was addressed by Wm. H. Channing, who took occasion to say, as reported in the Boston Journal, April 4th:—

"The aspirations of mankind should be made one around the planet; a conception perfectly new and utterly unprecedented, opening the entire future, as yet unexplored, of a united humanity. Through all nations now, for the first time, as from one heart and from one brain, can pulsate a universal life. All the different types of men, different representatives of the divine ideal, speaking different tongues, with a variety of traditions, are thus centered and convergent, that they may accomplish together one united destiny.

The speaker drew a glowing picture of all the different nations trembling with the great expectation of this unity, characterizing America as the chosen of mankind, the youngest portion of the human family, standing actually as a mediator on this Western shore between the oldest Asia and the newest Europe, the bond among all nations, the peacemaker, if we follow our Providential destiny, among the nations destined under God to be the herald of universal unity. . . . The speaker then passed in view the great religious systems of the world, showing their limitations and inadequacy to the great trust of leadership in this scheme of progress. Of those who would offer Christendom as the universal system, he would ask which Christendom—the Christendom of the primeval church, of the middle ages, of the reform movement, or of to-day? He argued that the religion of the future must be thoroughly national, but in each nation have have an indigenous growth, and assume a distinctive and peculiar character of its own. All mankind will unite in a universal church; at the same time it will be adapted to the peculiar circumstances of each nation. One religion shall be acknowledged by all men. . . . He thought that the fullest, freest, amplest, noblest expression of the truth that God is infinitely social and has infinite ways of manifesting himself was to be found in the writings of Swedenborg. He disparaged the doctrine which would make Jesus an exclusive and superior being instead of a lowly brother and friend. The new call is to put the stripes of the Christian religion behind us."

RUTLAND.

The Lord is doing a great work in Rutland; but it meets with some bitter opposition from a few professors of religion. May the Lord "forgive them, for they know not what they do." The interest continues unabated. New ones are seeking the Lord every evening. We have had some of the best meetings we have ever enjoyed. The meeting Friday evening, April 15th, surpassed any one we ever experienced. The Spirit of God so filled the house, that it seemed as though we were breathing the very atmosphere of heaven. Sinners melted into tears, and gave their hearts to the Lord. It was an exceedingly rich feast of blessings, that filled the hearts of saints with an overflowing peace. The scene will not be soon forgotten by those present.

Fourteen more were baptized Sabbath, April 17th, and others are now waiting for the next opportunity. The heavenly tide is still rising, and we are expecting to witness still greater things. Pray for us.

The following was the leading editorial in the Rutland Courier, April 15th:—

ELDER GRANT AND THE CHRISTIAN UNION (?)

We, with many others, would be greatly pleased to know what Elder Grant has been doing amongst us, to so move the wrath of some of his brother divines. We have always heard of Elder Grant as an earnest, gifted, zealous preacher, with some ideas peculiar to himself. But his honesty and fair dealing we never doubted, not even since Rev. "Brother Bailey" come down, in the Rutland Herald, with such a heavy hand upon him. To preach that which one believes to be true is the mission of a manly christianity. To preach anything else is to preach a sham. To preach less is but little better. Elder Grant comes amongst us to exercise his instrumentality in saving souls. All preachers have a sort of formula for doing this. That is, each faith has its own ideas of the method of salvation. To repent, to believe, to be baptized are the essentials. What to repent of, is embraced in a faith common to all christians. What to believe, is preached in varying codes of faith. How to be baptized, is a matter of sectarian regulation. Has Elder Grant preached anything but his own doctrines on these points? Could he preach any other and preach honestly? Could he preach any less and preach conscientiously? We must confess we do not understand what is complained of in him. Did he come to Rutland undertaking to save sinners upon general principles, and not according to special ideas of faith and ceremonial? Did he agree to bring sinners to repentance and leave the finishing of the job to the other divines that seem to be troubled at his success? Surely if he believes that a specific faith and baptism are essential, he should inculcate those as well. If he belongs to a peculiar church he is bound in conscience to gather his converts in his own peculiar fold. Every one outside that fold, is one to be gathered in. If immersion is to him material, must he not teach its materiality? Not to teach is to declare, by implication, that it is not material. What, therefore, is the matter?

Has he stolen some of the Methodist or Baptist flock? Surely they ought to be preached to, and converted, if from Elder Grant's standpoint, all the essentials of their salvation have not been complied with. Has he committed some breach of clerical etiquette? Must a poor sinner be allowed to go to the devil on a point of clerical etiquette? Do the Reverend clergy, in their preconcerted and prearranged forays into the devil's domains, settle by treaty the division of the spoils? If so, it seems to us that it would be but fair for each of the high contracting parties to furnish their contingents of warriors and munitions of war. Has Rev. Mr. Grant burned anybody's powder but his own? Has any cohort, here, charged Beelzebub's ramparts but the Grantite column? Do the other brethren, because, perhaps, of moral support—a sort of transatlantic sympathy—claim to share the fruits of conquest? How about the converted sinners? Are they to have no voice or choice in the matter? Are they to be parceled out like cattle, so many to this party and so many to that?

Again we ask, what is the matter? Has Elder Grant been poaching upon Bro. Bailey's manor? If so, how? Has he led any of the brethren or sisters astray? Has he interfered with Bro. Bailey's patients or clients? Has he immersed any of the Methodists, Congregationalists, Baptists, Unitarians or Catholics? If so, what is to be complained of? With Pope, we would say:

"For forms of faith let zealous bigots fight,
He can't be wrong whose life is in the right."

Certainly, standing up to one's middle in the drifting ice of East Creek is not a job one would naturally hanker after in the month of March, and were we a Methodist parson, we would be glad to let out the job. Is there any harm in a plunge—lay or clerical—into ice water, provided one don't catch cold or show their—ankles? In every aspect of the question, it is a performance as well as a practice to be commended, for the performance is an act of godliness and the practice is next akin to it. Nor as a practice could it be improved except in the selection of a more comporting temperature and perhaps the occasional addition of—well, soap. If a man has been sprinkled or anointed, what harm to dip him? Is he any the less a good christian for the dipping? If he wants to make a sure thing of it, why not let him have the satisfaction and comfort of sprinkling and immersion both? If a man has one ticket of admittance to glory, what is the harm of his having another, if he is willing to pay for it? In sickness the patient has more than one doctor and no complaint is made; and surely, if one renowned Doctor of Divinity says sprinkling is the certain cure, and another says immersion is the thing needed, a prudent man or woman, to make a sure thing of it, might get both remedies without danger of being damned for so doing. So, we ask, in all seriousness, what is the matter? Has the Elder been too much for the other clergymen in Rutland? Is he too sharp a practitioner? Has he come it over 'em? Ain't they up to the dodges? Has he gone back on 'em? Has he bamboozled, skinned, whipped or euchred the crowd? What is the matter? For the Lord's sake, "Let us have peace."

EUROPEAN WAR CLOUDS.

The political aspect in Europe looks quite stormy. The war clouds appear to be gathering again for a great tempest among the nations. While severe storms in nature are passing over the earth, doing great damage on sea and land, there are very strong forebodings of a corresponding blowing of the political winds.

Says the New York Herald of April 21st, 1870:—

"By our latest advices per mail from Europe we learn that Russia is concentrating an army of one hundred and twenty thousand men on the southern confines of Poland, and at the same moment Prussia is pushing with hot haste the work on her grand fortified harbor of Wilhelmshafen—the Cherbourg and Cronstadt, in one, of the North Germanic Confederation. Against whom or under what menace are these preparations directed? There is some difficulty still between the Prussian and the Danish governments in reference to the everlasting subject of the Schleswig-Holstein treaties, and it has even been rumored that Copenhagen might be bombarded by the German navy, but that would not directly require a concentration of Russian forces toward the southwest. The Czar is reported to be eying the crisis in Austria and the movements of Turkey with eager gaze; but that would hardly account for hasty and heavy Prussian fortifications on the north.

What, then, does this sudden and simultaneous action of the two great conterminous northern powers portend? They are closely allied, and their rulers are nearly related by marriage. The Czar has long been displeased with Austria, and Prussia has a bone to pick with France. Bismarck means German unity south as well as north. Napoleon dare not let a Teutonic Colossus grow up to overshadow him beyond the Rhine. Then Bismarck is ill, and his attacks have always portended mischief in the field of diplomacy. He is as bold as he is able, and he well knows how 'where the lion's skin falls short, to eke it out with the fox's.' Are we to have a grand move to absorb Baden and Wurtemberg along with Bavaria, as hinted in our article of a few days since? And are Russia and Prussia to stand together against France and Austria? The drift of the political current sets that way, and diplomatic notes and semi-official journalistic articles are flitting to and fro like Mother Carey's chickens seen before a storm. The cloud in the northeast is thus far no bigger than a man's hand; but that hand, in its broad grasp and nervous digits, looks wondrously like the huge paw of Count Bismarck."

WOMAN'S HEALTH JOURNAL.—The Laws of Life, and Woman's Health Journal, has been issued, by its publishers, in an extra number, to be sent to all its subscribers, and to all other persons who would like to receive specimen copies of it. The publishers seem determined to spare no expense in maintaining for their Journal, first class rank. They therefore have decided hereafter to issue it in neat covers, to improve its quality of paper, add to made it answer the necessities and desires of all classes of persons, who wish to know, either how to live, without sickness, or if sick, to get well, by simple methods. We advise our readers, by all means, to send, and obtain specimen copies of it. NEW YORK STATE CONFERENCE.

Dear Brethren of New York:—Shall the above title be the name of a dead carcass? or of a living, active, useful institution? Which shall it be? Come, brethren, it is for you to decide. Our annual conference is soon coming off, and how many delegates have we a right to look for? We should have one from each of the following places; viz., Victory, Butler, Wolcott, New London and vicinity, Seneca Falls, Honeoye, Alton, Danville, Rogersville, Springwater, Brockport, Carlton, Murray, Darien, Knowlesville, Shelby, Lockport, Yorkshire, Rochester. This would give us a delegation of nineteen members, and some of the above churches are entitled to two or three delegates. Any church numbering fifty members is entitled to two delegates, or one delegate for every twenty-five members above the first twenty-five. Any church having three male members, who are co-operationg with the Advent Christian body of this State, will be entitled to send one delegate, provided with a certificate attesting the fact that he is chosen to represent them at the conference.

There is very important business to come before our next annual conference, and we want every church represented. Let us come together like men, and do something that will honor the cause we love so well.

It is time we were all awake. The Lord is coming: The kingdom is coming. The glory, the honor, the immortality,—all, all will very soon be here. Have we all done our duty? Can the Master say to me, "Well done"? Brethren, think of these things candidly, soberly, prayerfully. Do not read them and dismiss without a second thought, but say, I must do something. We hope the ninth of June to see you or your delegate at the place of conference, the first day of meeting, ready to act in the great work of making ready a people to hail with joy the coming of that Just One. We cannot now name definitely the place for the next conference. It will soon be noticed in the Crisis.

A LITTLE JOURNEY.

BRO. GRANT:—On Friday night, the 4th of March, I went on board the Portland boat with my wife and two brothers in Christ. That evening, we held a meeting. We opened the meeting by singing a hymn, and reading a portion of God's word and prayer. We then gave liberty for others. One young man spoke a few words. We felt the power of God with us. We arrived at Portland that morning about three o'clock. The next day at four o'clock my wife and brothers left for Halifax. The next day was Sunday. I went to the Advent Chapel in Portland, and found the brethren strong in the Lord. Bro. York preached two good discourses, and the Lord blessed us through the word.

Tuesday morning I left for Boston on foot, and got as far as Kennebunkport. Had a meeting in the school-house that evening. Had a good time with the brethren. Some rose for prayers. There seems to be good interest among all the brethren in that village. The next day I walked as far as Great Works, and there met with Bro. Dow and his family. His hope is strong in the Lord. The next day, I walked as far as Newcastle, N. H. The next day I stopped at Portsmouth awhile, and then traveled as far as Hampton, and called on Bro. Johnson. He is a strong man in Jesus. I got blessed while I was with him. Saturday evening, we went up to Seabrook, to a prayer-meeting. We had a blessed time together. We felt the Spirit of Christ was with us. The next day was Sunday. It was very stormy, but we met at the new chapel, and had a good time in Jesus. There are dear brethren in Seabrook.

I like to work for Jesus. He pays me well. I feel strong in him. I expect to go among the sons of the ocean. I must work for Jesus. R. ANNIS.

ASCENSION ROBES.

BRO. GRANT:—Will you be so kind as to insert the following correspondence, clipped from the New York Independent, for the benefit of many readers of "our paper," who believe that "Millerites" once donned ascension robes to "go up" and meet the Lord.

"Mr. J. T. Dixon, of Rocky Brook, R. I., under date Feb. 10th, writes: 'In the notice of a new work on the 'Coming of Christ in his kingdom,' in the Independent of last week, I read the statement that 'gaping believers have prepared their ascension robes, ready to be donned at a moment's warning, on the appearance of the august and descending Personage.' Will you be so kind as to announce in the Independent that the sum of one hundred dollars will be paid if proof positive can be produced that an ascension robe was ever 'donned' by any of the Second Adventists at any time. I, like others, have been misled by that slander.' Mr. Dixon will observe that the writer of the notice in the Independent did not say that ascension robes had been 'donned' but only that they had been 'prepared, ready to be donned.' But we suspect that even this cannot be proved. The writer probably erred in assuming the truth of idle stories set afloat in a time of excitement to satirize the Second Adventists."

The following letter from Rev. Samuel Lee, pastor of the Congregational church in New Ipswich, N. H., and the affidavit accompanying the same, tell their own story:

NEW IPSWICH, N. H., Feb. 26th, '70.

MR. TILTON—Dear Sir:—As Mr. J. T. Dixon offered, through the Independent, $100 to any one who would furnish evidence that an 'ascension robe' was ever 'donned,' I suppose the evidence in point should be given through the same medium. The Mr. Chas. C. Bellows, whose testimony I send, is one of my neighbors, and a christian gentleman, whose word would not be doubted by any who know him. Please then inform Mr. J. T. Dixon, of Rocky Brook, R. I., that I am happy to give him the information he so much desires; and also that I shall regard myself as entitled to the $100. Respectfully yours,

SAMUEL LEE.

AFFIDAVIT.

On the 23d October, 1844, while boarding in Providence, R. I., I saw two ladies, fellow-boarders—the name of one I well remember—who firmly believed they were to ascend to heaven that night, and appeared very anxious that I, with four or five other boarders, should go with them to the general meeting of the Millerites and place of ascension. I had frequently seen these ladies sewing on fine white goods for several days. They said to me they were ascension robes. They were made longer than ordinary dresses of that day. My engagements did not permit me; but those who went, one of them my own brother, since dead, told me there were over thirty in the company of about two hundred that were ready, with their ascension robes on, and that the excitement was very great.

C. C. BELLOWS.

State of New Hampshire, Hillsborough, ss., Feb. 26th, 1870.

[SEAL.] W. A. PRESTON,
Justice of the Peace and Notary Public.

"Mr. J. T. Dixon, of Rocky Brook, R. I., in response to the letter of the Rev. Samuel Lee, and the affidavit of Mr. C. C. Bellows, published by us last week, writes as follows: 'I have just read the affidavit of Mr. C. C. Bellows in relation to the 'donning ascension robes,' etc. While I would not for a moment question the Christian integrity of Mr. B., or of the Rev. Mr. Lee, who sends the affidavit, I must dispute the testimony as not being positive or sufficient for any honorable man to claim the reward. It is certainly not such testimony as I demanded. I think you, Mr. Editor, and every common-sense person, will admit it. I trust Mr. B. will not regard this as too severe, neither as a plea to evade the fulfillment of the pledge. I simply reason from my own standpoint.'

Mr. Dixon fortifies his position by an argument for which we cannot find room. His decision in the case is all that interests our readers or the public."

In my reply, or argument, as they called it, I simply asked for one living witness who would before a magistrate make oath, or affirmation, that they ever saw an ascension robe donned. C. C. B.'s brother was dead. He did not give the name of that lady; neither did he state the place of meeting. I happen to know where that meeting was: in the vicinity of Providence, on the 23d of Oct., 1844; and have positive proof from more than one living witness that no ascension robes were donned. I spoke of the two ladies making robes longer than usual, that Mr. B. noticed several days as being of a kind that all ladies generally use; and that when gentlemen are too inquisitive, modest ladies sometimes answer equivocally, as it might have been in that case; and that often in their meetings in those times they would speak of having on their robes, or of having them prepared, always meaning the spotless robes of Christ's righteousness. Prejudiced persons would report these things with their colorings, and in this way many were perhaps duped, as was C. C. Bellows. I requested Mr. B. and Rev. Mr. Lee to post themselves a little better, and they would discover that Adventists never expected to "ascend to heaven" with or without "ascension robes."

In a private note from the editor of the Independent, after giving reasons why he could not give place in his columns for my argument, he closes thus: "As to an investigation, to decide whether anybody ever 'donned' an ascension robe, I don't believe any such thing ever happened; but if it ever did, it is not of the slightest consequence."

THE NEW HAMPSHIRE TENT.

To the brethren, sisters, and friends of New Hampshire:—The time for tent meetings is nearly upon us; and have we made up our minds, in the fear of God, what our duty is in this matter, and what we will do by the help of the Lord? If we have not, let us do it now. How shall we meet our responsibility in a few days at the judgment? God has laid upon us the duty of warning this generation of their approaching doom, and we believe one of the mightiest means, in the hand of God, is "tent meetings." When we see what was accomplished last year at Albany, Dover, Great Works (South Berwick), Farmington, and other places, it is no longer a matter of doubt about tent meetings being the best way to carry the truth into new places, and sometimes into old places.

But what do we need? First, the right men to go. We think we have them. Second, we need means to carry the tent into new places. Say, friends of Jesus and of the perishing, shall we have it? How much will perish in the fires of the last day; and shall we perish with it? or shall we, by doing our duty, save ourselves and them who hear us?

The tent is in the hands of the New Hampshire Conference, and that conference is not an "iron bedstead," but one of God's free conferences, laboring harmoniously to publish the truth. Who will stand aloof? Will not all put shoulder to the work, and help in the good cause?

Bro. John B. Shorey, of East Rochester, N. H., has been chosen tent-master, and to arrange tent-meetings; so friends who wish tent-meetings will correspond with him, and he will try to arrange them to the best advantage.

Those who gave pledges at the conference at Concord, we would like to have them, so far as they can, bring or send the amount to the conference next week, at Portsmouth, as there is but a trifle in the treasury to commence with. It will also be a good time for others to take hold in the good work, so that our brethren can meet their expenses as they go, beside those where the tent goes doing all they can. May the good Lord give us wisdom in this good work.

THE GENERAL THEOLOGICAL LIBRARY.

This institution, at No. 12 West street, deserves more attention from our Advent ministers and students of the Bible than it has received. Who, in his study of the Scriptures, or in the preparation of a discourse or an article for publication, has not often felt the want of valuable Bible helps, which his means were not adequate to purchase, and which, at some time, would have been of great advantage to him to have had at hand for consultation?

The General Theological Library is designed to meet this very want, and to furnish ministers and others, not only in Boston but at a distance, with such helps as they may need, in the prosecution of their Biblical or theological investigations.

The Library has been increasing largely every year since its formation, and now numbers nearly 7000 volumes, 8000 pamphlets, and 22,000 newspapers on file; and embraces some of our own denominational papers and publications. The number of persons who took out books the past year was 18,000, from sixty-eight different towns and cities.

Ministers and Bible students, visiting the city, would do well to give the Library a call before leaving. Any further information, as to terms, etc., may be had by addressing the Secretary, Mr. Luther Farnham, No. 12 West St., Boston. W. B. HERRON.

THE HOROSCOPE FOR 1870.

More and more, as we progress in wisdom, it is discovered that the relations between mind and matter are very intimate, and that those influences which control the physical universe also exert a powerful if not a controlling influence over the mental, and therefore living world.

The science of Astronomy, for ages, has been associated with that art or profession called Astrology, and with such results as to preserve their connection to this day. Certain occultations and siderial conjunctions of planets, certain signs in the sun, certain movement of comets, certain magnetic phenomena, have been found so to affect the health, happiness and conditions of men that students of science have had to acknowledge subtle, yet perfectly apparent relations of man to the order of the universe.

These relations, when once clearly resolved, or demonstrated, will no doubt explain a thousand mysteries of our lives and account for what is now known as Spiritual Phenomena; the phenomena of the Planchette, &c., &c., and will also enable the sagacious observer to prognosticate the future of certain human events with as much accuracy as we now foretell an eclipse, or the return of a comet, or the coming of a shower of meteors.

Without ascribing to our "Seer" any undue confidence, we are yet led to acknowledge that his predictions of last year were remarkably fulfilled. He really foretold important events, and revealed, beforehand, some most significant truths. This has led us to accord the same authority a space for the following:

PREDICTIONS FOR 1870.

It will not be a year of general fruitfulness. Grain in the west will not be over half a crop: the price of land will fall in all the States west of the Alleghanies and north of parallel 38°6', an advance in all States south of that line; the cattle from Texas will be driven to northern markets with less success than during the year past, for prices of beef will be lower and feed higher; there will be fearful storms in the northwestern States during the summer, and late in the fall the lower Mississippi country will be inundated. The sugar crop in Louisiana will be a good yield, and that of cotton throughout the Southern States will be a large yield, but in the seaboard States will be less satisfactory than in 1869. All of these predictions are based upon those astronomical signs and physical conjunctions now at work, and which must result in the general effects above indicated when the causes are applied to man's labors and the soil.

In the moral and religious world remarkable excitement will pervade all Europe and South America. There will be a serious schism in the Roman Catholic Church, and there will also be a serious conflict of opinion between the Romish and Protestant faith. This will enlist not only the pulpit and the churches, but involve the press of both continents, and the year will be noted in the Calendar as the year of political and religious upheaval. One man will become the observed of all observers in this country. His going and coming will be followed by great commotion.

An Emperor will die and his dynasty will cease its reign. Two Empresses will cease to reign. A leading member of the reigning family of Great Britain will die. Great discoveries in the African continent will be announced. Canada will be in deep discontent, and one member of the Dominion will ask for admission to the United States. Two United States Senators will die during the year. A fierce simoon will sweep the southern coast, reaching to the Isle of France, in August.

A great philanthropist, even as we write, is obscured in the Horoscope, betokening his early decease. A millionaire of vast influence in the commercial world will cease his labors, either by death or accident. His horoscope indicates a violent death. A railroad accident of an appalling character on one of the lines of railroad lying east and west is inevitable. The prismatic lines in Sirius are broken, which always betoken accidents to lines of iron running at right angles with the magnetic current. The Union will be fully restored during the year. An author of great celebrity will die, probably before the summer.

A woman now celebrated or distinguished on the stage will meet with a calamity which will end in her death, and much scandal will be associated with her name. There will be magnificent star showers soon after we write, which will be repeated in the early part of November. The year will be one of unusual health, but of much excitement, as before stated. The horoscope shows two clouds coming upon us—one from the west, probably the Chinese, and one from the east—probably the outpouring of a vast emigration from Europe. This cloud is silver-centered, which betokens a prosperous financial condition. The collocation of stars with golden rims or discs, also indicate a golden prosperity, which is highly favorable to the success of the year's commerce and trade.—Com.

REPORT OF THE THIRD ANNUAL CONFERENCE OF MASS.

Conference met at Boston, Mass., Lowell St., in connection with the General Conference, April 8th, at 9 o'clock A. M. The officers were all there. The following names of members present were handed in:—Elders Grant, Couch, Mathewson, Pratt, Munger, Ross, Thomas, Butler, Streeter, Owen, Goodrich, Brewer, Preble, Higgins, White, Woodside, Sweet. The following brethren were voted in and added as members:—Elds. Wm. E. Hathaway, J. G. Smith, D. M. Leavitt, C. P. Whitten, and B. Finney. Delegates: Brn. Hall, Barnes, Ayres, Higgins, Giddings, Buxton, of Worcester; Welsh, Bailey, of Holden; Whitten, Church, of Lowell; Eggleston, Phelps, Westfield; Cruse, Hamblin, E. Boston; Kingsbury, Richards, Chelsea; Griggs, Brimfield. Savoy and No. Adams were represented by E. McCullock, by letter; Boston, South End, and Stoneham, were represented by C. Goodrich. Bro. Jordan reported the Lowell St. church.

The following officers and committees for the year ensuing were chosen: President, S. W. Thurber; Vice President, T. M. Preble; Secretary, Geo. A. Streeter; Treasurer, C. Goodrich. Protracted Meeting committee: Geo. A. Streeter, H. Munger, L. Boutell, S. W. Thurber. Ministerial committee: H. Munger, A. M. Higgins, Elam Burnham, L. Boutell, C. Goodrich. Quarterly Conference committee: L. Boutell, S. S. Brewer, Geo. A. Streeter, C. Goodrich, H. Munger, J. S. White, T. M. Preble.

It was voted that the Quarterly Conference committee should hold meetings and preside at them in their several localities. Bro. C. Goodrich gave a report as a committee on certificates of membership, which was accepted. It was voted that the certificates be referred to the Ministerial committee for distribution.

It was voted that the conference take the Mass. Tent and run it the present year. A committee of three were chosen, of the following Brn., to have the charge of it: E. G. Kingsbury, Geo. A. Streeter, and L. Boutell. Pledges were handed in to the amount of $236.00, to carry the Tent into new places or fields, some of which was paid in. Some of the members and delegates reported their labors and churches. They gave good reports. As this conference was connected with the general one, there was not time for all to report.

We were glad to see so goodly a number present, and such a growing interest. Although the conference opened under some discouragements, yet it closed well. One said he was glad it had not died; and it now stands better than it ever has. We sincerely hope that it will be a blessing to everybody, and an injury to none. May the blessing of God rest upon it, for without that all is useless. Brethren and sisters, pray for it.

For the World's Crisis.

SHEPHERD OF ISRAEL; or, ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE INNER LIFE. By Rev. Duncan McGregor, M. A.

The above is the title of a new book just from the press of Robert Carter and Bros., New York. This is an excellent book, by a Scotch minister. It breathes the true spirit of christianity, and of the best type, much deeper in christian experience than most religious books of the present day. Although interspersed with the error that the dead are in heaven, it is rich in illustrations of the truth that Christ is coming to gather his church; and in constant allusions to the blessed hope of the future rest and glorious reign of the saints in the world to come. We give a few extracts. After speaking of the church as the king's daughter, he continues:—

"THE BRIDE'S HOME. 'She shall be brought unto the king in raiment of needle work. . . . With gladness and rejoicing shall they be brought. They shall enter into the king's palace.' Now she is busy, like a betrothed, preparing for the bridal day, sometimes bright with hope, but oftener mourning her unreadiness to meet her Lord. She looks for him. She forgets her people and her father's house for him. She cries, 'Until the day break and the shadows flee away, Turn, my beloved; and be thou like a roe, or a young hart upon the mountains of Bether.' Now the voyage is rough and the tempest high; and, with 'neither sun nor stars for many days appearing,' sometimes 'all hope of being saved is taken away'; at last the shores of Emmanuel's land appear; angels stand beckoning, and the royal Bride enters into the haven." "She shall see the King in his beauty." There will be a personal meeting. Here the marriage, like all royal marriages, is arranged by ambassadors. Joseph only speaks by an interpreter, and sometimes speaks roughly. She cannot see Jesus face to face now; but at last he will come out of the ivory palaces, and she shall be caught up to meet him in the clouds. These eyes shall see him; these arms shall embrace him; these ears shall hear the music of his voice. O, it was sweet to hear him say, 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest'; but sweeter will it be to hear the joyful welcome from the throne, 'Come, ye blessed.' There will be an open declaration of his love to her before all worlds. The King will say to her from his throne, 'These are my jewels; this is my Bride. For her I lay in the manger; for her I hung upon the cross; for her I lay in the grave. In a day of power I espoused her to myself; I drew her with cords of love."—Pages 49, 50.

I. C. WELLCOME.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—Let me, by the help of God, "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." The Lord saith, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." What has he commanded us to do? He saith, "Go work in my vineyard." Is there any work in the vineyard of the Lord for us to do? Yes, say you, enough of it, and but little time in which to do it. May we "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." We can do nothing without him. And while he is ready and willing to "work in us, to will and to do of his good pleasure," may we "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling." Is it not the duty of every christian to fear God and keep his commandments? Yes, the wise man saith this is man's whole duty. Now, are we fearing God and keeping his commandments? We are required to love God with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourself. Are we doing it, dear friends? Has the precious love of Christ the uppermost seat in our affections? Is he to us the chief among ten thousands, and the one altogether lovely? and do we do by others as we wish to be done by?

The Lord has commanded us to be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Are we as earnestly engaged for God and his most precious truth as we ought to be? It is as Bro. Thomson has said in the Crisis: "We cannot be consistent with our profession of faith, without being terribly in earnest." O, my dear brethren, sound the alarm.

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,
When we must stand before our Judge,
And pass the solemn test."

The Lord has promised to "make all things new." Yes, we are looking for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Seeing that we are looking for such things, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness."

P. TANDY.

BRO. J. H. BULLARD writes from Chicago, March 25th, 1870:—"We are having lively meetings here now. The prayer-meetings are doing good. We have just started a mission on the north side, No. 40 Clybourn Avenue. Bro. Ramsay dedicated the place last Lord's day. We hope and pray that sinners may flock in and taste of the sweetness of the christian religion. We have prayer-meetings every Wednesday and Friday evenings. The Lord is working through us, and making our hearts glad. He is blessing us abundantly, and we hope, by his help, to bring many sinners into the fold of Christ. We are unfurling the blood-stained banner of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and we intend to hold it above our heads, that it may be seen by all around."

NEWS FROM ALL THE WORLD.

THE CATHOLICS AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The following is from a New York Times editorial:—

"Do we over-state the demands of the Roman Catholics? If anybody supposes so, let him listen to the expressions of opinion in the Catholic journals. The Tablet, a paper of authority among Catholics, said only last Saturday, in reference to a proposed compromise, 'No, gentlemen, that will not do, and there is no help but in dividing the public schools, or in abandoning the system of public schools altogether.' The Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati, has declared, 'It will be a glorious day for Catholics in this country when, under the blows of justice and morality, our school system will be shivered to pieces. Until then, modern Paganism will triumph.' The Freeman's Journal, Dec. 11, says: 'Let the public school system go to where it came from—the devil.' 'We ask,' says Bishop Lynch, of New Orleans, 'that the public schools be cleansed from this peace-destroying monstrosity—Bible reading.' We cannot use the common schools, says Rev. Thomas Preston, 'because they answer not our end, nor satisfy our consciences.' We might multiply quotations to the same effect until we filled this column, but we apprehend that no Catholic will repudiate the sentiments compromised in the extracts already given.

'The Catholics,' such persons say, 'only want to do what they like with their own children.' The truth is they want to do much more than this. They want to break up the educational system which has cost so much labor and thought to construct, and which has already been productive of such great benefits to the whole country."

THE ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.

We take the extract ensuing from the N. Y. Express.

The Outside Pressure at Rome.—Great bodies move slowly. The Ecumenical Council is unquestionably a great body, and must not hence be expected to participate in the hurry which in these go-ahead days is characteristic of most other assemblages. Even if it has been over three months in session, and has not yet reached the all important question of the infallibility of the Pope—what then? Nothing, except that when the fathers are ready it will be promulgated, and not a moment before. What is known as "outside pressure" has no influence on this learned conclave. Its motions it is claimed, are the motions, not of men, but of the Holy Spirit—and as these cannot be subjected to worldly wishes, or worldly aspirations, the faithful must have patience, and bide their time.

Meanwhile, however, serious trouble is arising with the kingdom that is not of this world. The godless government of France is exhibiting an inclination to meddle with the deliberations of the Council, and if the inclination is not gratified it threatens to withdraw the French troops from Rome, and so leave the Holy Father to the uncovenanted mercies of the heathen "reds." At any rate, it is authoritatively announced that the representatives of several secondary Catholic Powers, among them Bavaria, Belgium and Portugal, have informed Cardinal Antonelli that their governments have entered into negotiations with the Cabinet of the Tuileries to the effect that if a French Ambassador be sent to the Council, he will at the same time represent their respective interests. This crowd of outsiders naturally annoys the Pope, but the old gentleman bears up under it with characteristic complacency.

The Rome correspondent of the London Times writes:—

"The Bishops have been very clamorous lately for leave to go home by Easter, and make "holy oil" for the ensuing year. Pius IX. is equal to the emergency, and has issued a document to the effect that the remaining stock of holy oil is to be mixed with sufficient new oil to make a supply for the next year; and that the oil so mixed is to have the same virtue as if every particle of it had been consecrated. To uninitiated persons this looks a very sensible course to take under the circumstances, but a good many of the Bishops allege that the Pope cannot command a violation of the Ritual, decreed by successive Councils, without the consent of a Council. The very act of issuing such an order, they say, shows that Pius IX. is exalting himself above everything, superseding all authority, and dispensing with all obligation."

The following is a startling exhibition of the prevalence of

FŒTICIDE.

Dr. Hopkins, of Utica, publishes a statement giving most startling statistics of the growth and prevalence of this crime. The figures are well nigh unbelievable, but are vouched for as reliable. Taking New York city as an index of this country, the records show the increase of procured abortions to be alarmingly rapid, in spite of civilization and religion. In 1805, the ratio of fœtal deaths to the population was one to 1,633; but in 1849, one to 340; in 1856, one to ten, and now, one to four. This is a most terrible showing for the morals of the country, when we reflect that ante-natal infanticide is as clearly murder as the forcible extinction of a life which has taken visible form in the world. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that the metropolis is a fair index of the country. The crowded population there renders the rearing of children more difficult, and makes stronger the incentives to their premature destruction. Besides, crime segregates in great cities, and the proportion of bastard births, of which unfortunate women are ashamed, is far larger than elsewhere. The knowledge of the means of procuring abortions, also, is more generally diffused in centres of population, and the instrumentalities therefor are readier at hand. We cannot, therefore, but believe that New York city is extreme in respect to this crime, with a saving clause in disfavor of Chicago. But though in the greater part of the country the proportion of fœticides to living births is not nearly so great as one in four, the facts are sufficiently atrocious. The enactment of rigorous laws against this crime, or the enforcement of those existing, would carry consternation into thousands of families whose heads are carried high. It is time that the press, the pulpit and the lawmakers should devote their most earnest efforts to wiping out the horrible practices which render the most enlightened country on the face of the earth no better than the barbarians of the South Seas.—Buff Courier.

Obituaries.

COLBY. Died, in Wolfborough, N. H., March 27th, 1870, of lung fever, Sister Sarah D., wife of Alphonzo G. Colby, aged fifty-six years and eight months.

Well may we adopt the language of an editor living near by, speaking of our sister, that she was a faithful wife and mother, a kind neighbor, a trusting christian, and a friend to the poor. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at the funeral, from Nahum 1: 7. J. G. SMITH.

DAVIS. Died, in Rumney, N. H., April 9th, 1870, of consumption, Clarissa, wife of Jacob Davis, formerly of Hudson, aged sixty-four years, six months, and sixteen days.

She calmly fell asleep in Jesus, just as the sun was sinking behind the western hills. She was baptized in 1833, and united with the Baptist church in this place. She was a consistent member till her death. For the last two or three years she has believed in the sleep of the dead, and of their resurrection at the appearing of Christ.

B. W. DAVIS.

SAMPSON. In Kingston, Mass., April 8th, 1870, of pneumonia, Sister Sally B., wife of Bro. Benjamin Sampson, aged sixty-five years.

Sister Sampson sweetly sleeps in Jesus. She went down with the blessed hope that her life was hid with Christ in God. While living she bore a faithful testimony for Jesus and the power of his resurrection, and was made an overcomer by the blood of the Lamb. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

GEO. A. BROWN.

ROGERS. Died, in South Windsor, Conn., April 15th, 1870, of consumption, Mrs. Mary Lucretia Rogers, wife of Albert Rogers, and daughter of Oliver Loomis, aged thirty-three years and five months.

The subject of this notice had for many years professed faith in Christ. We have hope in her death, that she will come forth again to life eternal, when He who is our life shall appear to resurrect the sleeping dead and give them immortality. Words of comfort were spoken by the pastor of the M. E. Church, to which she belonged.

MARDEN. Died, in Palermo, Me., of consumption, John F. Marden, aged twenty-nine years. He rests in hope. J. W. MARDEN.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

PARIS, April 20. The trial of Barbenet, director of Marseillaise, is concluded. His offence was the publication of a congratulatory address from the women of Lyons to the women of La Creuzot. He was convicted and sentenced to six months imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 4000 francs.

PARIS, April 20. The long threatened strikes have begun in earnest. The foundry men and molders, about 15,000 strong, struck to-day, as also the tailors. The house-painters are expected to strike to-morrow.

PARIS, April 20. The excitement on account of the Plebiscitum is increasing throughout the country, and the journals complain that it has had a bad effect on commerce. The vote will be taken on the Plebiscitum on May 8.

The sugar refiners and hat manufacturers have joined the strike.

In the Senate to-day the debate was continued on the Senatus Consultum. M. Ollivier wound up the discussion with a long and brilliant speech. Referring to the plebiscitum, he said that the government did not wish to extend the question; they only desired to submit certain liberal modifications to the people. They had no intention of submitting the principle on which the State was founded, and of converting the hereditary power into an elective empire, but the revolutionary party, obeying its evil passions, had given another complexion to the debate. If the revolutionary party wished to combat the Government, the Government would accept the challenge. If the desire was to take revolutionary grounds, the Government would follow and outstrip its enemies. M. Ollivier assured the Senate that whatever might be the result of the struggle, the government would not place itself on the track of reaction. He continued: "The Government and Emperor will remain where they now are, always generous liberal, and magnanimous. It is peculiar to the Emperor to be always advancing, never receding. The Government, in its work of conciliation, will always hold out its hands to honest men. Let them remember that Democracy and liberty are not incompatible with the Empire. The triumph through the Government will be for the sovereign glory complete and for the nation's security without a cloud." M. Ollivier said the Emperor still had alone the right to prepare the formula of the plebiscitum.

The debate then closed and the Senatus Consultum was adopted by the Senate.

LONDON, April 20. Later advices from the Argentine Republic contain more particulars of the frightful storm at Buenos Ayres on the 9th of March. The wind blew a hurricane, and the water flooded a great portion of the city; men and horses were drowned in the streets, and many people barely escaped with their lives; a great number of buildings were undermined, which subsequently were entirely destroyed by the weight of goods in them; ships were driven ashore and wrecked or sunk at their anchors; many sailors were drowned. The damage was immense.

PARIS, April 21. The Emperor, in his proclamation concerning the plebiscitum, gives a resume of the reforms introduced since 1860 up to the present moment, and dwells on the fortunate results to come from them, namely, the stability of the institutions and the easy transmission of power to the heir of the throne. The formula of the plebiscitum is brief and simple. The vote will be taken on the 8th of May, verified on the 10th, and officially announced on the 12th. Prince Napoleon left Paris before the recent debates in the Senate, because the Emperor desired that he would take no part in the discussion on the succession to the throne. He returns on Saturday.

BERLIN, April 22. The Chinese Embassy has arrived in this city. Russia has signed the Burlingame treaty and has agreed to a fair settlement of the frontier question. The Embassy will proceed to Brussels and Paris and then leave for home.

PARIS, April 20, 1870. The political excitement on account of the Plebiscitum is increasing throughout the country, and the journals complain that it has a bad effect on commerce.

PARIS, April 20, 1870. The Moniteur announces that the Journal Officiel will publish on Friday next a decree appointing the 8th of May as the day for taking the vote of the nation on the Plebiscitum, and limiting the voting to one day.

LONDON, April 21. Letters from Rome contradict the assertions recently that a minority would leave the Ecumenical Council if the infallibility proposition is pressed.

PARIS, April 22. It is announced to-day as certain that the French army, which never votes, will participate in the plebiscite on the 8th of May next.

LONDON, April 22. The Queen and Princess Alexandria to-day had a narrow escape from a collision with a runaway team with a heavy wagon attached.

VIENNA, April 23. There is a strong movement in the Tyrol for secession from the Romish church in case the question of infallibility is pressed upon the Council.

ROME, April 24. The third public sitting of the Ecumenical Council was held this morning. There was a magnificent assemblage. The Pope made his entrance at nine o'clock. Nearly all the benches were occupied by that time. Many of the Bishops, heretofore abstaining from the meetings, attended to-day. After the celebration of mass, the non-voting prelates withdrew.

The first four chapters of the Schema de fide, condemning rational philosophy and heterodoxy, were read aloud. The scrutatores collected the votes, which were all in the affirmative. The Pope from his throne then announced and sanctioned the decree of the Council. The proceedings were highly impressive.

DOMESTIC.

NEW YORK, April 19. It is stated that the officers of the Fenian army held a secret meeting yesterday, at which instructions were delivered to all relative to the projected raid on Canada. Major General Spear is to command the whole force. A large body of Fenians leave to-morrow night for some unknown point. Twenty thousand stand of arms have been received by the Fenians, part of them being distributed in Vermont, and a large number have recently been shipped from Chicago to a point near the Red river country. It is believed that a part of the Fenian programme is to assist the Winnipeg revolutionists, and also to make a raid on Montreal when the volunteers have been sent to the Red river country. A large number of prominent Fenians are in town to attend the Convention to-day.

PERSECUTION OF CHRISTIANS IN JAPAN.—The Shanghae News Letter of March 12th, says there had been 4200 Christians deported from Japan within a space of ten days only. The Princes who aided the Mikado in the war against the ex-Tycoon have been rewarded with vast territories in the island of Yesso, and hundreds of Christian families are banished to that quarter. The Japanese are anxious to populate and hold the island, and fearing a visitation of Russians in that region, they thus want to be beforehand in the occupancy.

ADULTERATION OF TEA.—The nefarious practice of adulterating tea, which has grown into a large business at Shanghae, has attracted the attention of the literati, who are engaged collecting information relative to the process, extent of its use and probable effects, with a view to setting forth the details in a memorial to be addressed to the Taoutai, praying its summary suppression. At last accounts they had obtained such facts bearing upon the matter, showing the unfavorable effects the practice must have upon the trade, and the serious consequences likely to ensue to the health of consumers, that it was anticipated an edict would now be issued prohibiting the business.

THE FAMINE IN JERUSALEM.—A letter has been received in London from the Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, which corroborates the statement made on this painful subject by Sir Moses Monteifiore. The Bishop in his letter says:

"A small donkey's load of water costs 6d to the poor Jews, whose family income is 1s 1d per week. Many Moslems and nominal Christians are in the same position. What is most dreadful to contemplate is the fact that the springs near Jerusalem are drying up. But there is another more terrible calamity still. The locusts are spread over the mountains of Judah and Samaria, in the valley of Jordan, and in the plain of Sharon and Galilee, having come to lay their eggs, which will be hatched before the harvest, and as the Arabs say that each couple lays two hundred eggs, countless millions will appear, eating every green thing, poisoning the ground, and thus preventing grass growing for the cattle."

Passing Events.

☞ The cholera rages fearfully on the coast of Zanzibar.

☞ Over one hundred young women are at present studying law in this country—many in the universities, but more in lawyers' offices, where they pay their tuition fees by writing.

☞ There are in the United States six hundred and fifty-nine Young Men's Christian Association with over 100,000 members.

☞ The journals of Italy make extensive extracts from those of the United States, and manifest great interest in American affairs.

☞ Four persons were killed by eating pork in which there were trichina, in Ballard county, Kentucky, last week.

☞ The Osservatore Romano, a Jesuit organ, publishes an article which represents the situation of the Italian kingdom under a most deplorable aspect. According to that journal "everything is going on from bad to worse."

☞ The largest salary in the Imperial household, namely, $10,000 a year, is received by Eugenie's hair dresser.

☞ Public opinion in Austria is disturbed at the growing anti-Prussian tendencies of South Germany, fearing that they will lead to another civil war.

☞ A French fleet had sailed from Hong Kong, China, at latest dates, to demand satisfaction for the murder of a French missionary by the Chinese at Szchuen. When last heard from, it was at the mouth of the Noonsung river.

☞ The number of working-women in Paris is computed at three hundred thousand. Thirty cents a day is the average pay they receive.

☞ The North German naval squadron, under the command of Prince Adalbert of Prussia, composed principally of iron-clads, received orders to continue its cruise as far as the Madeira. In accordance with a royal ordonnance, the experiments with torpedoes are to be resumed on a larger scale.

☞ The Romanist population of the French Empire is 36,800,664; the Protestant 1,501,150; thl Jewish 158,994.

☞ Prince Pierre Bonaparte will sail for America early in June. He intends to make the tour of the country, and to return early in September. He has no intention of quitting France, and has never been told to remain away from there.

☞ The famous fated peach orchard at Benton Harbor, Mich., has been visited for the fourth time, and about three hundred trees girdled.

☞ The Egyptian army has been reduced to 20,000 men, the number agreed upon with the Porte some years ago.

☞ The Austrian priesthood have been authorized by the Holy Father to take the oath of obedience to the civil power exacted by the constitution, provided that they add this clause—"Without prejudice to the laws of God and of the Church."

☞ The largest merchant steamship in the world, except the great Eastern, was launched on the Clyde a few days since. It is the Italy, to run from Liverpool to New York, and is 4200 tons measurement and 600 horse power.

☞ A ball of fire, about the size of half bushel measure, supposed to be a meteor, was seen moving along the ground near Bloomington, Ill., last Wednesday. It struck a small outbuilding and burst, completely demolishing the building.

☞ A Tripoli letter in Constantinople, March 23d, reports the fall of a monster ærolite in the neighborhood of Mourzouk, weighing, it is said, nearly 5,000 pounds. This must, of course, be only a rough guess, but if it be even tolerably approximate the mass is one of the largest meteoric bodies.

☞ In Dublin, March 31st, the detective police seized a large number of rifles and a quantity of ammunition packed in cases. The rifles and ammunition well made up. No arrests. The articles were found on board the Liverpool steamer on its arrival.

☞ At Strasbourg, in France, the garrison is now unusually strong, and much care is taken to make the demarkation line between the two countries—France and Germany—as little noticed as possible. France will put her foot over the other side of the Rhine presently.

☞ The plebiscite will give Napoleon Third a larger power with some classes in France than he now has, and will incite others strongly against him. It is the most dangerous step he could have taken to hint at it even. The Empire cannot afford to appeal to the people.

by ambassadors. Joseph only speaks by an interpreter, and sometimes speaks roughly. She cannot see Jesus face to face now; but at last he will come out of the ivory palaces, and she shall be caught up to meet him in the clouds. These eyes shall see him; these arms shall embrace him; these ears shall hear the music of his voice. O, it was sweet to hear him say, 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest'; but sweeter will it be to hear the joyful welcome from the throne, 'Come, ye blessed.' There will be an open declaration of his love to her before all worlds. The King will say to her from his throne, These are my jewels; this is my Bride. For her I lay in the manger; for her I hung upon the cross; for her I lay in the grave. In a day of power I espoused her to myself; I drew her with cords of love."—Pages 49, 50.

Correspondence.

From Bro. P. Tandy.

Dear Brn. and Srs. in Christ:—Let me, by the help of God, "stir up your pure minds by way of remembrance." The Lord saith, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." What has he commanded us to do? He saith, "Go work in my vineyard." Is there any work in the vineyard of the Lord for us to do? Yes, say you, enough of it, and but little time in which to do it. May we "come up to the help of the Lord against the mighty." We can do nothing without him. And while he is ready and willing to "work in us, to will and to do of his good pleasure," may we "work out our own salvation with fear and trembling." Is it not the duty of every christian to fear God and keep his commandments? Yes, the wise man saith this is man's whole duty. Now, are we fearing God and keeping his commandments? We are required to love God with all the heart, and our neighbor as ourself. Are we doing it, dear friends? Has the precious love of Christ the uppermost seat in our affections? Is he to us the chief among ten thousands, and the one altogether lovely? and do we do by others as we wish to be done by?

The Lord has commanded us to be "diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Are we as earnestly engaged for God and his most precious truth as we ought to be? It is as Bro. Thomson has said in the Crisis: "We cannot be consistent with our profession of faith, without being terribly in earnest." O, my dear brethren, sound the alarm.

"That awful day will surely come,
The appointed hour makes haste,
When we must stand before our Judge,
And pass the solemn test."

The Lord has promised to "make all things new." Yes, we are looking for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Seeing that we are looking for such things, "what manner of persons ought we to be in all holy conversation and godliness."

P. TANDY.

BRO. J. H. BULLARD writes from Chicago, March 25th, 1870:—"We are having lively meetings here now. The prayer-meetings are doing good. We have just started a mission on the north side, No. 40 Clybourn Avenue. Bro. Ramsay dedicated the place last Lord's day. We hope and pray that sinners may flock in and taste of the sweetness of the christian religion. We have prayer-meetings every Wednesday and Friday evenings. The Lord is working through us, and making our hearts glad. He is blessing us abundantly, and we hope, by his help, to bring many sinners into the fold of Christ. We are unfurling the blood-stained banner of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ; and we intend to hold it above our heads, that it may be seen by all around."

For the World's Crisis.

NEWS FROM ALL THE WORLD.

THE CATHOLICS AND THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The following is from a New York Times editorial:—

"Do we over-state the demands of the Roman Catholics? If annbody supposes so, let him listen to the expressions of opinion in the Catholic journals. The Tablet, a paper of authority among Catholics, said only last Saturday, in reference to a proposed compromise, 'No, gentlemen, that will not do, and there is no help but in dividing the public schools, or in abandoning the system of public schools altogether.' The Catholic Telegraph, of Cincinnati, has declared, 'It will be a glorious day for Catholics in this country when, under the blows of justice and morality, our school system will be shivered to pieces. Until then, modern Paganism will triumph.' The Freeman's Journal, Dec. 11, says: 'Let the public school system go to where it came from—the devil.' 'We ask,' says Bishop Lynch, of New Orleans, 'that the public schools be cleansed from this peace-destroying monstrosity—Bible reading." We cannot use the common schools, says Rev. Thomas Preston, 'because they answer not our end, nor satisfy our consciences.' We might multiply quotations to the same effect until we filled this column, but we apprehend that no Catholic will repudiate the sentiments compromised in the extracts already given.

'The Catholics,' such persons say, 'only want to do what they like with their own children.' The truth is they want to do much more than this. They want to break up the educational system which has cost so much labor and thought to construct, and which has already been productive of such great benefits to the whole country."

THE ŒCUMENICAL COUNCIL.

We take the extract ensuing from the N. Y. Express.

The Outside Pressure at Rome.—Great bodies move slowly. The Ecumenical Council is unquestionably a great body, and must not hence be expected to participate in the hurry which in these go-ahead days is characteristic of most other assemblages. Even if it has been over three months in session, and has not yet reached the all important question of the infallibility of the Pope—what then? Nothing, except that when the fathers are ready it will be promulgated, and not a moment before. What is known as "outside pressure" has no influence on this learned conclave. Its motions it is claimed, are the motions, not of men, but of the Holy Spirit—and as these cannot be subjected to worldly wishes, or worldly aspirations, the faithful must have patience, and bide their time.

Meanwhile, however, serious trouble is arising with the kingdom that is not of this world. The godless government of France is exhibiting an inclination to meddle with the deliberations of the Council, and if the inclination is not gratified it threatens to withdraw the French troops from Rome, and so leave the Holy Father to the uncovenanted mercies of the heathen "reds." At any rate, it is authoritatively announced that the representatives of several secondary Catholic Powers, among them Bavaria, Belgium and Portugal, have informed Cardinal Antonelli that their governments have entered into negotiations with the Cabinet of the Tuilleries to the effect that if a French Ambassador be sent to the Council, he will at the same time represent their respective interests. This crowd of outsiders naturally annoys the Pope, but the old gentleman bears up under it with characteristic complacency.

The Rome correspondent of the London Times writes:—

"The Bishops have been very clamorous lately for leave to go home by Easter, and make "holy oil" for the ensuing year. Pius IX. is equal to the emergency, and has issued a document to the effect that the remaining stock of holy oil is to be mixed with sufficient new oil to make a supply for the next year; and that the oil so mixed is to have the same virtue as if every particle of it had been consecrated. To uninitiated persons this looks a very sensible course to take under the circumstances, but a good many of the Bishops allege that the Pope cannot command a violation of the Ritual, decreed by successive Councils, without the consent of a Council. The very act of issuing such an order, they say, shows that Pius IX. is exalting himself above everything, superseding all authority, and dispensing with all obligation."

The following is a startling exhibition of the prevalence of

FŒTICIDE.

Dr. Hopkins, of Utica, publishes a statement giving most startling statistics of the growth and prevalence of this crime. The figures are well nigh unbelievable, but are vouched for as reliable. Taking New York city as an index of this country, the records show the increase of procured abortions to be alarmingly rapid, in spite of civilization and religion. In 1805, the ratio of fœtal deaths to the population was one to 1,633; but in 1849, one to 340; in 1856, one to ten, and now, one to four. This is a most terrible showing for the morals of the country, when we reflect that ante-natal infanticide is as clearly murder as the forcible extinction of a life which has taken visible form in the world. We cannot bring ourselves to believe that the metropolis is a fair index of the country. The crowded population there renders the rearing of children more difficult, and makes stronger the incentives to their premature destruction. Besides, crime segregates in great cities, and the proportion of bastard births, of which unfortunate women are ashamed, is far larger than elsewhere. The knowledge of the means of procuring abortions, also, is more generally diffused in centres of population, and the instrumentalities therefor are readier at hand. We cannot, therefore, but believe that New York city is extreme in respect to this crime, with a saving clause in disfavor of Chicago. But though in the greater part of the country the proportion of fœticides to living births is not nearly so great as one in four, the facts are sufficiently atrocious. The enactment of rigorous laws against this crime, or the enforcement of those existing, would carry consternation into thousands of families whose heads are carried high. It is time that the press, the pulpit and the lawmakers should devote their most earnest efforts to wiping out the horrible practices which render the most enlightened country on the face of the earth no better than the barbarians of the South Seas.—Buff Courier.

Obituaries.

COLBY. Died, in Wolfborough, N. H., March 27th, 1870, of lung fever, Sister Sarah D., wife of Alphonzo G. Colby, aged fifty-six years and eight months.

Well may we adopt the language of an editor living near by, speaking of our sister, that she was a faithful wife and mother, a kind neighbor, a trusting christian, and a friend to the poor. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at the funeral, from Nahum 1: 7. J. G. SMITH.

DAVIS. Died, in Rumney, N. H., April 9th, 1870, of consumption, Clarissa, wife of Jacob Davis, formerly of Hudson, aged sixty-four years, six months, and sixteen days.

She calmly fell asleep in Jesus, just as the sun was sinking behind the western hills. She was baptized in 1833, and united with the Baptist church in this place. She was a consistent member till her death. For the last two or three years she has believed in the sleep of the dead, and of their resurrection at the appearing of Christ.

B. W. DAVIS.

SAMPSON. In Kingston, Mass., April 8th, 1870, of pneumonia, Sister Sally B., wife of Bro. Benjamin Sampson, aged sixty-five years.

Sister Sampson sweetly sleeps in Jesus. She went down with the blessed hope that her life was hid with Christ in God. While living she bore a faithful testimony for Jesus and the power of his resurrection, and was made an overcomer by the blood of the Lamb. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from Rev. 14: 13.

GEO. A. BROWN.

ROGERS. Died, in South Windsor, Conn., April 15th, 1870, of consumption, Mrs. Mary Lucretia Rogers, wife of Albert Rogers, and daughter of Oliver Loomis, aged thirty-three years and five months.

The subject of this notice had for many years professed faith in Christ. We have hope in her death, that she will come forth again to life eternal, when He who is our life shall appear to resurrect the sleeping dead and give them immortality.

Words of comfort were spoken by the pastor of the M. E. Church, to which she belonged.

M. A. LOOMIS.

MARDEN. Died, in Palermo, Me., of consumption, John F. Marden, aged twenty-nine years. He rests in hope. J. W. MARDEN.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

PARIS, April 20. The trial of Barbenet, director of Marseillaise, is concluded. His offence was the publication of a congratulatory address from the women of Lyons to the women of La Creuzot. He was convicted and sentenced to six months imprisonment, and to pay a fine of 4000 francs.

PARIS, April 20. The long threatened strikes have begun in earnest. The foundry men and molders, about 15,000 strong, struck to-day, as also the tailors. The house-painters are expected to strike to-morrow.

PARIS, April 20. The excitement on account of the Plebiscitum is increasing throughout the country, and the journals complain that it has had a bad effect on commerce. The vote will be taken on the Plebiscitum on May 8.

The sugar refiners and hat manufacturers have joined the strike.

In the Senate to-day the debate was continued on the Senatus Consultum. M. Ollivier wound up the discussion with a long and brilliant speech. Referring to the plebiscitum, he said that the government did not wish to extend the question; they only desired to submit certain liberal modifications to the people. They had no intention of submitting the principle on which the State was founded, and of converting the hereditary power into an elective empire, but the revolutionary party, obeying its evil passions, had given another complexion to the debate. If the revolutionary party wished to combat the Government, the Government would accept the challenge. If the desire was to take revolutionary grounds, the Government would follow and outstrip its enemies. M. Ollivier assured the Senate that whatever might be the result of the struggle, the government would not place itself on the track of reaction. He continued: "The Government and Emperor will remain where they now are, always generous liberal, and magnanimous. It is peculiar to the Emperor to be always advancing, never receding. The Government, in its work of conciliation, will always hold out its hands to honest men. Let them remember that Democracy and liberty are not incompatible with the Empire. The triumph through the Government will be for the sovereign glory complete and for the nation's security without a cloud." M. Ollivier said the Emperor still had alone the right to prepare the formula of the plebiscitum.

The debate then closed and the Senatus Consultum was adopted by the Senate.

LONDON, April 20. Later advices from the Argentine Republic contain more particulars of the frightful storm at Buenos Ayres on the 9th of March. The wind blew a hurricane, and the water flooded a great portion of the city; men and horses were drowned in the streets, and many people barely escaped with their lives; a great number of buildings were undermined, which subsequently were entirely destroyed by the weight of goods in them; ships were driven ashore and wrecked or sunk at their anchors; many sailors were drowned. The damage was immense.

PARIS, April 21. The Emperor, in his proclamation concerning the plebiscitum, gives a resume of the reforms introduced since 1860 up to the present moment, and dwells on the fortunate results to come from them, namely, the stability of the institutions and the easy transmission of power to the heir of the throne. The formula of the plebiscitum is brief and simple. The vote will be taken on the 8th of May, verified on the 10th, and officially announced on the 12th. Prince Napoleon left Paris before the recent debates in the Senate, because the Emperor desired that he would take no part in the discussion on the succession to the throne. He returns on Saturday.

BERLIN, April 22. The Chinese Embassy has arrived in this city. Russia has signed the Burlingame treaty and has agreed to a fair settlement of the frontier question. The Embassy will proceed to Brussels and Paris and then leave for home.

PARIS, April 20, 1870. The political excitement on account of the Plebiscitum is increasing throughout the country, and the journals complain that it has a bad effect on commerce.

PARIS, April 20, 1870. The Moniteur announces that the Journal Officiel will publish on Friday next a decree appointing the 8th of May as the day for taking the vote of the nation on the Plebiscitum, and limiting the voting to one day.

LONDON, April 21. Letters from Rome contradict the assertions recently that a minority would leave the Ecumenical Council if the infallibility proposition is pressed.

PARIS, April 22. It is announced to-day as certain that the French army, which never votes, will participate in the plebiscite on the 8th of May next.

LONDON, April 22. The Queen and Princess Alexandria to-day had a narrow escape from a collision with a runaway team with a heavy wagon attached.

VIENNA, April 23. There is a strong movement in the Tyrol for secession from the Romish church in case the question of infallibility is pressed upon the Council.

ROME, April 24. The third public sitting of the Ecumenical Council was held this morning. There was a magnificent assemblage. The Pope made his entrance at nine o'clock. Nearly all the benches were occupied by that time. Many of the Bishops, heretofore abstaining from the meetings, attended to-day. After the celebration of mass, the non-voting prelates withdrew.

The first four chapters of the Schema de fide, condemning rational philosophy and heterodoxy, were read aloud. The scrutatores collected the votes, which were all in the affirmative. The Pope from his throne then announced and sanctioned the decree of the Council. The proceedings were highly impressive.

DOMESTIC.

New York, April 19. It is stated that the officers of the Fenian army held a secret meeting yesterday, at which instructions were delivered to all relative to the projected raid on Canada. Major General Spear is to command the whole force. A large body of Fenians leave to-morrow night for some unknown point. Twenty thousand stand of arms have been received by the Fenians, part of them being distributed in Vermont, and a large number have recently been shipped from Chicago to a point near the Red river country. It is believed that a part of the Fenian programme is to assist the Winnipeg revolutionists, and also to make a raid on Montreal when the volunteers have been sent to the Red river country. A large number of prominent Fenians are in town to attend the Convention to-day.

PERSECUTION OF CHRISTIANS IN JAPAN.—The Shanghae News Letter of March 12th, says there had been 4200 Christians deported from Japan within a space of ten days only. The Princes who aided the Mikado in the war against the ex-Tycoon have been rewarded with vast territories in the island of Yesso, and hundreds of Christian families are banished to that quarter. The Japanese are anxious to populate and hold the island, and fearing a visitation of Russians in that region, they thus want to be beforehand in the occupancy.

ADULTERATION OF TEA.—The nefarious practice of adulterating tea, which has grown into a large business at Shanghae, has attracted the attention of the literati, who are engaged collecting information relative to the process, extent of its use and probable effects, with a view to setting forth the details in a memorial to be addressed to the Taoutai, praying its summary suppression. At last accounts they had obtained such facts bearing upon the matter, showing the unfavorable effects the practice must have upon the trade, and the serious consequences likely to ensue to the health of consumers, that it was anticipated an edict would now be issued prohibiting the business.

THE FAMINE IN JERUSALEM.—A letter has been received in London from the Anglican Bishop of Jerusalem, which corroborates the statement made on this painful subject by Sir Moses Monteifiore. The Bishop in his letter says:

"A small donkey's load of water costs 6d to the poor Jews, whose family income is 1s 1d per week. Many Moslems and nominal Christians are in the same position. What is most dreadful to contemplate is the fact that the springs near Jerusalem are drying up. But there is another more terrible calamity still. The locusts are spread over the mountains of Judah and Samaria, in the valley of Jordan, and in the plain of Sharon and Galilee, having come to lay their eggs, which will be hatched before the harvest, and as the Arabs say that each couple lays two hundred eggs, countless millions will appear, eating every green thing, poisoning the ground, and thus preventing grass growing for the cattle."

Passing Events.

☞ The cholera rages fearfully on the coast of Zanzibar.

☞ Over one hundred young women are at present studying law in this country—many in the universities, but more in lawyers' offices, where they pay their tuition fees by writing.

☞ There are in the United States six hundred and fifty-nine Young Men's Christian Association with over 100,000 members.

☞ The journals of Italy make extensive extracts from those of the United States, and manifest great interest in American affairs.

☞ Four persons were killed by eating pork in which there were trichina, in Ballard county, Kentucky, last week.

☞ The Osservatore Romano, a Jesuit organ, publishes an article which represents the situation of the Italian kingdom under a most deplorable aspect. According to that journal "everything is going on from from bad to worse."

☞ The largest salary in the Imperial household, namely, $10,000 a year, is received by Eugenie's hair dresser.

☞ Public opinion in Austria is disturbed at the growing anti-Prussian tendencies of South Germany, fearing that they will lead to another civil war.

☞ A French fleet had sailed from Hong Kong, China, at latest dates, to demand satisfaction for the murder of a French missionary by the Chinese at Szchuen. When last heard from, it was at the mouth of the Noonsung river.

☞ The number of working-women in Paris is computed at three hundred thousand. Thirty cents a day is the average pay they receive.

☞ The North German naval squadron, under the command of Prince Adalbert of Prussia, composed principally of iron-clads, received orders to continue its cruise as far as the Madeira. In accordance with a royal ordonnance, the experiments with torpedoes are to be resumed on a larger scale.

☞ The Romanist population of the French Empire is 36,800,664; the Protestant 1,501,150; thl Jewish 158,994.

☞ Prince Pierre Bonaparte will sail for America early in June. He intends to make the tour of the country, and to return early in September. He has no intention of quitting France, and has never been told to remain away from there.

☞ The famous fated peach orchard at Benton Harbor, Mich., has been visited for the fourth time, and about three hundred trees girdled.

☞ The Egyptian army has been reduced to 20,000 men, the number agreed upon with the Porte some years ago.

☞ The Austrian priesthood have been authorized by the Holy Father to take the oath of obedience to the civil power exacted by the constitution, provided that they add this clause—"Without prejudice to the laws of God and of the Church."

☞ The largest merchant steamship in the world, except the great Eastern, was launched on the Clyde a few days since. It is the Italy, to run from Liverpool to New York, and is 4200 tons measurement and 600 horse power.

☞ A ball of fire, about the size of half bushel measure, supposed to be a meteor, was seen moving along the ground near Bloomington, Ill., last Wednesday. It struck a small outbuilding and burst, completely demolishing the building.

☞ A Tripoli letter in Constantinople, March 23d, reports the fall of a monster aerolite in the neighborhood of Mourzouk, weighing, it is said, nearly 5,000 pounds. This must, of course, be only a rough guess, but if it be even tolerably approximate the mass is one of the largest meteoric bodies.

☞ In Dublin, March 31st, the detective police seized a large number of rifles and a quantity of ammunition packed in cases. The rifles and ammunition well made up. No arrests. The articles were found on board the Liverpool steamer on its arrival.

☞ At Strasbourg, in France, the garrison is now unusually strong, and much care is taken to make the demarkation line between the two countries—France and Germany—as little noticed as possible. France will put her foot over the other side of the Rhine presently.

☞ The plebiscite will give Napoleon Third a larger power with some classes in France than he now has, and will incite others strongly against him. It is the most dangerous step he could have taken to hint at it even. The Empire cannot afford to appeal to the people.

Evening Hours.

BY

E. P. WOODWARD.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11:6.

GOOD BOOKS.—No. 2.

The class of books to read or study being settled, and the particular books of that class being selected, there are some other considerations which sometimes have much to do with their actual value. There are many books offered to the public at low figures, thus being placed within the reach of those who would not otherwise buy them, but which are really worthless than nothing. Still, because of the title they bear, they are purchased and referred to as authority on the subjects of which they treat. But one had better throw them away, and invest double the money in another edition. So then, the "edition" is an important item, and not to be forgotten. By "another edition" is meant not a subsequent publication of the same work by the same publisher, with no additions or alterations, but, either a subsequent publication with such additions or alterations, or by a different publisher with or without any change.

Some editions are defective typographically, perhaps containing errors apparently slight, yet producing a great difference in the end. Some are printed on poor paper, with poor ink, and perhaps old-fashioned type, requiring a constant effort to read them. The contents may be the same, but the "mining" process is more expensive. They require larger outlays for the same returns.

In translations, attention must be given as to who is the translator. Some translations are very literal, and are valuable especially in a critical point of view, yet perhaps failing to give the common reader an insight into the genius and spirit of the author. Others are more properly paraphrases, using the literal sense as the foundation, and building thereon a symmetrical structure, composed largely sometimes of the translator's individual views and impressions respecting the meaning of the author, and the inferences to be drawn therefrom. These are generally very plain, but very likely to be deficient in accuracy and truth. Others, though claiming to be literal, are positively defective in accuracy, either from ignorance or inadvertance. Others are intentionally changed, generally to suit some preconceived notion of the author's meaning, or to strengthen some favorite theory by the addition of his name. And others make faithful, honest, earnest endeavors to give the reader the exact meaning of the author, irrespective of their views in the matter, or the particular style in which that meaning is expressed. But as all translations are liable to be faulty, it will not do to quote from them to prove a contested point, where such proof arises from the meaning or use of any particular word or phrase, unless we have first satisfied ourselves that such word or phrase is beyond all doubt correctly translated.

As a rule, other things being equal, modern translations are more likely to be correct than older ones. Much light is being, and has been received respecting the meaning and use of words, the force of obscure allusions, and the pertinency of references to events and persons and places; and thus not unfrequently a new significance is given to a passage previously dark. This light is apt to modify the style of expression in the translation.

Then the notes of editors, compilers and translators make an important item in determining the best edition. Some notes are valuable for accuracy, completeness, point and plainness. Some, simply as records of the writer's opinion in the matter. Some editions with notes, command very high prices; others, without notes, are sold for a nominal price; frequently the first is the cheapest.

Some editions are expurgated,—certain doctrines or facts obnoxious to some person, or sect, or party, are omitted, and no mention made of the omission. This is done more frequently than is generally supposed. And if the omitted portions of all expurgated works were to-day restored, there would be made some startling discoveries. Martin Luther's pen has been practically silenced on some points by this means. Sometimes this thing is carried to the extent of inserting in the place of these omissions, and even elsewhere, words that express the exact opposite of what the author meant. So that the fact of a volume bearing the title "Luther's Works," is no proof at all that we shall find in it his real opinions on all the subjects mentioned there. Interpolations are sometimes made with a similar view.

These features of omission, alteration and interpolation, except with the author's consent, must certainly be considered as a species of "pious fraud." There are many arguments on the other side, but it is very questionable as to the right of one man to publish over another's name, that which he not only did not believe, but most positively and earnestly opposed. What should we think of the Catholic Church publishing Luther's works, and so altering the phraseology that he would pass for a "good Catholic"? Yet this is done, in a measure, by probably all sects and parties. And as men will undoubtedly continue to do so, we can only guard against it by purchasing editions that are unchanged, and being careful not to quote any author in support of a theory or an assertion, unless we are very sure it was his opinion, and not that of some one else.

In some books, which have been many times printed from the same plates, the older copies, even though on poor paper, are preferable, having been printed before the plates became marred and worn. In such cases, the binding on the copies printed from the worn plates, is especially good, making it really a more salable book than its more perfect predecessor. But those who prefer worth to looks, will remember this fact.

A CHANGE.

A Methodist minister informs me that several leading men among the ministers of that church, have come to believe in the unconscious state of the dead. Although holding that the life of the soul remains to the resurrection, yet looking upon death as a sleep, so deep and dreamless, that none but Christ can break the slumber; so that, were He to forget His promise, and leave them in the grave, that sleep would be to all intents and purposes, "Annihilation." Thus the church of God is being led to look unto Him who has said, "I am the Way, the Truth, and the LIFE."

For the World's Crisis.

THE TREE OF LIFE.

What was it originally created for? Some theologians conjecture that it was only designed to perpetuate life, not to impart a deathless nature; and that Adam had eaten of it previous to his fall. The inspired record cannot be made to harmonize with such a notion. That Adam had not eaten of the tree of life before his fall is positive, from the significant language uttered by the Lord himself after Adam had eaten of the forbidden fruit: "And now, lest he put forth his hand, and take ALSO of the tree of life, and eat, and live forever; therefore the Lord God sent him forth from the garden of Eden." Gen. 3: 22, 23. That word "also," contrasting the actual eating of the forbidden fruit with the apprehended eating of the tree of life, indicates that Adam had not eaten of life's tree. God did not send Adam from the garden lest he continue to eat from the tree of life, but lest he eat "ALSO" of it, just as he had eaten of the forbidden tree. If access to the tree of life after the fall would have enabled man to "live forever," the same result would have followed had he eaten before the fall. "Eat and live forever," cannot be changed to signify continue to eat, and thus perpetuate life forever. It is to assume a point without proof, and contrary to the sentiment of the text, to assert that Adam must eat forever in order to live forever. We have no intimation that Adam ate of the forbidden tree but once; and with this thought in mind, let us carefully look at the language before quoted: "Now, lest he put forth his hand [one act], and take [one act] ALSO of the tree of life"—just as he had of the forbidden tree—"and eat [one act] and live forever." The simple truth here contained is:

1. Adam had never eaten of the tree of life previous to the fall, else the language—"Take also of the tree of life," is meaningless.

2. If Adam could have been permitted simply to "put forth his hand," "take," and "eat" of the tree of life after the fall, it would have enabled him to "LIVE FOREVER"; and if this deathless state could have been obtained by this one act subsequent to the fall, it would have produced the same result had he eaten before the fall, thus making two reasons for concluding that Adam never ate of life's tree.

3. There is not even an intimation that in order for man to "live forever" he must continue to eat of the tree of life daily, weekly, monthly, or yearly, or more or less frequently, to perpetuate life forever. This is all assumption. The record contains no other thought than that once eating would make man "live forever."

The question may be asked, What need of restoring the tree of life, if this was its primary design? I might as consistently ask, Why shall we "eat bread in the kingdom of God," seeing its primary use was to prolong life? It will not be needed for this purpose in the kingdom, any more than the tree of life, to make men "live forever"; yet both will be there. In return, I ask the questioner, If the primary design of the tree of life was simply to perpetuate life, what need of its restoration in the world to come, of whose inhabitants the Savior says, "Neither can they die any more"? This deathless state will be obtained "in a moment," at the "last trump," when "this mortal shall put on immortality," and our bodies "fashioned like Christ's glorious body." WM. SHELDON.

HOPE.

That pilgrim, who attempts to journey through this world without hope in God, will find not only a long, dreary, and rugged pathway, but arrive at the end, only to be disappointed, and sorrow "even as those that have no hope." What is hope? It is something more than a wish or desire. It approximates to an expectation. "He wished, but not with hope."—Milton.

Hope is an innate, active, and prominent quality of the mind. It is the mainspring in the christian's cheerful, upward way, around which all that we love and desire cluster, as flowers cluster around the stalk that bears them. "The hope of the hypocrite shall perish." "And the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people." Joel 3: 16. He will be their defence. Such a hope will be sufficient to keep the happy possessor. May we live not as those "having no hope, and without God in the world," but "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Hope is a "strong consolation," "an anchor to the soul."

The hope of the world is a golden chain leading to honor and wealth, which, when possessed, gives no real or lasting satisfaction. The hope of the christian is salvation consummated in heaven. If you will take a Concordance of the Bible, and refer to every passage where the word hope is found, you will be likely to be impressed with the necessity of possessing the hope of the gospel. "Happy is he that hath the God of Jacob for his help, whose hope is in the Lord his God."—Ps. 146: 5. A. L. ADAMS.

NOTES BY THE WAY.

Left S. Tuesday morning on Nahum's chariots, and arrived in M., the great metropolis of the dominion of C., at three o'clock next morning. I began to think that Bunyan's old-fashioned way would be the best. Stopped at the depot, made my mush, ate my breakfast, and went into the highways and hedges to invite out the poor to the gospel feast. I met plenty of Mr. Smooth-it-aways. I found there was a great revival going on in the M. E. church on St. James St., under the labors of two ministers from the south. I attended in the evening, in the basement of the temple, where they sold their fruities, and it looked to me like a place of merchandise, rather than a house of God. A minister was preaching a very interesting discourse on the building of Noah's ark. He said there were some that called him crazy in his day. I assented to that truth in the old-fashioned Methodist way, when I was called crazy, and cast out of the synagogue, as was one the next evening for asking the priest where the window was in the ark.

I asked if any of these good brethren could lodge a stranger over night, or give me a quarter to hire my lodging at the tavern? No one consented. I went directly to the House of Refuge, when the superintendent sent me to St. Andrews' Home. That superintendent told me he could not keep me, for I was not a Scotchman. I answered that the Scriptures said, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers." He went back with me to the House of Refuge, and with much difficulty got me in for the night. I was directed down a dark flight of stairs, to where they lie on their couches, smoking their pipes. As I sat musing on an old bench, locked in like Paul and Barnabas, only not in the stocks, but I thought a worse kind of stalks, I heard an old man say, "Go and get your tick under the stairs, before the light is blown out." I thought it was a ticket office, where I could get a ticket for my berth; but instead of that, it was an old straw tick. I lugged it along, but had no quilt to cover me. I had got to stand it. I was tempted not to be a missionary any more, but go back to my pilgrim home in C.; but I remembered Lot's wife, and started in the morning, after giving my name and age to the superintendent, to the regions beyond. I went singing my old pilgrim's song. O, I am happier than the idle hireling. I find many Apollyons to fight on the way. My weapons are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strong holds of Satan. H. McCLARY, Home Missionary.

MY CROSS.

It is not heavy, agonizing woe,
Bearing me down with hopeless, crushing weight,
No ray of comfort in the gathering gloom,
A heart bereaved, a household desolate.

It is not sickness, with its withering hand,
Keeping me low upon a couch of pain;
Longing each morning for the weary night—
At night for weary day to come again.

It is not slander, with her evil tongue,
'Tis no presumptuous sin against my God,
Not reputation lost, nor friends betrayed,—
That is not my cross I thank my God.

Mine is a daily cross of petty cares,
Of little duties pressing on my heart,
Of little troubles hard to reconcile,
Of inward struggles—overcome in part.

My feet are weary in their daily round,
My heart is weary of its daily care,
My sinful nature often doth rebel;
I pray for grace my daily cross to bear.

It is not heavy, Lord, yet oft I pine;
It is not heavy, but 'tis everywhere,
By day and night each hour my cross I bear;
I dare not lay it down—Thou keep'st it there.

I dare not lay it down. I only ask
That, taking up my daily cross, I may
Follow my Master humbly, step by step,
Through clouds and darkness unto perfect day.

RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

— Some characters in the Bible are printed with a single stroke. Enoch, the staunch old patriarch who walked with God; Caleb the faithful, "who followed the Lord fully;" Dorcas, who made the needle sacred; Onesiphorus, the model gentleman, who oft refreshed Paul, "and was not ashamed of his chain;" Demas, the deserter from duty—all these and many others owe peculiar immortality to a mere line or two of holy writ.

— In a religious excitement in Boston, a person met a neighbor who took him by the hand and said: "I have become a christian." "I am glad of it," he replied. "Suppose we now have a settlement of that little account between us. Pay me what thou owest." "No," said the new born child, turning on his heel; "religion is religion, and business is business."

— The Northern reports a great revival in Corn Hill, N. Y., where, in the M. E. Church, the membership has advanced from about one hundred and forty to nearly two hundred, with almost daily accessions.

— It is said that the authorship of "Janus," the book against papal infallibility, which the pope has put on the Index, is still unknown, although it is believed to have been finally edited by Prof. J. N. Huber, of Munich. Whether Dr. Dollinger was its main author is doubted.

— The Roman Catholics have established a Foundling Asylum in New York, and hang a basket in the vestibule to receive infants which their parents wish to desert. Each week thirty or forty are received. Of the 302 children found in the basket during less than a year, 105 have died, 38 were in the asylum at the last report, and 168 were out nursing. Thus far, $20,000 have been collected for it; but the State is to be asked to give aid.

— A French Catholic priest in Hayti has recently become converted to Protestantism, and on the 20th of March, he preached, for the first time, in the American Protestant Episcopal Church of Port-au-Prince. A large crowd attended to hear him give an account of his conversion.

— At one of the ragged schools in Ireland a clergyman asked the question: "What is holiness?" A poor Irish convert, in dirty, tattered rags jumped up and said: "Plase your riverence, it's to be clane inside."

— There are over three hundred Jewish congregations in the United States.

— Beecher says the thirteenth chapter of first Corinthians is the most perfect description of a gentleman that was ever written or thought of.

— Of the four millions of persons of African descent in the United States, it is estimated that fully six hundred thousand are professors of religion and members of Protestant churches.

— In China there are now about six thousand native Christians.

— It has lately been demonstrated, statistically, that drunkenness has assumed painful prominence among the working-women of France. In some of the manufacturing cities there are wine-shops devoted exclusively to the accommodation of women. They are not more respectable in character than those which men enter.

— A fashionable clergyman in Chicago warns the sinners of his congregation, that if they don't repent, they will go to the "place of eternal uneasiness."

— The churches in the United States give less than twenty-five cents per member yearly toward the conversion of the heathen world, while the native churches in Asia give more than one dollar per member yearly for the same purpose.

— Christian pastors in France give religious tea-parties, where religious subjects and religious experiences are spoken of with a familiarity that makes the evenings pleasant and refreshing. The entertainment is nothing more than a cup of tea, and biscuit.

"THOU, GOD, SEEST ME."—The following incident is related of the late Gen. O. M. Mitchell: While making some astronomical observations with a powerful telescope, he one evening brought into his vision some fine fruit trees, full seven miles from where his instrument was placed. In looking through his telescope he saw with perfect clearness some boys approach the trees, make their dispositions, and then proceed to steal the fruit—the professor watching every movement, and seeing each one of the actors with perfect distinctness. Mitchell used to tell this anecdote with much feeling, saying that while he watched the little thieves, who supposed they were unobserved, the words kept ringing in his ears, "Thou, God, seest me." He often related this incident to his friends, and made a fine religious improvement upon it.

HOW TO SECURE A REVIVAL.

Three things are necessary to secure a revival of religion, thorough and pervading. Where these conditions have been found, God has never long withheld the influence of his converting spirit.

First, in order to secure the gift of the Holy Spirit, we must mean what we say when we ask for it. President Edwards, in one of his "resolutions," written when he was a youth of eighteen, records his purpose "never to consider that a prayer, or any part of a prayer, which God will not regard as a prayer." Does not such a test search terribly our ordinary supplications? Not a day passes that the request does not go from the lips of thousands of christians the land over, for the outpouring of the Spirit. Every week that petition is uttered in thousands of churches, and prayer-meetings. But how many of these utterances has God regarded as prayers? How many such petitions have fallen, christian readers, from every one of our lips, as unconsciously and unmeaningly as the breath that bore them into the air? The trouble is, we did not desire the gift of the Holy Spirit. We did not think what our words meant when we asked it. We should have been disturbed and troubled if God had heard us. We were not at heart willing to be what the Holy Spirit would make us, or to do what he would have us do.

The first step toward securing that great gift for our churches or our communites, is to desire it from our hearts, knowing what it means, and to pray for it out of the depth of our souls, as the one thing which we must have, and which we know God will not withhold from those who ask it.

In the second place, we must take out of the way at once all hindrances to the work of God's Spirit so far as in us lies.

Not that we need to go through any long course of preparation; the way of the Lord is made plain very soon, when each christian does his own work in his own heart and in his own house. Nor does God wait till every individual believer in a community is ready. He works sometimes by a few. But if we would secure the blessing of his quickening spirit we must see to it that we do not in any manner hinder his work. We are sometimes in danger of limiting God by setting up some preconceived pattern of working, and fixing our thoughts and hopes on that exclusively. God's Spirit is a free spirit. He never exactly repeats his methods. No two revivals are exactly alike. Nothing is more wonderful than the diversity of his operation, especially when we look over the history of fifty or a hundred years. We must be careful not to prejudge his work, or insist even in our thought that it shall be like the work of grace in which we were converted. We must ask him only to come as he pleases, in his own power, by his own wisdom, and save souls by what and by whom he will.

Still more carefully must we take out of the way all our heart sins, all grudges and jealousies; all censoriousness; all unforgiveness, and every temper, spirit and act of wrong that has grieved the Holy Spirit. Such hindrances bar God's grace from many hearts and churches. We can, if we are in earnest, make short work with those lurking sins. We must confess them, and cast them out utterly before God can come in to bless us. Then, when we bow in a broken spirit, will he create in us a clean heart and a right spirit. Then will he restore to us the joy of his salvation. We shall teach transgressors his ways, and sinners shall be converted unto him.

One thing more is necessary to secure that great gift, the quickening and converting Spirit of God. We must begin at once to invite and persuade individual men to Christ.

If it is really our heart's desire and prayer that men should be saved, we need not wait a moment, but begin to-day and tell them of our Savior. This is our work, and if we do it, God's work will not fail us. Where one man is unwilling to be addressed upon personal religion, ten men are waiting, and many often longing, for a word of genuine christian love. —Ex.

A FRAGMENT.

In Luke 20: 37, 38, we read as follows: "Now that the dead are raised, even Moses showed at the bush, when he calleth the Lord the God of Abraham, and the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. For he is not a God of the dead, but of the living; for all live unto him." With considerable ingenuity, modern "philosophy" has moulded the foregoing text into the following neat syllogistic form: God is not a God of the dead, but of the living; but he is the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; ergo, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob are living. For the benefit of those who consider the foregoing "sound logic," we will briefly consider a parallel case. The devil testified that Christ was the Son of God (Mark 5: 7; Luke 4: 34); but the devil "is a liar and the father of it," and "there is no truth in him (John 8: 44); ergo, his testimony is false. Will any orthodox christian accept the position? M. McOMBER.

GOD'S CHOSEN ONES.

"Hearken, my beloved brethren, hath not God chosen the poor of this world, rich in faith, and heirs of the kingdom which he hath prepared for them that love him?"—JAS. 2: 5.

While conversing a few days since with a lady friend in regard to our faith and hope, urging upon her the claims of the gospel, she met my arguments on this wise: that the great objection she had to those who are looking for the speedy coming of Jesus, was, that they were always gathering into their ranks the poor, low class of people, with whom other churches would not associate; consequently, it left a sort of stigma on the whole body. While listening to her objections, the above declaration of the inspired penman came most forcibly to mind, and I quoted it for her edification and profit.

Objection No. 2. She wondered why it was that the rich and talented so seldom embraced our faith. We could do no better than let Paul answer her question; so turning to the first chapter of 1st Cor., commencing at the 26th verse, I read: "For ye see your calling, brethren, how that not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the . . . weak things of the world, to confound the things which are mighty, and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are." Please tell us why God hath chosen these poor, weak, despised things? For the best of all reasons, namely, "that no flesh should glory in his presence." I then directed her attention to numerous incidents in the life of the Savior, his special care for the poor and needy, his loving ministrations to the sick and afflicted, also his choosing the twelve apostles from among the lowly ones, thereby exalting them to what we believe the greatest earthly honor, that of preaching the gospel of the Son of God.

In referring back to the second and third verses of the second chapter of James, we find that these aristocratic notions, so prevalent in this day and age of the world, had crept into the church even in the apostle's day, and we hear him rebuking his brethren for their partiality towards those who came into their assemblies decked in gold and costly apparel. Methinks were the blessed Master to enter some of the fashionable churches of this nineteenth century, he would need something more than a scourge of small cords to drive out the money changers. But it is not our province to deal with such. "The Lord knoweth them that are his," and we are glad to-day that God is no respecter of persons, but that he "so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." THE SKELETON.

Fifty years ago, the London Morning Chronicle published a poem, entitled "Lines on a Skeleton," which excited much attention. Every effort, even to the offering of fifty guineas, was vainly made to discover the author. All that ever transpired was that the poem, in a fair clerkly hand, was found near a skeleton, of remarkable beauty of form and color, in the Museum of the Royal College of Surgeons, Lincoln's Inn, London; and that the curator of the Museum had sent them to Mr. Perry, editor and proprietor of the Morning Chronicle. THE SKELETON.

Behold this ruin! 'twas a skull,
Once of ethereal spirit full;
This narrow cell was life's retreat,
This space was thought's mysterious seat.
What beauteous visions filled this spot!
What dreams of pleasure long forgot!
Nor hope, nor joy, nor love, nor fear,
Have left one trace of record here.

Beneath this mouldering canopy,
Once shone the bright and busy eye;
But start not at the dismal void—
If social love that eye employed;
If with no lawless fire it gleamed,
But through the dew of kindness beamed,
That eye shall be forever bright,
When stars and suns are sunk in night.

Within this hollow cavern hung
The ready, swift, and tuneful tongue.
If falsehood's honey it disdained,
And where it could not praise was chained,
If bold in virtue's cause it spoke,
Yet gentle concord never broke,
This silent tongue shall plead for thee
When time unveils eternity.

Say, did these fingers delve the mine?
Or with its envied rubies shine?
To hew the rock, or wear the gem,
Can little now avail to them.
But if the page of truth they sought,
Or comfort to the mourner brought,
The hands a richer meed shall claim
Than all that wait on wealth or fame.

Avails, whether bare or shod,
These feet the paths of duty trod?
If from the halls of ease they fled,
To seek affliction's humble shed;
If grandeur's guilty bribe they spurned,
And home to virtue's cot returned,
These feet with angel's wings shall vie,
And tread the palace of the sky.

SPEAK MORE OF JESUS.

How sad it is that, when christians congregate together, whether it be at the table, or elsewhere, there is so little talk of the Lord, and so little inqury about his truth. We are ever ready to talk of our sect, our church, our pastor, our success, our meetings, our enterprises, etc.; but, oh! how seldom we sit down quietly to talk of JESUS. It is also very humiliating to think how little time we are alone with the Lord, and how little we relish quiet communion with himself. There may be much zeal, much service, much noise, much appliance and means, and yet very little of Jesus. It is joy to him, when we come away from our pleasures and pursuits, our engagements and our services, to spend a few brief moments in his presence, to breathe his love, and to hear his word.

If a fond father sees his children so much engaged in service for him as to have no time to sit on his knee and commune with him, would it not fill his heart with grief? And thus it is with our heavenly Father, when his children are more occupied with work than with himself. The result of service engaged in without communion is restlessness, barrenness, and agitation now, and loss of reward hereafter. On the other hand, to be occupied with Christ himself, will lead us to activity for him in the right way, and give us joy in our work.—Times of Refreshing.

BE YE FAITHFUL.

We do well, in the course of our journey Zionward, to reflect on the paths we have just trodden, in order, if similar difficulties in the way of temptations present themselves to trouble us, that we may not be surprised, but be better able to resist and overcome them, by the knowledge gained through our past experience. All of us, at times, have strayed into by and forbidden paths, and have, perhaps, been almost lost, not knowing whither to turn or how to act; but through the efficacy of Christ's atonement, and by his intercession with the Father, we are led back to the way of life eternal sorrowful and repentant. What a lenient Father we have. How indulgent and merciful to his sinful children. "What shall we say then? Shall we continue in sin that grace may abound? God forbid. How shall we, that are dead to sin, live any longer therein?" We have been cleansed from all unrighteousness; let us strive by constant watchfulness to so govern our thoughts and actions, that the world may know, by our patient continuance in well doing, that we are in very truth the followers of the "Chief among ten thousand."

Almighty God, impart divine wisdom unto us, that we may know our duty, and give us strength to perform it entirely to thy honor and glory. Enable us to keep straight forward, taking Christ for our guide, and the Bible for our chart; then shall we reach the heavenly city, in spite of the giant despair, or the hill of difficulty. O God, make us earnest followers and workers, true and consistent disciples, ever ready and willing to do thy work. Remove from our hearts every thing that stands as an obstacle between thee and us; sanctify us by thy grace; give us zeal to labor for the advancement of thy kingdom, that we may be counted good and faithful servants. Help us, dear Lord, to "hold fast the profession of our faith without wavering," encouraging each other to every good word and work, looking for him that shall appear the second time without sin unto salvation. "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." God grant that we may refrain our tongues from evil, being always ready to give an answer to every man that asketh us a reason of the hope that is in us, with meekness and fear. C. MENDENHALL.

NOT DEPEND UPON OTHERS.

This generation is very depednent on others for support. Few produce their own living, but depend upon some one else. If, perchance, they get a few dollars, it goes for what is not bread, and is spent for something to support fashion and foster pride. For this parents are in the first fault, by doing all the work and letting their children do nothing. Soon they become know-nothings in the economy of getting a living, and depend upon others to live.

These are facts in temporal things. Just so in spiritual things. We often see a church that does nothing except a preacher or some one else is present to do the work. Such a church is not independent, as they must be to live, but dependent on poor frail man. God wants all to feel their dependence on him and their own efforts to live.

One reason for this state of things is, the way preachers have managed in the first start. They do all the work, and let the members do nothing, until they think they cannot. If the preacher takes up all the time, your church or people will just as sure be dead as you are a live man, when you are gone.

If you are a wise man you will teach your children, or the church, to work, and give them time to do it, or one half of your labor is lost. A young convert told me to-day, that Bro. P. and H., R., etc., preached them into a lazy stupor in every place where they had preached of late. They seemed determined to be more tedious than before those articles on "long sermons" came out. Some think they are stubborn and wilful; others, that they are ignorant of what God demands, and the people want to give them life. Do not depend upon such preachers. Go to work yourself, and God will give you life.

WAIT ON THE LORD.

We have need of patience, for we are in a state of trial and discipline, and we cannot always understand why we must wait so long before we can be completely delivered from our heavy burdens. In our affliction we search for consolation, and we read these words: "He giveth power to the faint, and to them that have no might he increaseth strength." "Rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy." "Humble yourselves . . . under the mighty hand of God, that he may exalt you in due time; casting all your care upon him, for he careth for you."—"Wherefore let them that suffer according to the will of God, commit the keeping of their souls to him in well-doing, as unto a faithful Creator." We find encouragement in the words of inspiration; and when weary and faint, these words cheer us, and we praise the Lord for the hope set before us in the gospel. When dark clouds gather over us, we may find light and consolation by waiting on him, and we find our prayers answered, for the blessing comes in the best time, and that is his time.

"At some time or other the Lord will provide;
It may not be my time,
It may not be thy time;
And yet in his own time
'The Lord will provide.'

Despond then no longer, the Lord will provide;
And this be the token—
No word he hath spoken,
Was ever yet broken,
'The Lord will provide.'"

Praise the Lord. Let us here acknowledge that "hitherto the Lord hath helped us." And let us trust that he will help us to the end.

"He helped his saints in ancient days
Who trusted in his name;
And we can witness to his praise,
His love is still the same.
His presence sweetens all our cares,
And makes our burdens light;
A word from him dispels our fears,
And gilds the gloom of night.
Lord, we expect to suffer here,
Nor would we dare repine;
But give us still to find thee near,
And own us still for thine."

We read in Isaiah 40: 30, 31, "Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall; but they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run and not be weary; they shall walk and not faint." "O love the Lord, all ye his saints; for the Lord preserveth the faithful, and plentifully rewardeth the proud doer." "Wait on the Lord; be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart; wait, I say, on the Lord."

NECESSITY OF SLEEP.

There are thousands of busy people who die every year for want of sleep. Sleeplessness becomes a disease, and is the precursor of insanity. We speak of sleep as the image of death, and our waking hours as the image of life. Sleep is not like death; for it is the period in which the waste of the system ceases, or is reduced to its minimum. Sleep repairs the waste which waking hours have made. It rebuilds the system. The night is the repair-shop of the body. Every part of the system is silently overhauled, and all the organs, tissues, and substances are replenished. Waking consumes and exhausts; sleep replaces and repairs; waking is death, sleep is life.

The man who sleeps little, repairs little. A man who would be a good worker must be a good sleeper. A man has as much force in him as he had provided for in sleep. The quality of mental activity depends upon the quality of sleep. Men need on an average eight hours of sleep a day. A lymphatic temperament may require nine; a nervous temperament six or seven. A lymphatic man is sluggish, moves and sleeps slowly. But a nervous man acts quickly in everything. He does more in an hour than a sluggish man in two hours; and so in his sleep. Every man must sleep according to his temperament—but eight hours is the average. Whoever by work, pleasure, sorrow, or by any other cause, is regularly diminishing his sleep, is destroying his life. A man may hold out for a time, but the crash will come, and he will die. There is a great deal of intemperance besides that of tobacco, opium, or brandy. Men are dissipated who overtax their system all day and undersleep every night. A man who dies of delirium tremens is no more a drunkard and a suicide than the minister, the lawyer, the merchant, the editor, or the printer that works excessively all day, and sleeps but little all night. H. W. Beecher.

KEEP UP YOUR FIRES.

There is one cause of sore throats and lung diseases which has hardly been thought off, and deserves to be reprimanded. That cause is chilly house in damp weather. Nothing in the limits of bad housekeeping more excites the ire of a sensitive person than the poor economy of putting out fires as the almanac marks the time when warm weather is due. After the fifteenth of April, most housekeepers have stoves taken down and heaters removed, leaving the family to shiver through the long May storms and chilly mornings of June—for our latitude knows such mornings—and bringing on coughs, checking perspiration, and laying the train for fevers and neuralgia.

The cause of at least one-third of the disorders common in spring, we believe to be the chilled condition in which the people force themselves to live. It is wrong to allow a child or a sensitive person to shiver at any time. For the chill which causes such a sensation must do harm. The system is half penetrated by cold before the creeping shivery sensation comes on.

A full-blooded person may take a cold bath in a cold room, in winter, the instant touch of the water being followed by a warm glow; the same person may be so chilled sitting in a room below the proper heat a length of time, that serious consequences follow. When women go about the house wrapped in shawls, it is a sure sign that fires are needed, and if economy refuses to light them, it will be justly rewarded by the colds and headaches that are sure to follow.

One grand maxim of life is to keep comfortable, and there is much more in that sentence than most people see. It does not enjoin more self-indulgence, but it compels one to keep one's own body and mind in the best working order. You can't be useful or good humored when suffering, and regard for others, and your own happiness, will prompt you to both. So have fires lighted if you are cold, even in August.—Ruralist.

A GRAND HUMANE DISCOVERY.—Prof. Halford, of the University of Melbourne, Australia, may be remembered by some as the enthusiastic introducer of a cure for snake bites, and allowed himself to be bitten by a snake and nearly lost his life by the failure of his darling nostrum to counteract the effects. Notwithstanding the ridicule to which his devotion to science subjected him on that occasion, he has persevered in his efforts, and undoubted success has at length rewarded him. He has found an antidote for snake poison which has proved successful in the most critical cases. It is simply liquid ammonia injected into the veins. A small syringe, with a sharp point for the purpose of making the injection, is manufactured and sold in Melbourne, and now few travel in the country without one.

FLOUR.—It is very tiresome to see the perpetual wretchedness in which some people keep themselves over the popular attachment to white flour over graham. All manner of sanitary bliss is promised if folks only will use unbolted meal. Yet this is flying in the face of a fact which many a family, willing to be hygienically right, has found out, on attempting to replace white bread with graham. Graham bread does not agree with a very large number of persons. Not only does it very soon become distasteful and unappetizing, which is enough to condemn it, or any kind of food, but it irritates the bowels and produces a positive mischief which one had far better avoid than be alarmed at the imaginary ill-effects which theorists attribute to common flour.

COLD WATER MAN'S BEST DRINK.—Water, pure and unmixed, is, beyond all question, the best and only natural drink of man, as it is the only drink of every other living being. It should be drank only when nature calls for it by the feeling of thirst, and then slowly and temperately, until the thirst is quenched. Follow the example of the animal creation, and do not stop eating to wash your food down with water. If man would live entirely upon fruits and grains, which make the purest and best food, he would feel no thirst, and need no drink. The juices of the fruits would supply a sufficient quantity of water in its purest possible form.

FATHER, TAKE MY HAND.

The way is dark, my Father! Cloud on cloud
Is gathering thickly o'er my head, and loud
The thunders roar above me. See, I stand
Like one bewildered! Father, take my hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
Thy child.

The day goes fast, my Father! And my soul
Is drawing darkly down. My faithless sight
Sees ghostly visions. Fears, a spectral band,
Encompass me. O, Father, take my hand,
And from the night
Lead up to light
Thy child.

The way is long, my Father! And my soul
Longs for the rest and quiet of the goal;
While yet I journey through the weary land,
Keep me from wandering. Father, take my hand,
Quickly and straight
Lead by heaven's gate
Thy child.

The path is rough, my Father! Many a thorn
Has pierced me, and my weary feet, all torn
And bleeding, mark the way. Yet thy command
Bids me press forward. Father, take my hand,
Then safe and blest
Lead up to rest
Thy child.

The throng is great, my Father! Many a doubt
And fear and danger compass me about,
And foes oppress me so, I cannot stand
Or go alone. O, Father! take my hand,
And through the throng
Lead safe along
Thy child.

The cross is heavy, Father! I have borne
It long, and still do bear it. Let my word
And fainting spirit rise to that blest land
Where crowns are given. Father, take my hand,
And reaching down,
Lead to the crown
Thy child.

THE GRACIOUS ANSWER.

The way is dark, my child! but leads to light;
I would not always have thee walk "by sight."
My dealings now thou canst not understand,
I meant it so; but I will take thy hand,
And through the gloom
Lead safely home
My child!

The day goes fast, my child! But is the night
Darker than such a day? In me is light!
Keep close to me, and every spectral band
Of fears shall vanish. I will "take thy hand,"
And through the night
Lead up to light
My child!

The way is long, my child. But it shall be
Not one step longer than is best for thee;
And thou shalt know at last, when thou dost stand
Safe at the goal, how I did "take thy hand,"
And quick and straight
Lead to heaven's gate
My child!

The path is rough, my child! But oh! how sweet
Will be the rest when weary pilgrims meet;
When thou shalt reach the borders of that land
To which I lead thee as I "take thy hand,"
And safe and blest
With me shalt rest,
My child!

The throng is great, my child! But at thy side
Thy Father walks; then be not terrified;
For I am with thee; will thy foes command
To let thee freely pass; will "take thy hand,"
And through the throng
Lead safe along
My child!

The cross is heavy, child. Yet there is One
Who bore a heavier cross for thee—my Son,
My well beloved. For him bear thine, and stand
With him at last; and from thy Father's hand,
Thy cross laid down,
Receive a crown,
My child!

THE RETURN OF CHRIST.

We meet with many theologians who willingly admit that Christ will literally return to earth again, and readily concede the truth that his coming is near; but not fully understanding the object of his coming, they feel but little interest in the matter. But let the fact be made apparent that Christ is coming for an important purpose, namely: "to judge the quick and the dead," and the question becomes at once interesting; for if the dead remain unjudged till the appearing of Christ, they must also remain unrewarded till then, as judgment is for the express purpose of executing a decision for or against men,—a decision in favor of the righteous, and against the wicked; and if that decision is to be made at Christ's "appearing" in the case of the "dead," as well as the living, certainly reward cannot precede the coming of Christ, but must be the result of judgment, in harmony with the Revelator's testimony: "Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and the saints."—Rev. 11: 18.

Thus even the ancient prophets are to remain unrewarded till the "dead" are judged, and the dead remain unjudged till Christ's appearing; so there is no reward till the judgment, and no judgment till Christ comes.

This makes the future coming of Christ a theme of special interest; an event upon which hangs our future reward. The coming of Christ brings the judgment, and the judgment brings the reward; hence the coming of Christ is not a theme of trivial consequence. The finger of inspiration is ever pointing forward to the time of felicity and glory. For example: Christ said to his disciples, "I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also."—John 14: 3. Why not receive them unto himself before he comes again? Because the judgment does not come till he comes; for he is to be the judge, and he will never receive unjudged people into a celestial paradise, to be subsequently driven out to be judged.

In harmony with this, Peter affirms, "When the Chief Shepherd shall appear, ye shall receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away." 1 Pet. 5: 4. But why can we not receive the crown of glory previously? The answer is easy: because the day of judgment does not come till then, and unjudged ones cannot be crowned. The same sentiment is expressed by Paul: "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory."—Col. 3: 3. But why can we not dwell in glory with Christ before he shall appear? The reply is at hand: the judgment does not precede that epoch, and "glory" is not the realm for unjudged men.

So if we desire to have Christ receive us unto himself, we must wait till his coming as the time of its accomplishment. If we desire to wear the crown of unfading glory, we must wait till the Chief Shepherd shall come to bestow it. If we wish to appear in glory with Christ, we must wait till Christ appears to gather his jewels. The coming of Christ cannot be set aside without disarranging the Divine plan; for if Christ never comes, the judgment will never come; and if the judgment never comes, the reward will never be given. Thus it is seen that the gathering, the crown, the glory, the kingdom, and the entire reward, lie beyond the coming of Christ; so his coming is not only a certainty, but a necessity.

VOICES OF THE DEAD AND LIVING.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day: and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—I TIM. 4: 8.

"That is, unto all who desire his second coming. To believe in the second advent of the Lord Jesus to judge the world, and to desire his return, became a kind of a criterion by which christians were known. No others but true christians were supposed to believe in that, and no others truly desired it."—A. Barnes.

God forbid that those who profess to believe should become cold and indifferent in such a faith. Dear brethren and friends, let us strive to be faithful to our profession.

I am now treating on a love for Christ's appearing. Love is defined by Webster, in part thus: "An affection of the mind excited by beauty and worth of any kind. Love is excited by pleasing qualities of any kind, as by kindness, benevolence, charity. If our hearts are right, we love God above all things, as the sum of all excellence, and all the attributes which can communicate happiness to intelligent beings. In other words, the Christian loves God with the love of complacency in his attributes, the love of benevolence toward the interests of his kingdom, and love of gratitude for favors' received. The love of God is the first duty of man, and this springs from just views of his attributes or excellence of character, which afford the highest delight to the sanctified heart. Esteem and reverence constitute ingredients in this affection, and a fear of offending him is its inseparable effect."

Let me now inquire, dear reader, Can it be possible for love to exist without an ardent desire constantly tending toward the beloved object of its affection? One poet sings:

"The fondness of a creature's love,
How strong it strikes the sense;
Thither our warm affections move,
Nor can we call them thence."

If the ties of nature entwine so fervently around, and centre so endearingly upon objects of perishing mortality, what glowing and fervid love should burn in the hearts of all who profess to be the followers of Him who has freely suffered more than language can possibly describe as an evidence of the purest and most profound love ever witnessed since the Almighty exclaimed, "Let there be light," —and this love all for sinful man.

"We love him because he first loved us," is the testimony of one of whom it is written, "Whom Jesus loved." Love is not a negative principle; it is a positive; and it may be said to possess choice and desire; consequently the soul that hath chosen Jesus as the only object worthy of its supreme affection, desires to be with him; and the stronger the passion glows in a sanctified heart, the more intensely that soul longs to be with the object that hath won his heart away from the ever-changing vanities of this perishing world; and often he cries out, as did the son of Amoz, "O that thou wouldst rend the heavens, that thou wouldst come down, that the mountains might flow down at thy presence."—Isa. 64: 1.

Tertullian seems to have caught the inspiration of the prophet when he wrote thus: "Our desires pant after the end of this age, the passing away of the world at the great day of God."

ANXIETY FOR THE COMING OF THE DAY OF GOD.

"Looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God."—2 Pet. 3: 12. The marginal reading, "hasting the day of God." The apostle, after predicting the scoffers that should on the verge of judgment manifest, in the lust of their heart, and opposition to, and also special contempt for, those that would be manifesting a desire for the coming of the Chief Shepherd, admonishes the tried saints in the following terms: "Ye, therefore, beloved, seeing ye KNOW these things before, beware, lest ye also, being led away with the error of the wicked, fall from your own steadfastness." O how many will make shipwreck in sight of land.

Opposition to the teachings of God's precious word, concerning the time of Christ's second coming, never, in my opinion, assumed so perilous an aspect as at the present hour. The great mass of religionists have decided that it is utterly impossible to obtain any knowledge in regard to the event, and have decided it does not concern them; and there the matter rests at this awful moment.

But indifference upon this great Scripture doctrine, occupying so large a portion of the precious word of God, is not altogether outside of the denominated Advent body. As an impartial observer, I have been positively astonished at the indifference of many persons indoctrinated chiefly into a belief in the sleep of the dead and the destruction of the wicked, although the above, I believe, are truths of deep and fundamental import; but, dearly beloved, what is all your hope without the coming of the Life-giver?

Evasive answers and tart replies very illy become one that professes to be a believer in the coming of Christ, when interrogated upon the evidences of his coming.

"They—the first Christians—deemed it a kind of apostasy not to sigh after the day of the Lord."—Massillon.

With the kindest of feelings, but with sorrow of heart, I am compelled to subscribe to the following view of a great and good man: "Guilt is incurred by all those who lay hindrances in the way of the faithful, which prevent them from hearing their Lord's 'I come,' and answering, 'Come, Lord Jesus.'"—John Wesley.

Professed minister, of what name you may be called, take heed that you are clean of such hindrances. Your own personal account must soon be rendered up to Him that shall judge the world in righteousness.

"He comes quickly; and I trust you can answer with a glad Amen, that the warning is not troublesome or unpleasant to your ears, but rather that his coming, his certain and speedy coming, is the object of your delightful hope, and of your longing expectation."—Doddridge.

"Thy kingdom come; thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." These are the words of the Redeemer, and they most emphatically embody a fervent desire for the return of Him who shall show "who is the blessed and only Potentate, the King of kings and Lord of lords." When this prayer is answered, which cannot be accomplished until the will of God is done in earth as it is done in heaven, which will and purpose is predicted in his blessed word in the creation of a "new heaven and a new earth"; "And every creature which is in heaven, and on the earth, and under the earth, and such as are in the sea, and all that are in them, heard I saying, Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever" (Rev. 5: 12); then the earth is filled with the glory of God. When the prayer of the Reeeemer is answered by his Father, he will have made "his enemies his footstool"; the Father will have fulfilled the declaration, "He hath put all enemies under his feet"; the burning day of Malachi hath passed away, and the wicked are now reduced to "ashes under the soles of" the feet of the righteous. Then his foes are made his footstool.

David looked forward, and in view of the sins, wretchedness, misery, and hoarded-up resentment of ages, and a tendency on the part of morally-polluted humanity to sink lower and lower in the filth of degradation and corruption, he prayed, "Let the sinners be consumed out of the earth, and let the wicked be no more. Bless thou the Lord, O my soul. Praise ye the Lord."—Ps. 104: 35. "Blessed be the Lord God, the God of Israel, who only doeth wondrous things. And blessed be his glorious name forever; and let the whole earth be filled with his glory; Amen and amen. The prayers of David the son of Jesse are ended."—Ps. 72.

The Psalmist had now, through faith, reached the consummation of God's will and purpose. Faith could grasp no more. He ended his prayers. The son of Jesse fell on sleep, exclaiming, "As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness." Hear the words of Jesus: "As therefore the tares are gathered and burned in the fire; so shall it be in the end of this world. The Son of man shall send forth his angels, and they shall gather out of his kingdom all things that offend, and them which do iniquity; and shall cast them into a furnace of fire: there shall be wailing and gnashing of teeth. Then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. Who hath ears to hear, let him hear."

"We should pray for the coming of that day. Thus Christ has taught us to pray—'Thy kingdom come.' We must therefore pray for the day of judgment; for the kingdom of Christ will not come in all its glory before that blessed day."—Increase Mather.

"Let us therefore have a desire that this day may come quickly; let us hasten God forward; let us cry unto him day and night, Thy kingdom come."—Latimer.

"It were a self-contradictory thing for us, who pray that the kingdom of God may quickly come, to be looking for long life here below."—Cyprian.

"This [the advent] is what we wish and pray for when we say, 'Thy kingdom come.'"—Augustine.

"At the fall of Babylon, will begin that kingdom for which we continually pray, 'Thy kingdom come.' O how good it will be for us to be there."—Joachim Abbas.

"Amen. Even so come, Lord Jesus."—John the Revelator.

"How bright the vision, O how long
Shall the glad hour delay?
Fly swifter round, ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

"O God, grant that it may come without delay; I would readily eat up this necklace—of agates—to-day, for the judgment to come to-morrow."—Luther.

"Hasten, O Lord, that blessed time. O let thy kingdom come!"—Whitefield.

For the World's Crisis.

WAS JOHN THE BAPTIST THE ELIJAH OF MALACHI?

"Behold I will send you Elijah the prophet before the coming of the great and notable day of the Lord; and he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse."—MAL. 4: 5, 6.

In the language used we find a positive promise, or declaration, that he will send Elijah the prophet before the day of the Lord. He tells us also what shall be his work. We will not stop to argue whether the work has been done or not; but, has Elijah come? That is the question; for if he has not come, he will come; and if the work has not been done, it will be done.

We find in John 1st, the angel of the Lord talking to the father of John on this wise: "Fear not, Zacharias, for thy prayer is heard, and thy wife Elizabeth shall bear a son, and thou shalt call his name John." Why? "And he shall go before him [the Lord] in the spirit and power of Elias [Elijah], to turn the hearts of the fathers to the children."

Here we find the angel of the Lord declaring that John, who was not yet born, should come in the spirit and power of Elias, and do the same work that the prophet Malachi says Elijah should do; so that, if John is not the Elijah that Malachi meant, then there are two men to do the same work.

Again. Matt. 11: 14,—"If ye will receive it, this is the Elias which was for to come." Is Jesus a Savior to those who will not receive him? No. Why? Because he does not save them. He saves only those who receive him as such. Was John the Elias to the Jews who did not receive him as such? No. Why? For Jesus says, "This is the Elias if ye will receive it" [or him]. Of course, if they did not receive him, he was not the Elias, and vice versa.

After the transfiguration, Jesus had been speaking to his disciples about his death; the disciples say, "Why then say the scribes that Elias must first come?"—Matt. 17: 10. We see by the question that the would-be teachers (the scribes) of that day did not receive John as the Elias; and we find men at the present time who do not look at John the Baptist as the Elias; but let God be true, though it makes every man a liar.

Hear what Jesus says to his disciples in answer to their question: "Elias truly shall first come and restore all things. But I say unto you, that Elias is come already, and they knew him not; but have done unto him whatsoever they listed. Then the disciples understood that he spake unto them of John the Baptist."

Can there be any thing plainer? Could He who "spake as never man spake," have used any language to make it more positive that John the Baptist was the Elias? Here we find that Jesus declares positively that the Elias had come, and there can be no mistake about whom he means; no one can doubt for a moment that he refers to John the Baptist. This also agrees with what the angel told Zacharias before John was born. Now could the angel that the Lord God sent with a message to the father of John, have been mistaken as to what that message was, and told Zacharias what was not true? I think not. Then we have two witnesses to prove that John was the Elias.

But, says one, John could not have been the Elias, for he says himself he was not. True. The Jews send messengers to John; they ask, "Art thou Elias?" He says, "No;" and he was not Elias, or Elijah, in person, and yet he came in spirit and power, just as the angel said he would come, and was therefore the Elias, as Jesus said; and if he has not done this work (I believe he has), the Lord will take care of that; it is for us to believe the plain word of God, whether we understand all the whys and wherefores or not. Jesus says John was the Elias. I believe it.

We profess to be looking for Jesus to come, and that then we shall get our reward, and not till then. This being the case, do not let us overshoot the mark, and be looking beyond the event, or in any way get our eye off from the mark; for it is certain the Lord has given us sign upon sign, event upon event, so that we may know what event to look for, and about the time, too.

The great leading signs are in the past; other events are taking place before our eyes, showing us that the time is at hand when Jesus will come. And in all these signs which have been given us, not one points to the coming of Elijah, but all point to one event—the coming of the Just One, and that soon. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly. Amen."

THE HEAVENLY KINGDOM.

That the sanctified of all ages are to spend vast eternity in a kingdom of heavenly origin, in some locality, at some epoch of time, is a truth in which all christians are agreed. But when we inquire concerning the geographical and chronological location of this predicted kingdom, conflicting views are expressed. Under such circumstances, our only appeal is, "To the law and to the testimony."

Its geographical location is said to be "under the whole heaven" (Dan. 7: 27), in "this world" (Rev. 11: 15), and "in earth," but not in its present state of defilement.

Its chronological location is said to be "when the Son of man shall come in his glory" to say to the saints, "Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom" (Matt. 25: 31), and "in the end of this world," after the final separation, "then shall the righteous shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father."—Matt. 13: 40-43.

Those who enter this kingdom will be "equal to the angels," "neither can they die any more." But are we in the path that leads to this celestial realm? It is a "narrow" path, and but few walk therein. Only the humble and obedient are to be found there. Are we in the right road? There is but one road that leads to the holy Paradise of God. "Be not deceived, God is not mocked."

Are we sowing to the Spirit? Such only will reap life everlasting.

THE HAPPY TIME

O the happy time is coming,
When the gospel trumpet's sound
Shall be heard by every nation,
To the earth's remotest bound;
When the vale shall be exalted,
And the verdant hills rejoice,
And the ocean join the chorus
With a loud triumphant voice.
CHO.—Lo, the morning light will break,
And the day is drawing nigh;
Yes, a glorious time is coming soon,
We shall hail it by and by.

* * * * * * * *

O the happy time is coming,
By our fathers once foretold;
It is promised in the Bible,
It was sung by prophets old;
They who sit in heathen darkness,
Soon the morning light shall see,
And the world, with songs of triumph,
Hail the glorious jubilee.

LIFE AND IMMORTALITY IN CHRIST ALONE.

BY EDWARD WHITE.

(To the Editor of the Christian World.)

Sir,—I am now to reply to the third objection, that the doctrine of the first and second death, as before explained, and forming, as we think, the essential basis of the Scripture revelation of life in Christ alone, is dangerous to the spiritual interests of mankind.

1. The one sufficient answer to this objection would be that truth is never dangerous; and that the truth of a Scripture doctrine can be known by one method alone—by applying to the Bible the general laws of honest interpretation. Delusions are injurious alike to those who propagate and to those who receive them. There is no safety in the plan of rejecting christian doctrines beforehand, on account of their seeming perilousness. There is no truth against which the cry of danger has been more sturdily raised than against "the gospel which Paul preached." Yet its power over honest souls in winning them to God depends upon that "abundant grace" which dishonest men may misuse. If sinners will commit suicide with "the sword of the Spirit," their blood, as they perish from under these heavens, will be upon their own heads.

2. This, however, is not the sole defence on which we rely in answer to the present objection. I shall now endeavor (not forgetting the infinite spiritual interests concerned, or under-estimating the vast and varying effects of substituting one fundamental doctrine for another in the religious instruction of a nation, or the painful exercises of mind attending such a change) to show in detail some of the positive benefits which we believe to proceed from the doctrine held by us for divine truth. And, first, I will attempt to describe its bearings upon the spiritual life of the "sons of God." To them we make our first appeal. The welfare of christians is an interest at least as important as that of unbelievers. Moreover, our chief hope of success in persuasion lies among those who resemble God and honor his word. Loving and righteous souls alone can believe in a just and loving Lord; others will think anything horrible to be probably true. Other and false religionists will think God to be "such an one as themselves." The inexorable cruelty of celibate priesthoods and fanatics will be the sure support of terrific superstitions to the end of time. The fear and service of malignant powers have been the religion of barbarous souls over all the world from the dawn of history. Superstition fills the spirit with gloom and dire forebodings, and invents a tremendous divinity whose infinite black shadow falls over and darkens eternity. The doctrine which we teach never can become popular until men in general are ready to believe in Jesus Christ as the image of God, and in spiritual Christianity. It will be received by none except those who are willing to submit to a divine revelation; for it cuts down man's pride by the roots, sets forth Christ as our all in all," and consigns to remediless destruction all who reject him. It is a doctrine which will never be accepted by Unitarians or rose-water theologians on the one hand, nor by panic-stricken ascetics on the other. Its one chance of acceptance lies among those who know God both as living love and a consuming fire, and Christ as God "manifest in the flesh". It was the first doctrine lost in the primitive church, and, though it is the root of all others, it will be the last to be restored to its place of authority and power.

3. So far, however, from being dangerous, we believe its general promulgation among christians will strengthen the faith, the hope, and the love of all God's servants. First, their faith—in the truth as truth, and in the truth as a self-consistent whole. It is vain to deny that the honest belief of "tribulation and anguish," to last through eternity upon all the unsaved—as long as the necessary being shall endure—hangs like a millstone round the neck of every christian who accepts and realizes it. So long as men do not think of it, it is comparatively harmless. As spoken of in a vague, indefinite way by preachers, who do not try to bring out the idea of eternity, it even serves (as a true doctrine of terror would serve) to arouse the careless to repentance. And in this way it has actually been used for many ages as the instrument of alarm in the conversion of most of those who have turned to a life of religion—just as the partial truth in Roman errors for ages served to save the sons of God. The mischief commences only when men, as in our day, begin to think earnestly of it. The beginning of thought upon the doctrine of a literally everlasting torment is the beginning of agonizing doubt: and serious doubt on any single fundamental doctrine loosens our hold on all the rest. Accordingly, underneath the faith of the most thoughtful christians, young or old, lies a deep substratum of involuntary unbelief, which breaks out now and then in a sort of volcanic eruption and earthquake. Hence good men become fearful of thinking. They dread losing their hold on Christianity altogether if they begin meddling with these theological "mysteries." Their remedy for scepticism is, not to think, or to give themselves over to a priesthood. But the remedy is worse than the disease. There is no true doctrine which "will not bear thinking of." Every truth is revealed for the purpose of being thought upon, and commends itself to believers the more they think of it and compare it with Scripture and experience. Every true doctrine gloriously reveals the character of God most high. Now we hold that the doctrine of life in Christ alone conforms to these conditions. It is an unspeakable relief from doubt, which endangers the faith of multitudes, an immense aid toward seizing with a firm grip on the whole truth of Christianity with its wonderful revelations—to be well rid of the frightful delusion that mankind, being naturally immortal, came under the curse of death, in the sense of everlasting torments, for Adam's sin—the corner-stone of the Augustinian theology.

The puerile modern attempts to take death in three different significations, and to apply them to different persons, such as Adam, infants, heathen, and rejecters of Christ, in infinitely different senses at pleasure, as if the Bible had been written to teach word-jugglery to mankind, do not even deserve examination. No; what is needed by young people of both sexes at all events, in the fiery conflict with passion to which they are exposed, is a faith which they can really believe with all the mind and soul and strength; not one which confounds at once reason, conscience, and affection, and half paralyzes the renewed will under a burden of terror. The doctrine of life in Christ will afford them such a faith—one which will not forsake them in difficulties, one which will seem not less true when beset with the temptations of the flesh than when lifted up by the power of the Spirit; not less true when they look upon the crowds of London or the brazen countenance of apostate Christendom, at home and abroad, than when they muse in secret over their Bibles, or gaze on the fair face of creation. It is a faith which they will be able to apply both to themselves and all around. Such is the infinite horror arising from the prevalent creed, that it is never applied either to living multitudes or dead relations. A "good case" is made out for almost everybody in direct opposition to Christ's words that "few find the narrow way that leadeth unto life;" that none shall escape destruction except those who "hear his sayings and do them." The effect of this doctrine will be to allow of their plain sense being attached to all Christ's words; so that christian teachers will not hesitate to apply, for their eternal welfare, his awful threatenings to every one, whether of the clergy or laity, who "loveth and maketh a lie," or "resists the truth," or makes a "gain of godliness," or has "a form of godliness," while denying the "power thereof."

4. Furthermore, we recommend this doctrine of life to the church as helpful to faith in the truth—as a complete whole. Christiantianity, like nature, is a system. It proceeded from the All-perfect mind, and addresses itself to the understanding of the "perfect" (1 Cor. 2), as "the wisdom of God." The world at large may apprehend only scattered truths, but the church is expected to receive the "whole truth." John 16: 13. We are now witnessing around us the breaking up of mediæval theologies. Multitudes also, who ought to know better, are abandoning at the same time their faith in Christ as divine, in Christ as God's sacrifice for sin, in Christ as the righteousness of sinners, in Christ as the giver of the Spirit, in Christ as the resurrection from the dead,—in one word, Christianity is being abandoned in detail, and as a consequence the Bible which teaches it is being abandoned along with it as an authority. We think we see the procuring cause of this catastrophe, and the only remedy. Cast aside that fatal dogma of natural immortality with its frightful but logical inference of endless torment as "the curse of the law," adopt the plain teaching of Scripture that death, destruction, perishing, was the threatened curse, and is the impending doom of sinners, and the whole evangelical system becomes at once intelligible, self-consistent, and credible. Understand that Christ is literally our life; that justification, which includes pardon and acceptance, carries with it a passing from death unto life in immortality, and is therefore "justification of life,"—and your foot is planted upon a rock. You then see that the old "Protestant" doctrine on mediation and on a gratuitous justification, in opposition to the accursed Popish falsehood which denies it, must be the apostolic doctrine, since life is God's gift in Christ, and no perishable and perishing sinner can either deserve or gain for himself immortality. 1 Pet. 1: 19. You then see why the doctrine of the indwelling Spirit must be true, since only by living union with God as Redeemer can man live for ever; and why, lastly, so much stress is laid upon bodily resurrection as the end of "redemption" (Rom. 8: 23), since the mind alone is not a man, and God has redeemed the whole humanity and glorified it.

We confidently trust, therefore, that this doctrine, in the great conflict of the "last days," will prove itself a veritable flaming sword, more than an Excalibur, turning every way to keep open the way to the tree of life (for it is open now), and an effectual weapon against all those broad Church delusions which would close it; whose pretended breadth consists substantially in narrowing the revealed thoughts of the Infinite down to the dimensions of man's fancies. The fundamental error lies in the doctrine of man's natural immortality, with its consequence of eternal misery. That is the fulcrum on which scepticism places its lever for the overthrow of "orthodox" Christianity. Restore the truth on the fall, the redemption, and the future punishment of mankind, and you will restore in impregnable solidity the truth on justification, sanctification, and resurrection. You will enable men to embrace with the whole understanding the system of Christ's redemption, and to value accordingly the Bible, the word of life, which reveals it. Perversions of the Bible have more than anything else to do with its impending rejection. We have, in effect, to choose between divine culture and the devil's anarchy.

(To be concluded.)

THE CANKER IN THE CHURCH.

Let us briefly sketch a single evening's experience, such as is quite too familiar to most of the pastors in our large towns. We cannot speak as knowingly in regard to the rural districts.

We are invited to officiate at a wedding in a christian family. Its members have sat with us at the Lord's table, and made their vow to "come out, and be separate" from the ways of the world. A wedding ought commonly to be an occasion for christian cheerfulness; but is quite too serious an affair to be turned into a revel. We observe, as the assembly gathers, that there is a prevailing extravagance in costume,—not merely in its cost, but in its grotesqueness of caricature and deformity. Jewels abound; on the persons of professing christians, too (and, as we look at them, we recall the late announcement of the American Board of Foreign Missions, that their receipt have fallen off thirty thousand dollars during the last quarter.) The glossy hair of many a young maiden is obscured under an inundation of powder, as if a tub of flour had been overturned upon her in malice. Some of the dresses seem to have been constructed for the express purpose of exposing the person and concealing the carpet.

After the solemn ceremony of marriage is concluded with prayer, the company repair to the superbly furnished refreshment room. A bowl of punch stands in one corner. There is a frequent popping of champagne corks, and glasses circulate freely through the crowd. We notice two things: a large number of ladies drink wine; and the faces of several young gentlemen present look as if they drank quite too much every day. (By and by, perhaps, some of these ladies will send for us to consult with them about the reformation of intemperate husbands and brothers.) As soon as the eating and drinking are over, the music strikes up, and the dancing and waltzing begin, and end not until long after sober christian people should be in their beds. We halt long to see the parlors crowded with the opening dance. We look on, and see a dozen of our young church-members "go off" into the frolic, and alongside of them a dozen more whom we have tried in vain to impress with religious truth; and as we think that yonder in that merry crowd are the very persons whom we once prayed with in the inquiry meeting, and led to the Lord's table, we turn homeward sick at heart with the inconsistencies of church-members who turn a christian home into a house of revelry. On the next evening, the prayer-meeting is held; and we notice that those who spent the previous night amid the extravagant dress, the drinking, and the dance, are nearly all absent from the place of prayer. One or two of those who do come, pray fluently for "the outpouring of the Spirit, and the conversion of sinners." To what would they have sinners converted?

Now, the above sketch is not a fancy picture. We can call scores and scores of pastors to witness that its counterpart is constantly to be witnessed in their own congregations. I have seen similar spectacles more than once. We need not wonder that the most faithful preaching falls almost powerless on hearts that are mad with money-seeking, and the chase for self-indulgence.

We need not wonder that drunkenness is increasing, when professed christians put the bottled serpent into their neighbor's hands. We need not wonder that the church of Jesus ceases to be a "peculiar people, zealous of good works," humble, self-denying, and prayerful, and impressive to the world, when Christ's own followers "let down the bars," and lead the way into frivolity, extravagance, and demoralizing amusements.

Lately we were urging an intelligent, sober-minded friend to give himself to Christ. He replied, squarely in my face, with about the following words: "If I become a christian, I shall be expected to join the church. I make no pretensions to extra goodness. But I never drink liquor, or offer it to others. I have no dancing parties in my house. I do not encourage my children in pride, or extravagance. I never run in debt, or live fast. But I see too many church-members do all these things, and I do not wish to join in their company." I frankly told my friend that the sad, worldly conformities of some church-members was no excuse for his neglecting his duty, or losing his soul. But the lamentable charges he brought against his christian acquaintances I did not dare to deny.

It is painful to write this article. It is still more painful to know that there is need of it. The cause of Christ demands plainness of speech. If the hearts and lives of any of God's people are being eaten out with canker, it is the office of love to speak a faithful word of warning. "Am I therefore become your enemy because I tell you the truth?"—T. L. Cuyler, D. D., in "The Evangelist."

TRUTH ADVANCING.—We have just received a very interesting article from Edward White, London, Eng., showing that sin and misery will come to an end. It was published in "The Christian World," in London, Feb. 25th, 1870. We learn from private correspondence, that the truth on this important subject is spreading rapidly in England, and that if all the able ministers, who believe in the destruction of the wicked, would speak out, it would shake the very foundations of popular theology.

A part of the article of Bro. White may be found in another column.

"ASCENSION ROBES."

Much has been said from time to time about "ascension robes," said to have been prepared in 1843–4, by those who expected the immediate coming of our Savior. At that time, we took occasion to trace several such reports—some of the best authenticated—to their origin, and found them all utterly false.

The following from the Rutland Courier may interest some of our readers:—

"A few evenings ago, we learn that Elder Miles Grant, at a religious meeting, spoke in a figurative sense, of the necessity of christians being clothed in 'robes of white,' that is, in 'righteousness.' No sooner does this expression get out to the pious souls of some of the conventional churches, who are jealous of Elder Grant because of his success as a clergyman, than an article is published in the Rutland Herald, purporting to be an old affidavit gotten up in 1844, by a man named Bellows, who seemed to be more favored with wind than wit, saying he had 'frequently seen ladies sewing on fine white goods for several days.' They told this hen hussy they were for ascension robes. He says that they were made longer than the ordinary dresses of that day, and that his brother, now dead, told him that 'there were over thirty persons in a company of two hundred that were ready with their ascension robes on, and that the excitement was very great.'

It would seem to us that Elder Grant's pious (?) enemies are, indeed, in big business when they have to hunt up a counterfeit affidavit written twenty-six years ago, by some irresponsible Paul Pry, who had been watching some ladies making 'fine white' chemises and night dresses, for themselves, and probably baby dresses for some expected new comer; and when two closely questioned, told the fellow, to get rid of him, that they were making ascension robes.

We say to Elder Grant, to 'go ahead.' He is doing much good, but he will not accomplish all the good he can, until he baptizes some of the clergymen of other denominations, as well as their flocks. If Rev. Mr. Grant shakes the bush, why should other clergymen be permitted to catch the birds?"

PRESENT DUTY.

We are glad to see that some ministers are beginning to open their eyes to the perils of these times. It is time for every true watchman to cry an alarm. We clipped the following from the New York Tribune:—

"The Right Rev. Horatio Southgate, D. D., preached a sermon on the present duty of the American church at St. Luke's church on Hudson street, last evening. He commenced by saying that there are thousands among us who think that the grand mission of the American church at the present time is to war against Romanism; there are others who think her prime duty is to contend against Protestant sectarianism; there are others who declare that the very existence of the true church of Christ is endangered by the sudden and rapid advance of what they call Ritualism, and they deem it their first duty to oppose its progress. We do not doubt that each one of these parties in the church is sincere in its belief; but I do not believe that they have a wholly correct view of the battle-field. The church is to direct her chief energies in this Western land against the common foe, infidelity, rather than against sects. No one belongs to the Roman Catholic church who holds the faith of the Gospel as it was originally delivered. Our main warfare cannot be with them. In truth, we can have no warfare, excepting as their errors—whether of belief or practice—endanger the primitive faith which they hold as their creed; and in that creed the weapons of our warfare should be rather the patient, loving remonstrance of brothers than the extravagant attacks of a remorseless foe. He referred to the Rationalists, who judge questions of religious faith by their reason alone, and Spiritualists as belonging to the same class as Atheists and Deists. Our warfare was against them, not against other religious denominations. The great question is Christianity or infidelity, and the paramount duty of the American church is the overthrow of the latter."

FRANCE AND NAPOLEON.

The political aspect in France is becoming exceedinlgy interesting. Years since, Napoleon said, "I represent a PRINCIPLE, and that principle is UNIVERSAL SUFFRAGE." He has now devised a scheme, by means of which he will probably establish his throne upon a firmer basis than ever before enjoyed; and also make the French government more popular in Europe, than any other in the civilized world. He shows a skill in managing political matters exhibited by no other ruler upon our planet. On the 24th of April, 1870, he issued a proclamation to all the people in France, in which he says:—

"I address all the French people; you who, since the 10th day of December in the year 1848, placed me at your head, have recompensed me by your affection, and call on you to give me a new proof of your confidence in me, by casting an affirmative vote in the plebiscite. Such a vote is a vote against threatened revolution; such a vote assures order; such a vote renders easy for me and for France the transmission of the crown to my son. Let your vote be unanimous, as it was eighteen years since. A great nation, in order to secure the fruits of its own development, must support institutions guaranteeing national stability and progress. Let the people answer "Yes" on the day of election, in order to ratify by their voice the liberal reforms which they have enjoyed during the past ten years. For my part, faithful to my origin and confident in the providence of God, I will continue to work incessantly for the prosperity of France.

It becomes indispensable that the new constitutional pact shall be approved by the people, as were formerly the constitutions of the republic and of the empire. At those two epochs it was believed, even as I myself believe to-day, that anything done without you was illegitimate. The constitution of imperial and democratic France may be reduced to a small number of fundamental provisions, which cannot be changed without your consent; your decision will have the advantage of rendering definite the progress already made, and of placing beyond the influence of political fluctuations the principles of the government. I address myself to all of you who from the 10th of December, 1848, surmounted all obstacles to place me at your head; to you who for twenty-two years have without cessation guarded me by your suffrages, sustained me by your co-operation, rewarded me by your affection. Give me a new proof of confidence in bringing to the ballot box an affirmative vote. You will exorcise the menaces of revolution; you will place order and liberty on a solid basis, and you will render easier in the future the transmission of the crown to my son. You have almost unanimously for eighteen years clothed me with the most extensive powers; be also signally unanimous to-day in supporting the transformation of the imperial regime. A great nation has no way of attaining its development without resting on institutions which guarantee at the same time stability and progress. To the call which I make on you to ratify the liberal reforms realized during the last ten years reply "Yes." As for myself, faithful to my origin, I shall continue penetrated by your thoughts and fortified by your will, and, confiding in Providence, shall work without cessation for the prosperity and the grandeur of France." NAPOLEON.

RUTLAND.

We returned to Rutland, Vt., Saturday, April 23d, and learned that the prayer meetings had been excellent during our absence. New ones had requested prayers, and the interest nad continued unabated. The meeting Saturday evening was a precious one. Several new ones requested prayers, and the young converts brought in heart-cheering testimonies. They seem anxious to be just right. We are much pleased with the spirit they manifest.

Sabbath, April 24th, was a good day in the Lord. We have six meetings every Sabbath, besides the baptisms. Fifty-one have been baptized, and several others intend to be buried with Christ next Sabbath, May 1st. The truth and light are spreading in power. We find our place of worship too small to accommodate the people who wish to hear. They crowd the aisles, gallery and entry, and many are obliged to go away for want of standing room. Devoted members from the different churches continue to give valuable assistance in the meetings, and are receiving rich blessings from the Lord. We are sorry to say that the resident ministers do not think it best to lend a helping hand in the great work.

On our arrival we found the following in the Rutland Courier, from "CLERICUS," with a note appended by the Editor. As the article may be as interesting to our readers as any thing we should write, we give it a place in the editorial columns. It needs no comments from our pen.

MR. CAIN:—You seem to want to know what is the matter with Elder Grant. I will try to tell you my understanding of the matter.

It seems to be an understood thing in the evangelical churches that there is, in every communion, weak-minded and vacillating men and women, who are drifted about by every wind of doctrine. This class of persons are held steadfast in their chosen faith by the continuous influence of the stated preaching of the gospel by their own minister. It is the policy of the churches, rather silent than avowed, to hold, each one, all its own members, to the worship of their own churches. It is held to be unbecoming in a member of one church to absent himself from service in that, and to attend it in another. Persistence in such a habit would be a matter for discipline. If you were a church-goer you would notice that a man as eloquent, as profound and as learned as Mr. Stebbins had no or few members of other churches to listen to him. However, a member of some other denomination might really desire to hear him, but such member knows that it is against the unwritten canon of his society to leave his own to attend the preaching of another pastor. This policy is established for the reason that running from one pastor to another tends to unsettle the minds of all and especially of those who naturally vacillate.

Hence when this rule is relaxed in times of religious revival or interest, when the members of all churches, led by their shepherds, meet at some common place, such place of general meeting is, by the etiquette of the churches, held to be neutral ground. It is understood that the broad, general principles of christianity, such as the danger of sin and the necessity of repentance are the things to be discussed. The great object of such meetings is to get up an interest in religion, to arouse sinners to repentance. Do you suppose that preachers of different, not to say rival denominations, would agree to lend a helping hand to excite a whole community to anxious enquiry with the certainty that in the end these would all go to help the building up of rival societies? Is it to be supposed that I, a Methodist or Baptist, would aid in prayer and revival meetings if I supposed that, after being brought to a realization of their need of salvation, they would, in the end, go into the Catholic Church, or any denomination whose faith, in my judgment, don't agree with the Bible. There is a policy in church as in secular matters. I desire that my own church should be built up. For as it gathers members it gains power. With increasing numbers it gains in wealth. It can sustain better preachers. The burdens of expense more largely diffused, become less onerous to individuals.

Besides, if I thought that the doctrines of the Episcopal church, for example, was as good as those of my own, I might as well belong to it. But I don't, and therefore I join that society whose doctrines seem to be nearest right

Now, Elder Grant came here holding out that he had no sectarian views. He wanted, he said, to get up in this place, so notoriously lukewarm in the work of Christ, an earnest interest in religious matters. He wanted to arouse unregenerated, wicked people, to a sense of sin and the need of a Redeemer. To this end he asked the co-operation of the other churches. We did co-operate, and such co-operation was continued until the cloven foot peeped out from beneath the clerical garments. That cloven foot showed a wolf in sheep's clothing. It showed that his ulterior desire was to gain proselytes. To build up the Grantite church, to increase its numbers, to strengthen its influence. Not satisfied with gathering into his church any new convert he might make, he has encouraged by his specious pleading, aided by a seductive eloquence, the members of other churches to attend his ministrations. He has disturbed the faith of many of these. He has led them to be dissatisfied with their own churches, to throw discredit upon the baptism they had formerly chosen, by seeking another. For to seek such is to declare their want of faith in the sufficiency of the first. Drawn away by his wiles and artifices, our people go in flocks to hear him, and neglect their own churches. He found our members cheerful and contented. He has made them anxious and discontented. Especially has he made them think that all the essentials of their salvation have not been complied with.

More than this, he preaches the Bible without comment or interpretation. Where is his catechism, his code of faith! Those signing the covenant of his church, promise simply that they will take the Bible as their rule for life. Why, sir, a Unitarian—a Liberal Christian as they call themselves—might sign such a covenant as that. What uniformity of creed could ever exist in such discordant elements? The cohesive power of any church is in the unity of the faith of its members. What is the use of churches and ministers, except to classify varying interpretations of the Bible and to expound the holy Scriptures in the light of such several classifications. Elder Grant goes in for the literal, not the spiritual interpretation of the Bible. Reading, then, of the baptism in Jordan, he argues that all christians should have performed for them all the rituals to which Christ submitted. Now Christ was born and educated as a Jew, and as such he was circumcised. Then why don't Elder Grant, by a parity of reasoning, circumcise his members?

Baptism is but the symbol of cleansing. That form of the symbol was adopted in Palestine, which typified it most accurately in conformity with the customs of the people. The climate there was warm. Bathing was practicable, and practiced at all seasons of the year, and therefore with the dwellers upon Jordan, bathing was the symbol of cleanliness. Is plunging a sorrowing sinner into water, covered with ice, a symbol of cleansing in Vermont? In this climate it is the symbol of being a fool or a fisheman. A literal symbolism would prescribe a tub of warm water, a flesh brush, and a bar of soap in this climate. Christ washed the feet of his disciples; this is the literal text. Why don't Grant do the same? Any man of sense will see that the literal interpretation of the Scriptures, and of the rituals founded upon it, would lead to all sorts of absurdities, and so it will be seen that it will never do to let all sorts of people read the Bible and accept it in its literal interpretation. For any society thus organized would contain, as a large element, a forago of absurdity. Say what you will, there must be in all churches which are intended to endure, something of authoritative interpretation. This interpretation is the foundation of all specific creeds.

If any one desires to connect himself with a church of Christ, it is not enough for him to say however honestly or earnestly he may feel it, "I have repented of my sins, I have prayed for forgiveness, I mean with God's help to lead a holy life. I believe in Christ." No church that I know will receive a man on any such profession. Elder Grant's society may receive such a man, but no church does. All protestant churches, all christian churches, ask more than this; each has its peculiar tenets, its sectarian interpretation of the Scriptures; and candidates for admission must give in, as an antecedent, adhesion to these sectarian interpretations. Out of all this it comes that the candidate is brought to read and inquire anew into the teachings of the Scriptures, and he comes in the end to be satisfied with one or the other of the accepted codes. Thus the respectable orthodox churches grow. Those ignorant people who undertake to interpret the Bible for themselves, and at the same time belong to some visible church of Christ, always attach themselves, if unfortunately such are in their reach, to some such society. Elder Grant's church is the commonest catch for all these ignorant sinners. I don't know where to find such folks. Such a church is the gathering up of all the odds and ends of so-called christianity. If there was not such a refuge for sinners seeking salvation, they would be forced to seek more light, and would, by the grace of God, be brought to a true sense of religious duty. Then numbers would be added to, instead of being subtracted from evangelical societies. Nor would our community, affording as they do now, from too much discussion, such meagre support of the gospel, be still further divided so as to render them still less able to give to the laborers in the vineyard a reasonable hire.

Now, Mr. Cain, the real point of Elder Grant's offending is, that he has not turned out as we supposed he would. I won't say that he deceived us. I can't say that he did. I can't say that he made any pledges or promises. But he allowed us to enter upon his enterprises supposing that he was committed to a particular course of policy. And if he saw that we were deceiving ourselves, he ought to have put us right. We expected to add largely to our communicants; but we not only did not get any additions, but we lost members. We don't mind this so much, but we do object to this way of interfering in a manner altogether unprofessional with our church; for his course is not that which one minister should pursue with regard to another. And we do object most strenuously to the loose way he pretends to preach the gospel, pretending as he does that the literal interpretation of the Bible is all that is essential for salvation.

CLERICUS.

In reply to our honest, enthusiastic, and well meaning correspondent, "Clericus," we must say (at this late hour), as briefly as possible, that we are astonished and amazed to see that Bro. B. or any of his friends admit that there are "weak-minded and vacillating men and women in every communion," and that Elder Grant catches just such fish in his net, that do not regularly attend stated religious meetings elsewhere. Indeed, we do not want any better evidence that Eld. Grant is the right man in the right place, here in Rutland, than the very argument advanced by "Clericus" himself.

We have not heard Elder Grant preach for several years, but we will not see him slandered or imposed upon in this manner by other denominations, however sincere they may be.

We had always supposed that all statesmen favored the "literal" interpretation of the constitution; and that all christians desired to adhere to a "literal" interpretation of the Bible; but if, as "Clericus" construes it, the words and sentences in the Bible are to be taken in a figurative sense, then each and all can attach their own meaning to each and every portion of holy writ. Having no room this week for further remarks in reply to the above extraordinary and inconsistent attack upon Elder Grant, from a source least expected, we close our remarks by merely saying, that the very arguments advanced by our worthy, but mistaken correspondent, are, of themselves, sufficient to show that Eld. Grant is on the right track, and doing much good. If the other churches cannot retain their members, except by coercing them, and making it a high crime and misdemeanor to listen to Elder Grant, then, indeed, they admit that Rev. Mr. Grant is right and consistent, and that they are intolerant and bigoted.

We shall refer to this subject next week.

WHAT BISHOP COXE SAYS.

Bishop A. C. Coxe, who has just returned from Europe, when speaking of the present state of the world said:—

"Everything betokened the approaching dissolution of all things, and therefore it was the more necessary that we should earnestly strive for the faith once delivered to the saints. In doing this it is necessary to attack false systems, but this is no excuse for us to indulge in personal attacks upon individuals. It is a most degrading thing to live in times of great moral interest and yet be so immersed in personal or locally political matters as to care nothing for what affects the whole world. Since the time of the Reformation, when Luther burned the Pope's bull, there has never been a period so full of interest in the religious world as the present."

All have my gratitude and prayers, that the blessing of the Lord may rest upon them.

I feel that my personal labors must now be put forth in pastoral labors amongst our own people (Adventists), as I have done what I think the Lord would have me do in the Philadelphia mission field.

To those who have written and spoken to me about Minnie, I write, that she has an excellent home engaged for her care, and yesterday I obtained the consent of her grandmother to take her to it, in Lawrence, Mass. I still retain the guardianship of the child. Continue to pray for me. Your affectionate Bro. in Christ, F. H. BURBANK.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

Bro. Grant:—Will you permit me to acknowledge, through the Crisis, the receipt of gifts to the Freedmen, from friends in the North: Three packages of tracts; no name. A package of the Advent Herald; no name. A package of the Youth's Visitor; no name. Twenty Bibles and twenty Testaments, from the Bible House, Astor Place, N. Y. Two packages of The Wellspring, from Sarah M. Crowell, Barnard, Vt. Two dollars in money, from Mina A. Parmly, Ashland, O. A package of tracts and fifty cts., from Chas. Green, Phila., Pa. Twelve New Testaments, from Elder S. A. Chaplin, Pierceton, Ind. Two packages of The Young Pilgrim; no name.

Dear friends, excuse me for not acknowledging sooner. I have had my heart and hands full. I have closed my school, and am now in N. J. My health is very poor, but hope to get better after resting a few weeks. Pray for me, dear friends. I expect, if the Lord will, to return to the South in Sept. next. There is need of workers in the Southern field. May the Lord send forth laborers into his vineyard. I had sixty-three scholars when I commenced, but very few knew the alphabet, and now they can all read, except five or six,—some in the Fourth Reader. I never saw scholars before so apt to learn. Many thanks to you for kind words. I would say to Miss Mina Parmly, that her box of books had not come when I left; but I left directions what to do with them. I will write when I hear from them. Your sister in Christ, MRS. ROSETTA LANNING.

Melvin Village, N. H.

Speaking of the extinction of the western empire, and how it was abolished, he says:—

"By this proceeding, Rome passed into the hands of the barbarians, and the imperial power was legally transferred, by emperor, senate and people, to the east. Thus it continued until 536, when the emperor of the east sent against Rome his general, Belisarius, who took the city from the Ostrogoths, in full possession of that ancient seat of power. Thus the west and east were again united, and the imperial authority again existed in Rome.

"The objection frequently arises, Why not date the supremacy of the Pope in 533, when Justinian gave him supremacy in the church? The plain answer is, The dragon was to give his seat, as well as his power. But while the Goths held Rome, the emperor could not give it to the Pope. But in 538, when the city came again under the power of the emperor, the power was in his hands to give his ancient seat to the beast. And he did it.

"For after the retreat of the Goths from the walls of Rome, and the complete conquest of the city by Belisarius, Justinian called home that general and his army, leaving the Pope and Rome to protect themselves. From 538, therefore, the supremacy of the Pope in Rome, the seat of the dragon, commenced.

But it is again objected, that 'the Goths again returned, after the recall of Belisarius, and retook the city.' True, but this only presents another evidence of the supremacy of the Pope in Rome, and that he looked upon himself as the master of the city. For Gibbon informs us that on this occasion the Pope made a personal journey from Rome to Constantinople, to arouse the decaying energies of Justinian, and induce him to send another army to repel the invaders. And at the instigation and importunity of the Pope, it was done. Narses the eunuch, the successor of Belisarius, defeated the Goths A. D. 552, and achieved the conquest of Rome.

"'As soon,' says Gibbon, 'as Narses had paid his devotion to the author of victory, and the blessed Virgin, his peculiar patroness, he praised, rewarded, and dismissed the Lombards. Neither the fortifications of Hadrian's mole, nor of the port, could long delay the progress of the conqueror; and Justinian once more received the keys of Rome, which under his reign had been five times taken and recived. During the reign of the barbarian kings in Rome, both the senatorial and consular power of Rome had been perpetuated; and Justinian, in his laws of 534, recognized them as then existing. But in a transcript of them, made in 540, says Ruter (Church Hist.), no notice whatever is taken of the consuls. So that between 534 and 540 it expired. * * * The city that had ruled the world, was as if in mockery of human greatness, was conquered by the eunuch Narses, the successor of Belisarius. He defeated the Goths (A. D. 552), achieved the conquest of Rome, and the fate of the senate was sealed.'

"Both the consular and senatorial power of Rome having thus expired, we should be led to inquire, Where was the supremacy of Rome vested? In the emperor, or his general? No. For the army of the emperor, under Narses, was withdrawn to Ravenna, and the civil government of the emperor over Italy was located in that city, under the title of Ex-arch of Ravenna. If the Pope was not left supreme in Rome, what was the supreme power? Twice Justinian conquered Rome, but neither time did he attempt to establish a civil government in the city. * * * The possession of Rome by the Pope, in 538, and onward, as the conquest of Justinian, was a gift of the dragon to the beast, who already possessed the dragon's power as head of the church, and 'the true and effective corrector of heretics.'"

He further says: "The forty-two months of the beast were to close by leading into captivity and putting him to death by the sword. Has such an event occurred? It most certainly has. It is a most notorious matter of history that on Feb. 10th, 1798, General Berthier, at the head of the republican army of France, entered the city of Rome and took it. On the 15th of the same month, the Pope and his cardinals were taken prisoners and shut up in the Vatican. The Papal government was abolished, and Rome and Italy, at the request of the people, was erected into the Roman republic. The Pope was carried a captive to France, where, in 1799, he died a prisoner and an exile. [See Dr. A. Clarke, on Dan. 7:25. Thiers' History of the French Revolution.] * * * A more distinct and literal fulfillment of prophecy never was recorded than we have in this instance. From 538, when the dragon gave his seat to the beast, to 1798, when that beast was led into captivity and killed with the sword, was 1260 years."

I wish to understand the truth, and wish to learn our whereabouts in the history of this world and our nearness to the coming of Christ. If the above be true, we are no doubt very near the final downfall of that wicked city that has ruled over the kings of the earth. C. H. S.

For the World's Crisis.

WAIT ON THE LORD.

Why should any grow weary in well-doing when the promised rest is so sure, so desirable, so glorious? Let us labor patiently, and wait patiently, and persevere in the appointed way, never murmuring at the path through which we are led. If we trust in the Lord, he will lead us in the very best way, and if it does not seem best to us, it is because we do not understand it. Now we only see in part and know in part. Let us believe that he is "Good when he gives, supremely good,

Nor less when he denies."

Have any grown weary in waiting for the coming of the Lord? He will surely come at the time appointed, and it can be but a "little while." Have you not seen the signs of his coming? You all know the signs mentioned in the twenty-fourth of Matthew—wars and rumors of wars; nation rising against nation, and kingdom against kingdom; famines, pestilences, earthquakes. Iniquity shall abound and the love of many wax cold, according to the prophecy. All these signs are fulfilled or being fulfilled before our eyes. Also the prophecy of Daniel that many should run to and fro, and knowledge be increased. This sign has certainly been fulfilled in this generation.

The sun has been darkened, the stars have fallen, and what sign now remains but the flaming sign of the Son of man coming with power and great glory? Then look up, and lift up your heads, for your redemption draweth near. "If the vision tarry, wait for it, because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Do trials and disappointments press heavily upon you in this waiting time? Are want and poverty your portion? It has ever been so. Ever since our blessed Master had not where to lay his head, there have been among his followers the weak, the poor and dependent. Though we read of a time when all who had possessions sold them and distributed to every one according to their need, yet that was an exceptional time. The poor have always been with and among his people, for "the poor ye have with you always." And all these afflictions shall work together for your good, if you belong to his family.

Then wait, yet a little longer, and deliverance will come. "Wait on the Lord: be of good courage, and he shall strengthen thine heart: wait, I say, on the Lord."

Webster, Mass. SUSAN S. CHAMBERLAIN.

Correspondence.

From Bro. Wm. Sheldon.

Bro. Grant:—On my return west, about the middle of May, I think of taking either the route by the way of Portland and Montreal, or by Rouses Point and Ogdensburgh. Any wishing a call on these lines may notify me, as I have no desire to call where I might not be wanted.

To inquirers concerning the titles and price of my forthcoming tracts, I would say a few words.

1. "Life and Death Theology" is the title of one, to contain 64 pp., more or less, to be sold at $5.00 per 100.
2. "Immaterialism" is the title of a 32 page tract—$2.50 per 100.
3. "The Coming Judgment, and its Result," 8 pp., 60 cts. per 100.
4. "Death and the Dead," 16 pp., $1.25 per 100.

All sending to aid me in scattering free will help a good enterprise, and all who order to scatter themselves shall have them on these terms. While unable to preach much, I wish to get out several other tracts on the cardinal principles of our faith, if I can obtain funds. Who will aid by obtaining quantities to scatter free? WM. SHELDON.

From Bro. P. A. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—Our discussion at Lake City came off according to advertisement; and I consider it a triumphant success for the cause of Bible truth in that part of Fla. The first night of the debate, we met at the City Hall; but it was too small, so the Methodist minister, Mr. Tidings, offered the free use of the Methodist meeting-house, in which to hold the debate. He kindly lit it up, attended every meeting, and treated us like a christian, for which I return to him my hearty thanks. He also said to his congregation the next Sunday, that they could perceive by the debate that the Bible did not say that a man had an immortal soul.

My opponent acknowledged one fact, worthy of notice—that when he first heard and read on this subject, he was very favorably impressed with the idea of its being true. He had handed him Jacob Blain's book, "Death not Life." He said it looked so plausible and reasonable, that he was inclined to believe it; but when he saw persons of better education than himself reject it, he saw that if he received it, he would have to give up his theology, so he rejected it as not the truth.

Our discussion lasted six evenings. After the fourth evening, which was Friday, I went out to the new meeting-house on the Suwannee, ten miles from Lake City, on Sunday. A young man who had attended the debate came over ten miles, and said he wanted to join the covenant. He had been convinced by the discussion that we were correct; and a number of others since then have told me that they were convinced, and they were with us now. I think it is the universal conviction, since the debate, that we have the truth. Yours in hope, P. A. SMITH.

From Bro. A. Damon.

Bro. Grant:—As some may be anxious to know where I am, and what I am doing, I will say to such that I have moved to Lake Village, N. H., and am still laboring with the Lord in his vineyard. We have had some very good meetings here of late. Some have started to serve the Lord; some wanderers have returned to the fold, and the devil has been cast out. Glory to God. We may have victory in Christ if we will. Saints of the living God, be strong. The battle waxes hot, but stand for the right; speak for God and not man. O ye, his servants, give the trumpet a certain sound. Don't get into market for sale, for one owns you, even Christ, and he is able to make you triumph at last. The kingdom is at hand. There is no time for delay. Dull tools will not do now. The sword that cuts must be brought into use, and wielded in the spirit of love. O God, marshal thy host on the field of battle, and turn the battle to the gate, and conquer the enemy, and come and reign at last. ALLEN DAMON.

P. S.—My address is Lake Village, N. H.

From Bro. A. H. Brown.

Bro. Grant:—I have been reading the last number of the Advent Christian Quarterly and must say that it contains as clear and forcible statements of our views as I have ever seen on the nature of man. The first article, entitled "Immaterialism; or Soul-Immortality Refuted," by Bro. Sheldon, is well calculated to clear away the mist from many minds who have been befogged by the teachings of men who have taken for their basis the doctrine of the natural immortality of the soul. The other article on the nature of man, to which I call attention, is a Review of Professor Bartlett, by Henry Constable. The candid and dispassionate manner in which the review is made, will commend itself to the judgment of every unprejudiced person. Let it have a wide circulation, for both articles must produce a tremendous effect upon all who read them. The Advent Christian Quarterly is filling an important place in our literature. Let it be sustained.

Rahway, N. J. A. H. BROWN.

From Bro. W. A. Sheffield.

Bro. Grant:—The discussion, of which previous notice was given in the Crisis a few weeks since, closed on the 18th inst., in Lake City, Fla. Subject: "Resolved, That the Bible teaches that the dead are unconscious from death until the resurrection." Elder P. A. Smith took the affirmative, and Rev. Mr. McCallam, Miss. Baptist, took the negative. Eld. Smith produced all the Bible quotations usually done to sustain our views on the subject; and Mr. McCallam quoted the thief on the cross, rich man and Lazarus, smoke of their torment, etc., etc. He also affirmed that the terms life, death, destruction, were not always used in their literal sense, which enabled him to work his way through from Dan to Beersheba, in less time than it takes me to write it. He thought that as the heathen believe in the immortality of the soul, it was conclusive evidence that God had instilled it as a kind of instinct in man. The discussion lasted six nights, and while the faith of the faithful was increased, the prejudice of the prejudiced was also increased; yet some, who were not fenced in by popular creeds, admitted that the Bible did not teach that man had an immortal soul; and I seriously hope much good may result from the discussion.

I have just received the Crisis of the 23d inst., freighted with Bible truths, and good articles from Bro. Blain, Sheldon, Clark, and others. O how much I wish we had a dozen such inestimable men in Florida. May God abundantly bless them, and all other faithful laborers. Will not the church respond to Bro. Blain? The writer of this would most assuredly, but for recent pecuniary loss of nearly half he possessed by fire; being left without bedding, clothing, or comfortable shelter, for self or family. I loaned a copy of his work, "Death not Life," to an intelligent gentleman, who said, after reading it, that we had the proper view of the plan of salvation, beyond a doubt. He is now an advocate of the faith. Yours in hope of eternal life, W. A. SHEFFIELD.

Benton P. O., Columbia City, Fla.

From Sr. N. M. Winship.

Dear Brethren and Sisters:—We read in the Scriptures that "we ought always to pray, and not to faint." The apostle Paul tells us to "pray without ceasing," in all things giving thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus. Why should we willingly disobey Him who has given his life a ransom for all those who will believe on him and do his will. Jesus is our pattern. He prayed at all times, and in all places, in Gethsemane, to his Father, on the cross, for his friends, likewise for his enemies. Is it not our duty, as followers of that meek and lowly Jesus, to aim to imitate him as closely as we can while in this mortal state? Prayer is one of the christian's strongholds. It supports and strengthens him, buoys him up far above all the perplexing scenes of this vain and sinful world.

How true it is that when we cease to pray, we also cease to love the things of God. His ways seem less pleasing, his promises less precious; and at last we find ourselves backsliders from his word. O how much we need to watch and pray in these last and trying times, that we be not overcome with the wickedness which surrounds us on either side.

The prayer of the righteous availeth much. Therefore, if we are right in the sight of the Lord, and pray in the Spirit, he will in no wise turn a deaf ear to our supplications, but will hear and answer.

How cheering it is to know we have such a friend in Jesus, who will never leave nor forsake us; the same yesterday, to-day, and forever; one in whom we can put our trust, to whom we may carry everything in prayer. How important that we as a people should strive to live nearer the throne of grace, that we might be filled with the love of Christ; keep his commandments, that we may have right to the tree of life, and live forever in the kingdom of God.

Hartford, Ct. Nellie M. Winship.

From Bro. C. Pike.

Bro. Grant:—I have spent two weeks with the church at West Hoosick. The Lord blest us wonderfully. Quite a number started for the kingdom. Fifteen were immersed, and seventeen united with the church. Others feel that they ought to go; and I think will. They are a united people, and it was good for me to be in their midst. After sitting together for two weeks in heavenly places in Christ Jesus, it was hard to separate; but by-and-by Jesus will come, and we will all be gathered home. My prayer is—

"Fly swifter round ye wheels of time,
And bring the welcome day."

Hebron, N. Y. C. Pike.

Bro. B. L. Harrison writes:—"We are having some of the best meetings we ever had in Hoosick, N. Y., and the Lord is with us in power. There has been much seed sown here, and, thank the Lord, it is coming up all around us. Fifteen have been baptized by Bro. Pike, and sixteen added to the church."

THE SUDDEN ARMING IN EUROPE.

But the other day the political songsters of the European press were attuning their softest accords to celebrate the certain coming and permanence of peace. We on this side of the Atlantic joined gladly in the chorus for a moment, hoping that much for progress and humanity. But now, it seems, the tune has very suddenly changed. The din of dreadful preparation is heard from the Danube to the shores of the Baltic. The Northern Colossus, Russia, is concentrating heavy corps d' armee on the Austrian and Prussian frontiers; Prussia is pushing her fortifications and her equipment of troops with improved weapons with the utmost haste. In some of her arsenals and strongholds the work is continued by reliefs of men all night. The German journals say that the directors of the gymnasia and other secondary institutions have been notified by the authorities to transmit a complete list of all professors subject to military service, yet indispensable for the duties of instruction, but to restrict the number as much as possible, so as to exclude all the day tutors and all professors who have any rank in the army—this step to be taken in view of a possible mobilization of the latter.

In the Saxon army, which, of course, is to move in alliance with the Prussian, there is a general stir. All the new recruits and soldiers, as well as officers on furlough, have been recalled to their respective garrisons to participate in the grand manœuvres or to complete their instruction. The officers repair in crowds to Berlin, Spandau and other Prussian cities and camps to brush up their gymnastics, artillery practice, etc. The complaints of Denmark in reference to the non-execution of the fifth article of the Treaty of Prague have placed the Austrian Cabinet where it must decide definitely upon the course it is to pursue on that subject, and this just at a time when the various nationalities that make up her empire are all clamoring for special recognition. Thus Austria sees trouble outside and inside of her frontiers, and little Denmark in real alarm is thinking how to defend Copenhagen from possible bombardment by a German fleet. At the same moment we find—General Cialdini, the best soldier that Italy has of high rank in her service, resigning because the army is to be reduced at a crisis—as he seems to consider it—in the fate of his country and of Europe. In the meantime his holiness graces repeated military reviews at Rome with his presence and that of his cardinals; puts squads of infantry through the manual in the galleries of the Vatican, giving the word of command with his own Pontifical lips, and is said to be collecting arms and ammunition for two hundred thousand men. Spain swarms with armed bands, regular and irregular; and now Portugal begins to take a hand in the dance. In all directions and all countries trade strikes are rife, and in some of them are suppressed by ball and bayonet.

Such is the general situation, and, with regard to the sudden armaments, the question naturally arises, What is now in the wind? Is it the plebiscitum, the infallibility dogma or the revolution, or the conjunction of all three together, that so shakes the potentates from their propriety? In a former article we hinted at the contingency of a grand northern alliance to meet the eventualities that may arise in France, and we are inclined to seek for the explanation of what we now find going on in that same hypothesis. Should the new constitution triumph in France all monarchial Europe will instantly feel the thrill of reform. Should it fall there is imminent danger of an insurrection, a coup d'etat or a foreign war, to be got up by the Emperor in order to divert the minds of his people. In any case it is evident that the old world foresees another political earthquake.—N. Y. Herald.

THE ROPE-TYING TRICK.

I suppose that the dupes of Davenport brothers thought, and think now, if the conjurers are still performing, that the rope-tying trick is a novelty. No such thing. A century ago a Moravian missionary told of Greenland sorcerers who did it to perfection. One of them would put his head between his legs, and his arms behind his back, and allow himself to be bound secure. Then the lamps were put out, and windows darkened, while it was said the angekok went to the spirit world. No one was to move or scratch his head during the performance, for fear the spiritual agencies should be disturbed. Presently there would be hideous noises, and after a while the messenger was shown, pale and excited and unbound.

The Shamans of Siberia are also adepts at this rope business. They sit down and are bound hand and foot, darkness is produced, and the spirits are invoked. Then are ghostly noises heard; bears growl, snakes hiss, raps are made, squirrels leap about the room. When quiet is restored, in walk the Shamans free and unfettered. Did the Davenports take a hint from either of these savages?

And while we are on the spirit tapis, may we ask where Mr. Home graduated in furniture moving and air floating? Was it among the Budhists, whose tiptop saints are said to be able to rise in the air without balloons? Or did he learn the secret of that Archbishop of Bantonbury who was one day found skimming about beneath the ceiling of the cathedral, taking a spiritual airing?

Once more, how about "planchette?" Do you know how a Chinese consults his god?—Two of them hold a stick with its point in a dish of sand set before the image; the deity is invoked, and the stick wriggled, the scrawl it makes being interpreted somehow or other as an answer to the question asked. It is of no use sending planchettes to the Celestials.—Fugitive Notes in Cassell's Magazine.

☞ It is thought the Mount Cenis tunnel will be completed about the end of January, 1871.

Obituaries.

Terry. Died very suddenly in Brooklyn, N. Y., May 15th, Dr. John B. Terry, aged sixty-four years.

The old '43 pilgrims, who were acquainted in Hartford, will recollect him, especially the many who shared the hospitalities of his home. Having been from this city most of the time for many years, we have not been as well acquainted with his daily experience as formerly, but know from repeated conversations with him that his hope all centered in the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. He leaves a widow and two daughters, with whom the church in Hartford deeply sympathize. H. H. D.

Shurtliff. In Hartford, Conn., April 12th, Sister M. Shurtliff, aged sixty-three years.

Sister S. has been identified with the Advent church of this city from its origin. Her walk has been consistent with the faith she has professed, and although her trials have been heavy, she has never lost her confidence. She was left a widow in early life, with a family of children, some of whom have fallen asleep, while others remain to this present. Her only hope was that she might share in the kingdom of God, which she expected soon to be revealed. Services at the funeral by the writer. H. H. D.

Barnes. Died in Worcester, of consumption of the blood, Mary Ellen Barnes, daughter of S. S. Barnes, aged twenty-three years.

Sister Barnes became fully convinced of life and immortality only through Christ, and signifying her wish to remove her relation from the Methodist church to the Advent before her death, saying that she wanted to die with us, as one looking for reward at the coming of Jesus. May God give sustaining grace to the parents, who are now passing through severe trials. Soon we shall

"Sit by the banks of the river,
With the friends we have loved by our side."

S. Ayres.

Stuart. Died in Burke, Franklin Co., N. Y., March 8th, 1870, after a long and painful illness, Edwin M., eldest son of Marvin and Sophronia Stuart, aged twenty-two years and four months.

"I am the resurrection and the life,"
Said Jesus to the weeping ones;
Then fear not, faint not if cold death
Has closed his eyes and chill'd his breath,
Assure thy hope, confirm thy faith,
Edwin to life shall come.

M. Stuart.

Anderson. Died in Richmond, Me., March 15th, 1870, Willie, son of Charles R. and Jennie Anderson, aged three years and six days.

Words of comfort were spoken by Bro. A. H. Walker, from Matt. 5: 4. B. S. Emery.

Married.

NASH—WILLARD. At Thomaston, Me., April 15th, by Eld. J. K. Mason, Mr. John B. Nash, of Thomaston, and Miss Manti A. Willard, of Tenant's Harbor, Me.

TOTMAN—BOOKER. In Richmond, April 24th, 1870, by H. D. Reed, Mr. Alonzo Totman, of Richmond, and Miss Marilla A. Booker, of Gardiner.

COLEMAN—SOPER. In Leeds, Maine, April 17th, at the residence of the bride's father, by Wm H. Doughty, Mr. John Coleman, and Miss Sarah R. Soper, both of Leeds.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Madrid, April 25. Violent quarrels have broken out in the Spanish Cabinet and the partisans of the Duke of Montpensier are gaining ground. A rising in favor of the Prince of the Asturias is threatened.

Paris, April 25. The Journal Officiel contains the following circular to officers of the civil service, signed by all the Ministers:

"The Emperor addresses a solemn appeal to the nation. In 1852 he asked the power to assure order. In 1870 he asks the power to establish liberty. Confident of the title, which is his by reason of eight million suffrages, he does not surrender the Empire to discussion. He submits to vote only its liberal transformation. To vote 'yes,' is to vote for liberty. The revolutionary party, secretly attacking the national sovereignty, and misrepresenting the respect which the Emperor pays to that sovereignty in thus consulting the people, are not the true friends of liberty; but, in spite of these, the masses will march in our ranks. Can they ignore the fact, that to abstain from voting, or to vote 'no,' will be to strengthen those who only combat the transformation of the Empire in order that they may destroy it, and with it the political and social organization to which France owes her greatness? In the name of public peace and liberty—in the name of the Emperor—we demand of you all, our devoted co-laborers, to unite your efforts with ours. It is to the citizens we address ourselves—not as ordering, but as offering patriotic counsel; our object, to assure to our country a tranquil future, to the end that on the throne, as in the humblest dwelling, the son may succeed the father in peace and quiet."

It is reported to-day that the disaffection in the party of the Left has been healed, and that the members will all vote alike.

April 26. A number of Carlists, returning to France, have been arrested and compelled to remain at their places of abode. Several of the leaders have been seized on the Spanish frontier.

April 27. The Madrid Epoca of yesterday says it is assured that Prince Frederick of Prussia is the candidate of the Government for the throne of Spain, but that the Emperor Napoleon has declared to Senor Olozaga, the Spanish Ambassador at Paris, that this solution of the question would be so grave that it might be the cause of a war between France and Prussia.

April 28. Many of the political meetings held throughout the country yesterday were excited and turbulent. In all of those which assembled in this city shouts of "Vive la Republiqe" were heard. Prime Minister Ollivier was violently attacked by the speakers, who styled him a renegade and a traitor. On the breaking up of the meeting the cries for a Republic were repeated, and in many cases the people separated singing the "Marseillase." No rioting has occurred anywhere. Baron Liebig, the eminent chemist, is dangerously ill.

Madrid, April 27. Great impatience is manifested by the press at the prolongation of the provisional form of government, and the agitation in political circles is increasing. Serrano has said that he will accept even a Republic if General Prim will agree to it.

London, April 27. The Powers have received from the Sublime Porte a protest against the raising of a loan by the Viceroy of Egypt. The Sultan also remonstrates with the Roumanian Government for coining money at its own mint.

The Austrian and Hungarian bishops have hastened their return to Rome to vote against the dogma of infallibility.

The other Powers will support the action of France in regard to the decision of the Ecumenical Council.

M. Bismark is convalescent, and may be expected in Berlin about the 8th of May.

The commercial treaty between the North German Confederation and Mexico has been ratified.

Florence, April 26. The citizens of Florence have instituted a subscription for a statue to Savonarolo as a protest against the Ecumenical Council. A large sum of money has already been subscribed.

Athens, April 26. The force in pursuit of the brigands has succeeded in killing or capturing the entire party.

Rome, April 26. In the Ecumenical Council today the six hundred fathers voted with one voice for the constitutio de fide.

Alexandria, April 30. The Pacha's palace at Ramleh, near this city, was burned to the ground yesterday. The loss is very heavy.

Paris, April 30. Reports are rife in this city of a new plot discovered by the police against the State and the life of the Emperor.

It is alleged that yesterday a deserter from the army—a non-commissioned officer—was arrested in a hotel in the Rue Montmartre, who had in his possession a letter from Gustave Flourens, and a note containing instructions for his part in the execution of the conspiracy.

The Figaro says a part of the design of the plotters was to blow up the Palace of the Tuileries and the Prefecture of Police.

The Journal Officiel of to-day announces that the police have been for some time on the track of a plot against the life of the Emperor. Yesterday morning one Beauri, recently arrived from England, was arrested in the Rue des Moulons, whereby the plot is completly discovered.

Foreign Gossip.—The important strikes now in progress in France are signs of an approaching storm it seems impossible to avert. At Fouchambault the workmen have committed serious ravages in the shops where they were employed, and large numbers of troops were directed against them by order of the Minister of War. Women mingle in the riotous crowds of workmen, and take an active part in the violent demonstrations.

It has been announced that all strikes will hereafter be put down vi et armis, but this announcement is not heeded by the workmen, who are quite ready to fight.

The new constitution submitted to the French people, to be voted on the 1st to the 9th of May, inclusive, is one of the most illiberal ever put forth before an intelligent people. By it Napoleon has the Council of State, the Senate, and the Corps Legislatif in his hands, and has the whip hand on all the ambitious schemers. More than one-half the votes cast will be blank, so great is the desire of the bourgeois to leave their Cæsar in doubt as to what they think of him.

The most thorough diplomatic scare Europe has had for some time was the other day, when a lively exchange of dispatches took place between Paris Vienna and Berlin, relative to the last discourse pronounced by the Grand Duke of Baden at the closing of his Parliament. He was, he confessed, partisan for the annexation of the country to Prussia, and the other governments are now at work endeavoring to find out if his subjects are of the same opinion. If so, trouble is imminent.—Boston Journal, April 30th, 1870.

DOMESTIC.

Chicago, April 26, 1870. From information received at Gen. Sherman's headquarters it appears that the Brute and Sioux Indians on the Grand River, Whitestone and Big Cheyenne reservations, in Dakota, are again making trouble, threatening to kill the government employes among them, shooting down cattle and subjecting the agents to all sorts of abuse. The savages number about 12,000, and are divided into about half a dozen different bands. Most of the trouble has been and is now experienced on the grand River reservation. The Fourteenth and Seventeenth infantry which have been ordered to the scene of trouble, will reach there about the 1st of May. They will not make any hostile demonstrations against the Brutes unless the necessity demands it; but Gen. Sheridan says he will make these Indians behave themselves, and if they do not, will use vigorous measures to put them down. The Yankton Sioux, in the same vicinity, are peaceful.

Protest against the Infallibility Dogma.—The Roman correspondent of the New York Herald says a protest against the infallibility dogma, signed by many of the bishops attending the Ecumenical Council, has been presented to the Pope. The principal reasons assigned for their opposition were these:

"On account of the circumstances in which we are placed in countries where heresies not only exist with impunity, but are dominant, this definition, instead of attracting, would alienate those whom we seek by all christian means to lead to the true fold of Christ.

We anticipate endless questions will arise which may interfere with and prevent the work of our ministry and cause the fruits of this council to be lost to those who are members of the holy Catholic Church."

Passing Events.

☞ The governments in the North German League are active in promoting scientific education. Prussia has just erected a laboratory for instruction in Berlin, which cost $240,000, and another at Bonn almost as expensive. In Leipsic $150,000 have been appropriated for one new building. The Grand Duke of Baden has completed a building for the Carlsrune Polytechnic school, which will hold six hundred students of science.

☞ Country girls are decoyed into bad houses in London by advertisements of places for work. A recent trial discovered the fact that hundreds of girls had been ruined in this way by a single firm.

☞ England has five hundred blast furnaces, which every year reduce twelve million tons of ore to four millions eight hundred tons of metal, and which consume fourteen million tons of coal. The manufactured metal is worth about $60,000,000.

☞ A treaty with Spain has been made and exchanged.

☞ Twelve ocean steamers, measuring 15,000 tons, are employed in the fruit trade between southern ports and New York.

☞ It is reported that Father Hyacinthe has been converted to Protestantism, and is about committing matrimony and taking charge of a Lutheran church.

☞ Baron Lesseps states that the receipts from vessels passing through the Suez Canal are far ahead of the most sanguine expectations. Up to the 15th of March two hundred steamers and nine sailing vessels had passed through, the tolls amounting to 24,525 pounds.

☞ The press of New York is striving hard to secure free public baths in that city before the arrival of warm weather.

☞ The treatment of lunatics is exciting much attention in England.

☞ There are two hundred and fifty-nine homœopathic physicians in Massachusetts.

☞ The London Daily News says that Mr. Bright's medical advisers have forbidden his resuming parliamentary work this session.

☞ There has been a terrible water famine in Jerusalem. Dearth of this necessary has long been the great drawback of that city, and last year Miss Burdett Coutts, with extraordinary munificence, offered to spend £30,000 in providing it. The Turkish government, from some ridiculous feeling of jealousy, it is supposed, declined the offer, and hinted its intention of taking measures to supply the want. However, nothing has been done, and latterly the distress has been terrible.

☞ The Republican Review is the name of a new weekly magazine to be started in April, in Paris, and the editors propose to procure original articles from prominent American writers, and translate them into French. The work will deal largely with the interests of working-men.

☞ There is no other spoken language so cheap and expressive by telegraph as the English. So the electric wires are becoming teachers of our mother tongue in foreign countries. The same amount of information can be transmitted in fewer English words than French, German, Italian, or any other European language. In Germany, and Holland especially, it is coming to be a common thing to see telegrams in English, to save expense and insure precision.

☞ The War Department has ordered the removal of the Fourteenth and Seventeenth regiments from Virginia and Kentucky to Dakota. It is supposed that they go there to aid in maintaining neutrality in connection with the British movement of troops toward Red River.

☞ A political demonstration of a peculiar character took place recently at Lyons. A quadrille was composed to the music of the "Marseillaise," the "Caira" and other revolutionary airs, and danced by an enthusiastic crowd in one of the grand public saloons of the city. At least five thousand persons were present, and they joined in the chorus of each air with tremendous enthusiasm.

☞ The sun's spots are now numerous and interesting, and can be seen with a smoked glass. The planet Saturn is in a peculiarly favorable position for observation, with the rings at their fullest opening.

☞ The London Spectator says that "it is almost incredible that Napoleon should expose his dynasty to so useless a danger" as appealing to the people "against his Legislature, and against his own responsible ministry."

☞ Twenty-one of the American prelates now in Rome protest against any announcement of the infallibility of the Pope.

Religious Items.

☞ The largest Sunday school in the world is at Stockport England. It has three hundred teachers and five thousand scholars.

☞ The Bishop of Jerusalem states that there are twenty-four Protestant schools in Palestine, in which one thousand children are taught the Bible.

☞ The Baptist church in Paris would not be allowed to immerse their converts in the Seine, or in public anywhere. As their place of worship will not admit a baptistery, there are obliged, in baptizing a convert, to bring in a large box for the purpose.

☞ There are thirteen different branches of the Presbyterian church in this country.

☞ Judea has less Jews than New York city.

☞ The Pope is said to have forbidden the Bishops to meet for discussion in private.

☞ The cholera has made its appearance at St. Petersburgh.

THINGS HOPED FOR.

Brighter and better days are on the dawn,
The time the King long waited for is near:
Shadows of a heavenly shape and beauty
Forecast themselves upon the world, and tell
Of substances that follow fast behind.
The years have pregnant grown with destinies,
And now are writhing in the pains of travail:
Events undreamt of struggle to the birth,
Which shall strike dumb with awe a slumbering world. —The Rainbow.

Evening Hours.

BY

E. P. Woodward.

"In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand." Eccles. 11:6.

PARALLEL CASES.

An argument when analyzed and expressed in form, is called a syllogism. All arguments may be expressed in syllogistic form, though this is seldom done; and all arguments derive their force from that connection of cause and effect which we see in a syllogism, though we are not apt to trace this connection in all cases.

A syllogism is always composed of three statements or propositions. Of these propositions, two are termed the premises, and one, the conclusion. One premise, which is laid down as a sort of general principle to be recognized in the argument, is called the major premise; the other, which is a sort of example, real or supposed, to which this principle will apply, is called the minor premise.

And the force of correct reasoning is seen when expressed in this form;—admitting the premises, (which must always be done, or there can be no argument), we must admit the conclusion. It makes no difference how absurd or false the conclusion may be, so long as we admit the premises, we cannot avoid the conclusion. This is true, however, only of a syllogism properly constructed, since two propositions might be taken together as major and minor premise, from which no conclusion of any kind could possibly arise. So that with this exception, the only way to avoid the conclusion, is by denying the premises, one or both.

For instance,

"Every dispensation of Providence is beneficial;
All afflictions are dispensations of Providence
Therefore all afflictions are beneficial,"— is an example of a syllogism, whose conclusion is doubted by very many, some in consequence of denying the major premise, some, the minor, and some, both. But with an admission of the correctness of the two premises, as foundations on which the structure rests, to all minds blessed with sound common sense, comes an inevitable assent to the conclusion.

One of the advantages of this analysis of argument is that it makes more clear the correctness of a fair, legitimate conclusion, and the incorrectness of an unfair one, by showing the exact point in the argument whence the conclusion derives its greatest strength, or its greatest weakness.

But along with this advantage is a disadvantage which has led some to condemn the syllogism altogether. An argument which would be instantly rejected as inconclusive, if presented in the simple form of ordinary conversation, may be so expressed in a syllogistic form, as to make the fallacy which really exists in it, almost impossible of detection. You perhaps cannot admit the conclusion, yet would be sorely puzzled to show a flaw in the argument, or point out a mistake in the premises. And so perhaps you give your assent to that which at first sight would have been rejected as false, had there been thrown around it no chain of words and forms which you know not how to break.

Take the following, frequently used by those who believe in the conscious state of the dead:—

"God is not the God of the dead, but of the living,
He is the God of Abraham:
Therefore Abraham is now living."

Now no one will deny the premises, yet many doubt the conclusion, which certainly follows if the premises are correct. How then can we avoid the conclusion? The whole question turns, not on the correctness of the proposition, nor on the justness of the argument, but on the use of terms. And we can settle that in no better way than by ascertaining the point which was designed to be proved by Him who first used this argument. If by "living" He meant "alive and conscious at that time," then Abraham is now "alive and conscious." There is no way to avoid the conclusion. This view is held by the majority of Christians. If Christ was trying to prove the conscious state of the dead, he certainly proved it beyond all power of counter-argument. If he was trying to prove future life for those who were then dead, his argument is utterly valueless to prove the conscious state of the dead. What the design of the argument really is, it would seem that no one need doubt. And that men think differently, must be owing to something outside of the words used by Christ.

A "parallel" syllogism is sometimes adduced by those who dissent from the opinions of the majority on this point, as follows:—

"The Devil testified that Christ was the Son of God;
The Devil is a liar, and there is no truth in him:
Therefore, his testimony is false."

We must admit the premises, yet we cannot accept the conclusion. There is a fallacy somewhere. As far as that is concerned, the cases are parallel, but no farther. The fault in the first argument is a lack of discrimination in the use of terms; in the second, the ignoring of the fact that the Devil for once acted contrary to his nature. He is a liar, generally and customarily, yet for once he spoke the truth. Shall we try to explain the seeming incorrectness of argument in the first case by this rule?

Such a "parallel" as this can have only one result, to confirm people in the belief that syllogism No. 1. is correctly stated, and warrants the inference that the dead are conscious. The two cases are not parallel, except that both are fallacious, and few persons will believe it if they are called so. There cannot be too much care taken to appeal only to that which will warrant the appeal. A truer, safer way is to show where the fallacy lies, and let "parallel cases" alone.

THE NAMELESS.

BY J. C. JACKSON, M. D.

"Well, husband!"

"Well, dear!"

"Why have you brought that ragged boy home with you?"

"Because I could not help it."

"He is dirty."

"I know he is."

"And ragged."

"I see he is."

"And I believe has got the itch."

"Perhaps so."

"Have you touched him with your hands."

"Yes."

"What a man you are!"

"Am I, dear?"

"Yes. What could induce you to bring this ragamuffin into our home?"

(Husband shivers) "I am cold, Laura. It is a November day this." (Wife ever active to anything which makes for her darling husband's comfort rises from her chair, puts wood into the stove and then in a softened voice says,

"But, Henry, what did make you bring this object home?"

"Because he is an object."

"Of what I pray?"

"Of pity."

"And disgust," said the wife.

"Yes, dear, I admit that," replied the husband.

"Then I do not see why you brought him home?"

"Do you wish to see?"

"Yes."

"Really, wife?"

"Yes."

"Then, I will tell you."

"I should like to hear your reason, husband, for I am sure you love me and would not readily give me pain, and must know that I should feel sick at having such a creature in the house, so I am anxious for an explanation. Please begin."

"I will. To-day is Sunday—your Sabbath and mine. I had been to church and had had what is called a 'blessed occasion.' Your Lord and my Master was there. He asked me a good many heart-searching questions. They were put in so low tone as to be inaudible to all but myself. Among others he asked me how I was thriving in business, and I told him truthfully that I was prosperous; that everything I touched turned into gold. As I said this I looked into his face, and I imagined it wore a shade of care as though my prosperity troubled him. I determined therefore to ask and if need be urge him to come home with me and be our guest, knowing how great pleasure it would give my wife as well as myself to entertain him. Accordingly I did ask him. He declined. I pressed him, and at last just as I thought he was about to yield to my importunity he said, 'The poor ye have always with you, but me ye have not always.' I raised my head to look at him and he had vanished. Meantime meeting had closed and all the people had gone away. How long I had been alone I did not know, but I took my staff and with hurried steps walked homeward. I confess to you, Laura, I was disappointed; I had hoped to bring you an illustrious guest. One to entertain whom you would have taken as much pains as Martha did of old, one who in being our guest would have had opportunity to see how happily we live, and having partaken of our hospitality would on parting from us, have given us a special blessing. I was as you see disappointed. As I walked along full of my sense of disappointment, just the other side of the mill-pond bridge, on that square bit of timber that lies by the roadside, sat this boy, and as sure as I am now alive and not crazy, your Lord and my Master stood by his side. He looked on me with a smile of infinite loveliness, pointed to the lad, repeated the words he uttered in the meeting-house and vanished. Laura, I stood rebuked. I saw myself not as in a glass darkly, but as in his face. My pride fled and I was humbled. I took the lad by the hand, and vowed to my Master that I would feed the hungry, clothe the naked, visit the sick, raise up the fallen and patiently wait his own time to come to our house and be our guest. Now, darling, here is my boy, there is the door. Open it and turn the boy out. The day is bleak and cold. The air bites like a nipping frost. He is thinly clad, and I doubt not is hungry and has nowhere to go. Take the responsibility, darling, I cannot do it, nor against your wishes can I insist on his stay. This house is as truly yours as it is mine, and you have authoritative voice here as well as I have. If you do turn him out, as soon as the doors of our dwelling are closed against him, I must provide for him, or else I shall never see Christ again save as my judge."

As he ceased speaking a pair of arms were thrown around his neck and the words, "Forgive me, dear! I was wrong," were whispered in his ear, and Christ Jesus remained her Lord as he did her husband's.

Meanwhile the boy sat in the corner getting the cold out of his half frozen limbs. He was somewhere between six and sixteen years of age. No one could tell approximately what his age was. Look him straight in the face and he appeared prematurely old. Take a profile view and he looked like a mere child. The same was true of his aspect. Look at him directly, and his face was wan and haggard and unpleasant. Take a side look and he was singularly beautiful. Poor boy! How from his large deep-set eyes his soul gazed out and carried back intelligence to his consciousness. He comprehended as all bright children do, so much more than grown persons think they do, who in unguarded moments talk freely in their presence. He saw that to the woman dressed in her satin and lace he was an object of deep aversion, while to the man he was an object of pity; and though he could not reason it out as he could were he older, he could feel the truth that of all social conditions that is the most to be deplored, where one dwells between the disgrace and pity of his fellows. He said nothing though he kept watch of every word, and hoped Pity would prevail. As the woman seemed to prevail the ice gathered round his heart; as the man seemed to gain ground his heart grew warm, and when she went up and kissed her husband and whispered in his ear, he knew that he was to stay by a warm fire and have food, and he laughed. That laugh did wonders for him. It interpenetrated the depths of the woman's nature and warmed up all her better instincts. What power there is in a smile; and if so, how much more is in a laugh. There is no music like laughter. It is as subtle as heat. It penetrated where no other influence will. It thaws the frostiness of human nature and elasticizes his being. The boy's laugh had this effect on her. She did not think of his rags any more. She forgot that he might have the itch, and that he was dirty and disgusting. What bright sunshine with its warming rays is to a dyspeptic when it bursts on him in a cold dismal day, this boy's laugh was to this woman. It brought all the nobility of her nature of which she had a great deal, to the surface, and it did it so suddenly that it startled her. The urchin was safe. Stepping up to him the woman said, "Lad, are you hungry?"

"Yes, ma'am."

She started. What made her start? It was because of a real or fancied resemblance of the boy's voice to that of a dear brother of hers who when about this boy's age took journey skyward. This lad's "Yes, ma'am" was toned so exactly on the key—soft, deep and mellow—of that brother's, that it startled her. It was well that it did, for it gave an additional lift to her humanity. Never before had her religion been of the type which it was at that moment. She saw that love to man was an active element in a Divine religion, that to pray sonorously, go to church regularly, give money for foreign missions, and turn beggar boys into the streets to starve and freeze, was not the Savior's way of showing true love to God.

"Well, husband," said she, "What shall we do with our waif?"

"I will take him, wash him and put clean clothes on him, after he has had something to eat. He looks pinched—half starved." The boy got off the chair; he looked like a dwarfed old man. "Am I going to stay?" he asked.

"Yes, my lad, you are," the man said.

"Good!" the boy exclaimed.

"Why so?" the woman inquired.

"Because here I shall have a good home. I shall like to live with you. I shall have a warm bed, have good food, clothes that are not ragged, newspapers to read, and something to do."

"Do you like to work?"

"I do."

"At what?"

"Anything which I can do. I can milk a cow, clean a horse, black boots, weed onions, run of errands, tend baby—(here he smiled again which affected the man as much as the former smile did the woman)—O, I can do a deal of things, and what I cannot now do, I can learn to do."

"Why, you can make yourself useful."

"Not only useful but grateful."

"What is your name?"

"Harry."

"A pleasant name."

"Yes, when one is called by it."

"Have you not been called by it?"

"No, I go by the name of the ragged boy. I am nameless so far as not being called by one's name makes one so."

"Where did you come from?"

"I do not know."

"How came you here?"

"I was brought here in a wagon."

"Who brought you?"

"I do not know."

"How did you get to the spot where I found you?" asked the man.

"The man took me out of the wagon, set me down on the road side about an hour before you came along, told me to stay there till some one came and took me up. So I waited for you."

"But how did you know that I was the person?"

"As soon as I saw you my heart went out to you, I loved you like a father."

"My lad, I will give you a chance to be a son. Now come and have something to eat."

"If you would as lief, I would prefer to wash and put on clean clothes first. I think I should relish my food better."

"So be it then. Come with me and in half an hour you shall be clean and warmly clad."

Thus ended the sermon which on that Sabbath day Christ preached to that man and his wife. As they wrought it up into their lives, they felt happier for having copied their Heavenly Father's plan of not giving stones to His little ones when they ask for bread.—Laws of Life.

THE VAIL TAKEN AWAY.

BRO. GRANT:—Believing the following letter will serve the cause of Christ, I send it for publication to the Crisis, by permission of the author. I received from this faithful sister a letter of inquiry on several texts, which she had been taught to believe were proofs that the seventh-day Sabbath was binding on christians. She had been conscientiously trying for several years to keep it. The following is her reply to my answer, with references also to my previous visit at her place. I. C. WELLCOME.

"Eld. Wellcome:—Dear Bro in Christ,—I received your very kind letter, in answer to my inquiry, the 27th, and be assured it was thankfully received. Ever since you was here, my mind has been undergoing a great change. I have given up the seventh-day Sabbath, never to be troubled with it again. I trust I have studied the Bible faithfully, with a desire to know and do the will of my heavenly Father. I did firmly believe it was my duty, in obedience to the law of God, to keep the ten commandments of the old covenant, just as they were given in the decalogue; but by carefully and prayerfully studying the word of God, the scales have fallen from my eyes, and I am enabled to see clearly. I confess that I have been in a great error in keeping the seventh-day Sabbath, and have done many things contrary to Jesus of Nazareth; sincerely believing it the will of the Lord.

In your letter, you cited considerable scripture. I have learned much from the third chapter of second Cor. I learn that of ourselves we can do nothing. After doing all we can, we are unprofitable servants, and are poor sinners saved by grace. I had read and re-read this chapter, time after time; but it never read to me like this before, I can now thank God for your great plainness of speech; and I am willing the world should know how I stand with regard to the Sabbath. I thank you a thousand times for coming this way. Often, in the silent watches of the night, tears bedew my cheek in thankfulness to God for having shown me my error. Praise his dear name. I feel that I have much to learn; but after receiving so much light, I do not think it my duty to keep Saturday. O how good the Lord is. I have promised that I will serve him more faithfully than ever before. I realize that I must watch and pray continually, lest I break the promise. I firmly believe we are living near the time when the people of God will enter into rest, and I do want to be fully prepared for the coming of the Lord. I realize that the perils of the last days are thickening around us, and nothing but a firm trust in the Lord, and a willingness to work for him, will keep us from these perils. The Savior has the same loving care for his children now as ever; and I can say, "If ever I loved my Jesus 'tis now;" and my daily prayer to the Lord is, that by his sustaining grace I may be kept from all the errors of this wicked world, and be led to imitate my blessed Savior in all things; and when he comes to gather his jewels from every nation and clime, may I be so unspeakably happy as to be one of their number." LINES.

Affectionately Inscribed to Sr. L. B. Weaver, on the death of her brother, Sanford Weaver.

"Your brother is dead."

Those dreadful words came to my ear,
My heart in anguish cried,
Oh! if dear Jesus had been here,
"My brother had not died."
O, could I run my Lord to meet,
As Martha did of old,
And fall in anguish at his feet,
And all my grief unfold.

He wept when Mary's brother died,
Would he could weep with me;
"Where have ye laid him?" then he cried;
They said, "Lord, come and see."
Groaning in spirit on his way,
He came unto the cave;
He bade them take the stone away,
And open Lazarus' grave.

He speaks, while sore the sisters grieve,—
"Said I not unto thee,
That if thou only would'st believe,
God's glory thou should'st see?
"Come forth"! with loud and mighty voice,
The great Deliverer cried.
He rose, he lived, them to rejoice;
Their brother that had died.

And oh, to ease my sad heart's pain,
I hear dear Jesus say,
"Thy brother, he shall rise again";
Would he could rise to-day.
But oh, he will not tarry long;
With might and power to save,
He'll come to raise the blood-washed throng—
His ransomed from the grave.
Then we shall see him face to face.
In Christ our living Head;
And fold him in our fond embrace—
Our brother that was dead.

WEIGHTS AND SIN.

The apostle Paul, in writing to the Hebrews, warns them in a special manner to beware of these two great sins, and if there ever was a time when men should watch over themselves on these two points it is now; for the weights that are loading us down seem to be on the increase. It is a well-known fact that we are living in fast times. The world is going with a rush. Its progress is with the speed of lightning seemingly, and they heed not the exhortation of the servant of God; for, says the apostle, "Wherefore seeing we also are compassed about with so great a cloud of witnesses, let us lay aside every weight, and the sin which doth so easily beset us, and let us run with patience the race that is set before us."—Heb. 12:1.

We take it for granted that if the apostle had not been convinced that these things would hinder us in our progress, he would have said nothing in regard to them; but so far as I have the opportunity to judge, these things will hinder us in our march to the kingdom. When a man gets the world into his heart, or upon his shoulders, he is in no situation to run in a race. In the first place, he cannot leave home; second, he has no interest in any thing but what pertains to that he is interested in. If there is a call for assistance in the cause of God—"O, I can't do anything. I am in debt. I have got to make out $500 by the first of next month, and I don't know where the first dollar is coming from. I should be glad to do something, but you see just how it is. A mighty load to carry. The $500 must come, you know. I built that new house over there, and it put me into debt so much, I can't do anything now. When I get that settled up, then I will do something."

Poor man! he has got but three houses in the village to rent, and a small farm out about a mile. What a terrible load to carry. There are any quantities of such cases in the world, and at the same time they profess to be looking for the Lord to come soon. I think that such weights as these are the ones the Lord would be pleased to have thrown off. I think such come under the head of loving the world, and John tells us, "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him."—1 John 2:15.

I am well convinced that that man or woman who loves this world is making a sad mistake. They will lose the kingdom. The weights are so heavy, they cannot rise when Jesus comes. Such had better be looking about themselves, and get rid of all such weights.

The love of this world leads to all kinds of sin and vice, which things are to be laid aside. The love of the world makes men covetous, and covetousness is idolatry, as we read: "Mortify, therefore, your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry."

It is enough to startle any one to see what a grasp some have upon this world. Man will go through almost everything to gain this world's goods. He will expose his health for twenty cents. So sick all day Sunday he cannot sit up, much less go to meeting; perhaps Monday morning up at four o'clock, all ready for the woods; never felt better in his life. Women the same; out to their neighbors, or to the village, or city, to get something to do. Now it is all right for people to be diligent in business; they should also be fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.

One of the greatest sins in the world is unbelief. It will prove the destruction of more souls than any other one sin; and when I see those who profess to be looking for the Lord soon to come, all swallowed up in this world, I stand in doubt of their sincerity. Still I mean to have charity; but charity must have something to stand upon. Consistency is a jewel, and faith and works must go together, or it will not appear well in the burning day.

Brethren, let us watch and pray, lest we enter into temptation, and we come short of entering the kingdom. The devil is busy in these last days. I am glad we have got almost through. Glory to God! we shall soon see Jesus. J. A. CLEAVELAND.

ETERNITY.

What a mystery! Who can fathom its wonderful depths! What is it but the habitation of the Eternal—the lifetime of the Infinite! Eternity, says an eloquent writer, has no grey hairs. The flowers fade, the heart withers, man grows old and dies, the world lies down in the sepulchre of ages; but time writes no wrinkles on eternity. Eternity! stupendous thought! the ever present, unborn, undecaying and undying—the endless chain composing the life of God—the golden thread entwining the destinies of the universe. Earth has its beauties; time shrouds them for the grave. Its honors are but the sunshine of an hour; its pleasures are bursting bubbles. Not so in the eternal world. In the dwelling of the Almighty can come no footsteps of decay.

For the World's Crisis.

TREASURE.

When God affords a season, he expects things to be done in that season; and if man neglects it, his misery will be great upon him. The very ant lays up for winter, and reads a lecture to man of good husbandry. Gathering in summer is a token of wisdom; but sleeping in harvest is a sinful, shameful, beggaring practice. God expects that we should work in the light and in the day. It is a sad and astonishing thing that God should hold men a candle for them to play by, especially when time is so short and uncertain, and death and the judgment so near, and of such vast consequence. O what a confounding question will that be one day—"Wherefore is there a price in the hand of a fool to get wisdom, seeing he hath no heart to it?"

God takes a strict account of our helps and of our hoards, and expects a due proportion. A treasure consists of something laid up for subsequent use; and experience shows us that they who strive for a great estate take pains in the day, and plan in the night; while the eagerness of desire will not suffer them to sleep. So it is in spiritual things. It requires much care and effort to secure an abiding provision for the soul. Spiritual goods are not got with a wet finger; they drop not into the mouth of a careless loiterer. The more choice anything is, the more difficult is it to be attained. O, think not to gain a treasure by so much indifference and slothfulness. A wise man will not account himself rich with toys and trifles; he must have the solid substance,—gold and silver, houses and lands, or a store of merchandise, for his treasure; and shall a christian do less, when his treasure consists in the good things of the throne, which alone possess intrinsic and lasting value?

Gold and silver are but worthless clay compared with eternal riches. All earthly comforts are vain and empty, when viewed as the heritage of the soul. The whole world cannot counterbalance a single grain of grace. We estimate things by their worth, not by their bulk. The small diamond is of more value than mountains of sand. Even thus it is with the one that possesses this diamond of grace. His peace with heaven, his reconciliation to trials, his love to man, all these cannot be counterbalanced by the wealth of the ocean. Then is not such a treasure necessary for a good expenditure in life? All will admit that there must be a gathering in, before there can be a laying out. A man cannot deal out his goods, unless he has a store laid in; and then there must be a constant replenishing, or he will run ashore; for nothing, or no one, can give what it hath not.

So with this treasure. There is a large store-house, from which the heart draws its choice commodities; but when the heart is not selfish, it gives these dainties away, and gets a fresh supply; and so on, until others partake of the same nature, and are led to the same store-house for a treasure. If God has placed this treasure within our reach (which he has), and we willfully neglect to lay in provisions while we have a season for it, we are guilty of groundless presumption in hoping to lay out in time of need; for without the principle of grace, who can act in deeds of charity and love, and undergo privations as thousands have? Let me cite you to one of the many.

Mrs. A. H. Hoge, of Chicago, during the late rebellion in our country, labored in a large number of hospitals to administer to the sick, wounded, and dying; and her labor was not bestowed for the praise of men, but for the love of God, and sympathy with suffering men. Hear her story:—

As I visited Jefferson Hospital, and passed through one of the wards, I noticed a man whose dejected figure said plainly he had turned his face to the wall to die. His limb had been amputated, and he had just been told his doom. Human nature rebelled. He cried out,

"I am willing to die, if I could but see my wife once more!"

In the silence that followed this burst of agony, the low voice of a noble woman was heard in prayer for him; the divine influence overcame his heart, and as she concluded he said, "Thy will, O God, be done!" and before the midnight hour he was at rest. The vacant bed told the story on the next morning.

Again as I entered the regimental hospital, where lay the wounded color-bearers, the surgeon met me, and said:

"I'm so glad you've come; for Richard has been calling for you all day."

As I took his parched, feverish hand, he said:

"O take me home to my wife and children to die!" There he lay, as noble a specimen of vigorous manhood as ever was looked upon. His broad chest heaved with emotion; his dark eyes were brilliant with fever; his cheeks flushed with almost the hue of health. It was difficult to realize that he was passing the bounds of time. His eyes followed me as I spoke to the doctor.

"What did he say?" he asked quickly.

"You can't be moved."

His broad chest rose and fell; his whole frame quivered. There was a pause of a few moments. He spoke first, and said,

"Will you take my last message to her whom I love?"

"I will," I said, "if I go five hundred miles to do it."

"Take her picture from under my pillow, and my children's also. Let me see them once more."

As I held them for him, he looked earnestly, and then said:

"Tell her not to fret about me, for we shall meet again. Tell her to train those two little boys, that we loved so well, to be good; and tell her to bear my loss like a soldier's wife and a christian."

He was exhausted by the effort. I sat beside him till his consciousness was gone, repeating his precious promises.

We might name many more acts of kindness by this noble woman, and others, whose hearts are stored with this treasure of grace. If a tree be good, it will bring forth good fruit; if bad, the fruit thereof will be corrupt. If these things hold good in temporal things, why not in spiritual? Joseph could not supply the country with corn, without a store; no more can men act without the treasure of grace.

Christ is designed to be our Joseph, to furnish our souls with all the fulness of his divine favor; for the beginning of grace is by him; the growth and strength are from him; its essence and abundance are bestowed through him. And he who neglects to stock his or her heart from this store-house, undervalues the great office of Christ, and does what he can to frustrate the object of God in the soul's supply. But, nevertheless, there are so many that neglect the offer of life, which weighs more than an ocean of gold, or a mountain of diamonds. As one said of old, so says the treasured one to-day, I am sure. "The spirit of grace, with the fruit thereof, are choice besoms to sweep the filth of sin out of the soul, and also to adorn it with divine jewels, and assist it with notable antidotes against corruption." For the World's Crisis.

"CRY ALOUD! SPARE NOT!"

Lift up your voice like a trumpet. For "behold he cometh with clouds; and every eye shall see him, and they also which pierced him; and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of him. Even so, Amen."

Who that reads the word of God with an unbiased mind, and calmly scrutinizes the face of passing events, will dare to place themselves on the side of those evil servants, and continue to say, "My Lord delayeth his coming"? What heart can conceive, what words portray the disappointment and anguish which will suddenly enshroud those who put far away the evil day, and will not heed the earnest warning of the faithful watcher, "behold, he cometh;" "yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry"?

O my soul, wait thou in preparation for the solemn day. Speedily don the wedding garment, which shall ensure thine admittance to the marriage supper of the Lamb. And while waiting in hourly expectation of that glorious event, let us endeavor by all means to save some of those who must for ever perish, unless we save them "with fear, pulling them out of the fire." Many a near and dear one, many a friend and acquaintance, with whom we are associated day by day in the public mart, or the more private walks of life, will be at last shut out from the blessed mansions, unless by our faithfulness and persistency they are induced to turn while yet the day of mercy lingers. Its morning has faded; its noon is already past; and even its sunset rays are dimmed by the approaching twilight.

Hasten, then, oh laborers in the Master's vineyard! Only a little time remains in which to gather fruit unto life eternal. Faint not, nor tarry, but with eager footsteps gather the last remaining sheaves, and bring them with thee to the "harvest-home." Then will be our rejoicing. Buried beneath the overflowing tide of joy will be all our recollections of the burden and heat of the day in which we labored, suffering the reproaches of them that were without, while patiently and meekly we sought to do the will of the Master,

With prayer and pity still
Requiting every ill.

Our warfare over, our pilgrimage ended, our bark safely moored to the heavenly shore, throughout the boundless years of eternal ages, our very existence shall be one glad plean of "joy unspeakable and full of glory."

Gems.

— Every hour comes to us charged with duty and the moment it is past, it is registered for or against us in the final account which all must give of their actions.

— There is no coming to the fair haven of glory without sailing through the narrow straits of repentance.

— The beauty of holiness, like the sun, is seen by its own light.

— What need a child fear, though the house be full of rods, seeing that not one of them can move without the Father's hand?

— When you send up your prayers, be sure to direct them to the care of the Redeemer, and then they will never miscarry.

Have love! not love alone for one,
But man as man thy brother call,
And scatter, like the circling sun,
Thy charities on all.

— We have had a great many translations of the Holy Scriptures; the best of all would be their translation into the daily practice of christian people.

— Men generally set sentinels to guard every avenue to the mind when engaged in argument. A shining life will go where a brilliant argument could not enter. Argument has its place, however.

— A man who has a strong mind can bear to be insulted, can bear offences, because he is strong. The weak mind snaps and snarls at a little; the strong mind bears it like a rock, and it moveth not, though a thousand breakers dash upon it and cast their pitiful malice in the spray upon its summit.

— To speak with the tongue of men or angels on religious matters, is a much less thing than to know how to stay the mind upon God, and abide with him in the closet of our hearts, observing, loving, adoring and obeying his holy power within us.

— Never scare off a fly with a club when a feather will do as well, and remember that you can take more flies with a gill of molasses than with a gallon of vinegar.

— There is a thirst of the heart for truth, as distinct from the thirst of the mind.

— A thousand wishes that we were glorified saints are less in God's eye than manly grapple with a worldly passion.

— When man revolts against the gospel he takes another master—himself: one who renders all inferior masters possible.

— A christian should never plead spirituality for being a sloven. If he be a shoe-cleaner, he should be the best in the parish.

— Most persons choose their friends as they do other useful animals, preferring those from whom they expect the most service.

TO YOUNG MEN.

Never buy an article simply because a man who sells it will take it out in trade. Trade is money.

If you employ others, be on hand to see that they attend to their duties, and direct with regularity, promptness and liberality.

Honor your engagements. If you promise to meet a man, or do a certain thing at a certain moment, be ready at the appointed time.

Would you succeed in business? If so, work according to rule. You have rules to guide you in building a house or playing a game of croquet, why not in building a fortune, or playing the great game of life? We will give some rules, and the young man who tries them and fails may call us by the hardest name in our language,—deceiver.

Make your place of business pleasant and attractive; then stay there to wait on customers.

Never use profane or vulgar words, or allow yourself to use hasty or ungentlemanly remarks to those in your employ; to do so lessens their respect for you and your influence over them.

Be faithful over the interests confided to your keeping, and in good time your responsibilities will be increased.

Do not build until you have laid a good foundation.

Pay as you go. A man of honor respects his word as he does his bond.

Have but few confidents, and the fewer the better. Use your own brains rather than those of others.

THE BOY THAT GREW TO BE A GENTLEMAN.

"You see I am a gentleman!" said Will Thompson, "I will not take an insult." And the little fellow strutted up and down in a rage. He had been throwing stones at Peter Jones, and he thought that his anger proved him to be a gentleman.

"If you want to be a gentleman, I should think you would be a 'gentle' boy first" said his teacher. "Gentlemen do not throw stones at their neighbors. Peter Jones did not throw stones at you, and I think he is much the more likely to prove a gentleman."

"But he's got patches on his knees," said Will.

"Bad clothes don't keep a boy from being a gentleman," said the teacher, "but a bad temper does. Now, William, if you want to be a gentleman, you must be a gentle boy."

A little further on the teacher met little Peter Jones. Some stones had hit him and he was hurt by them.

"Well, Peter, what's the matter between you and Will this morning?" asked the teacher.

"I was throwing a ball at one of the boys in play, sir, and it missed him and hit Will Thompson's dog."

"Why did you not throw back?"

"Because, sir, my mother says to be a gentleman, I must be a gentle boy, and I thought it was best to keep out of his way till he cooled off a little."

The teacher walked on, praising Peter's conduct, but kept the boys in mind, and he lived to see Will Thompson a poor outcast and Peter Jones a gentleman, loved and respected by all.

Remember, my young friends, that it takes a gentle boy to make a gentleman.

"MY MOTHER SAYS IT'S SO."

A little boy was one day making a statement which some one denied, telling him it was not so.

The boy repeated his assertion, and waxing warm at being contradicted, exclaimed:—

"My mother says it is so! And if my mother says it's so, it is so, if it aint so!

We could hardly ask for a firmer faith than that; but ah, mother! what a responsibility rests on you, when such young hearts look up to you as to a teacher, guide, and friend.

Good mothers make good men; and many a scoffing sinner has had his tongue hushed by the mention of his mother's prayers, and has said,—"Well, I do believe if there ever was a christian on earth, my old mother was one!"

Mother, will your child carry such a memory of you as he goes forth a wanderer in the world? Will he remember the hymns that mother taught him, and the prayers that mother offered by his side? Will visions of mother's gentle face stand between him and the haunts of sin and shame? Will the beck of mother's hand point him to the heavenly home?

An old lady, some eighty years of age, in the delirium of a dying hour, wanted her mother!—called for her mother, who rocked her to sleep in her infant hours; and who for half a century had been sleeping in her grave!

Such is the power of a mother's memory. Oh, mother, see that in the day of Christ your children do not seek in vain for you amid the saved, and that none of your flock be wanting in the heavenly fold.—The Christian.

GOOD RULES TO FOLLOW.

First, be honest and truthful. All depends upon this.

If you have work to do, do it cheerfully.

If you go out on business, attend to the matter promptly, and then as promptly go about your own business. Don't stop to tell stories.

If you have a place of business, be there during business hours. No one can get rich by sitting around stores and saloons.

If you have to labor for a living, remember that one hour in the morning is better than two at night.

Do not meddle with any business you know nothing of.

A good business habit and reputation is always money.

Help yourself, and others will help you.

Be obliging.

Do not be in too great haste to get rich.

Do not spend time in idleness.

Be kind.

Learn to say no. There is no necessity of snapping it out, but say it firmly and respectfully.

Learn to think and act for yourself.

Be valiant.

Help others when you can.

Keep ahead rather than behind time, for it is easier to keep ahead than to catch up.

ADVICE TO BOYS AND GIRLS.

1. Respect and obey your parents.
2. Love your brothers and sisters sincerely.
3. Never speak evil one of another.
4. Never strike, nor lie, nor cheat, nor steal.
5. Be honest, even in the smallest matters.
6. Save everything you can, to give to the objects of benevolence.
7. Do not mock the deaf, the lame, or the blind.
8. Always be most respectful to the aged.
9. Always keep your clothes neat and clean.
10. Return articles borrowed or found.
11. Avoid the company of bad children.
12. Never wantonly kill a fly or any animal.
13. Do not covet what is not your own.
14. Improve your opportunities for gaining instruction.
15. Avoid low, vulgar, profane, obscene words.

WAITING FOR JESUS.

TUNE.—"Come home, father."

Savior, dear Savior, we're waiting for thee,
'Mid sorrows and perils below,
The wicked are scoffing, and sin is so rife,
We long to thy mansion to go;
We long to leave this cold, dreary old earth,
Where we've wandered so many long years,
We long for the morning that ere long will dawn,
When God shall wipe 'way all our tears.
Come home, come home, come home,
We long for the tidings, come home.

CHORUS.

Hear the sweet voice of the Lord
Sounding through earth and heaven's high dome,
Awaking the saints from their cold dusty beds,
And saying, dear children, come home.

Savior, dear Savior, thy blessing we love,
Thy promise of coming we claim;
O give us thy spirit to lead us along,
And bring us to heaven to reign;
O hasten the time when we will be there,
Thy face so glorious behold;
The joys and the glories of heaven to share,
And walk o'er the streets of pure gold.
Come home, come home, come home,
We long for the tidings, come home.

Savior, dear Savior, come take us away,
The sand in time's glass is most run;
Thou hast promised to come at the last great day,
As soon as thy pleading was done;
We've waited here long, we've looked for our Lord,
We long for his coming from heaven,
To bring us our glorious and lasting reward,
A seat in his kingdom be given.
Come home, come home, come home,
We long for the tidings, come home.

ORIGIN OF GREAT ERRORS.

BY WM. SHELDON.

All theological errors have an origin, but all do not have the same origin. There are, however, several great fundamental errors which have the same origin. They originate in the doctrine of soul-immortality, and could not live a moment without that doctrine to support them. It is the great tree that sends out numerous branches bearing poisonous fruit—fruit that grows on no other tree. Error cannot grow on the tree of truth, neither can truth grow on the tree of error. To determine the character of a tree, we examine its fruits. If it bears good fruit, we call it a good tree, but if its fruit is poison, we call it a bad tree.

As "a tree is known by its fruits," it may be well to examine the fruit of this great tree of theology; and if we find it bearing evil fruit, and only evil fruit, and also a large quantity of evil fruit, we shall be safe in pronouncing it an evil tree. Who will object to this conclusion? And who will object to the examination? Certainly no christian, and no honest man should object for a moment. It will avail nothing to insist, previous to examination, that it is a good tree, simply because some honest but mistaken friends have long pronounced it good, which friends also agree with us that certain fruit is evil, ignoring the fact that the very fruit which they pronounce evil grows on the very tree which they call good, and grows on no other tree in the wide world. We read of "twelve manner of fruits" on the tree of life—all good fruits, too—but this tree of immortal-soul-ism yields a larger variety; more than twelve kinds; but each variety is bitter and evil. It must be obvious to every unbiased person that a tree yielding such a quantity of evil fruit, and also such a variety of evil fruit, cannot be a good tree. Let us, then, enter into an examination, not for the purpose of learning whether certain species of theological fruit is really evil, or not, but to determine whether this fruit, which we all agree in pronouncing evil, really grows on this tree of immortal-soul-ism, and whether this fruit could ever have existed provided this tree had never been in existence.

Catholicism is one of the fruits of this tree.

1. No one would ever be so foolish as to pray to the Virgin Mary in heaven, unless first led to believe that she is alive in some sense after passing through the terrors of death; and knowing that her body is dead, they have assumed, without proof, and contrary to facts, that her soul was immortal, and soared to heaven. If it is true that the Virgin is alive, and in heaven, why not petition her to intercede with the Redeemer for us? Who can reasonably object? In this world we ask the saints of God to pray for us, and if those saints really live after death, and go to heaven where God is, and live in his immediate presence, where they cannot regard iniquity in the hearts to prevent their prayers from being heard, it would be perfectly proper to petition them to pray to God for us. Let not Protestants denounce this practice while claiming that the Virgin is alive; for such Protestants are more inconsistent than the Catholics. They insist that the tree which yields the fruit is good, but pronounce the fruit evil; while the Catholics say that both the tree and the fruit, in this instance, is good; though even Catholics themselves, in other cases, are compelled to pronounce some of the fruits of this tree evil.

But we pronounce both the tree and its fruits evil. We do not pray to the Virgin in heaven, because she is not there, but in the grave. We do not importune her to pray for us, because she is dead and cannot pray. Teach Catholics that Mary is dead, and they would pray to God, rather than to a dead virgin. Teach them the Bible doctrine that the heaven to be enjoyed by the Virgin Mary, and all the other saints, is on the other side of the resurrection and judgment, and that Mary herself, instead of a ghostly shade, will be there, and that all the saints will be there as glorified personalities, and not as mere shadows, dressed in garments of moonshine; then they will desist from the practice of praying to an imaginary female ghost. But let not folly rebuke foolishness—let not Protestants, who claim that Mary has turned into a personal ghost, rebuke Catholics for praying to such a being.

2. No one would ever be foolish enough to pay the priest the last dollar to pray the ghost of a deceased friend out of purgatory, were it not for immortal-soul-ism. This fruit grows only on that tree. Let the fact be understood that death kills the entire man, and that he must remain dead till the resurrection, and that no entity or personality leaves man at death, but simply an element called the spirit of life returns to God who gave it, and Catholicism, with its ghostly purgatory, would become obsolete.

Mohammedanism is another fruit that grows on the tree of immortal-soul-ism.

1. Just establish the scriptural fact in the minds of all men that death kills men, instead of subtracting ghostly entities, or spirit personalities, from them, to inhabit some other world, and no one could ever have been deceived by Mahomet's story of riding on a ghostly horse, from earth up through seven ghost-heavens, where he saw and conversed with Noah, Abraham, Adam, and others. But instead of being deluded by this theological nonsense, they could have met him with the claim, these men are dead, and not alive; and in their graves instead of being in heaven.

2. Mahomet taught his soldiers that if they died on the battlefield, Paradise should be theirs, and that they should have "girls of Paradise" for wives, in addition to their former wives, thus assuming that at death, the immortal souls of little girls go to Paradise, there to become the ghost-wives of ghost-soldiers of Mahomet. Who could ever have believed this dogma without first believing immortal-soul-ism? Obliterate this doctrine, and Mohammedanism is obsolete. Fruit cannot grow after the tree is killed; and the way to prevent people from eating poisonous fruit is to kill the tree that yields it; then it will not furnish the fatal poison. Is it right to keep the tree thriving, and call it a good tree, while it is the only tree that exists which yields such poisonous fruit, which has already poisoned its millions on millions?

3. Mahomet taught that there were not only seven heavens for good ghosts, but seven hells for evil ghosts—that there was a narrow footbridge, "finer than a hair," stretched from this world over these seven ghost-hells, reaching to heaven, for ghosts to walk over on; thus each ghost must become a practical wire-walker. A good ghost gets out to the bridge, and walks over hell No 1, which is intensely hot; then over hell No. 2, which is very hot, but not so hot as the first; then over hell No. 2, which is hot, and like the other two, full of wailing ghosts, but not so hot as the other; then over hell No. 4, which is far from being a cool place; then over hell No. 5, which is a little cooler, but hot enough to burn human beings, if there were any there, but as only ghosts are there, and as they cannot burn up, nothing is consumed; then over hell No. 6, which is still cooler, but not in danger of freezing over; then over hell No. 7, which is the coolest hell in the catalogue; then he lands on the shore of heaven No. 1, where, if he is only an ordinarily good ghost, he must stop, and consider himself at home; if however he is a superlative good ghost, he passes on through heavens Nos. 2, 3, 4, 5, and 6, and makes No. 7 his home.

A superlatively wicked ghost tries to walk this bridge, and as soon as he gets fairly over the center of hell No. 1, his foot slips, and he falls into the hottest hell of the seven. Another very wicked ghost tries to walk this bridge, not being quite as wicked as the other, and succeeds in walking over hell No. 1 in safety, but, alas! when he gets fairly over the centre of hell No. 2, his foot slips, and down he goes into the fire. Another wicked ghost tries to walk the bridge, and passes over the first hell, and the second, but just as he gets over the center of hell No. 3, he tumbles into it. And thus, according to their grades of wickedness, they find a corresponding hell ready to receive them, the most wicked falling into the first, the next grade into the next hell, and so on to the end of the list, there being seven grades of ghosts, and seven hells to receive them.

This speculative nonsense never could have been believed by any living man, had not a belief in the immortality of the soul paved the way for its reception. When it is proved that death kills men, and that they cannot live again till the resurrection, this doctrine of a ghostly existence in a heaven of ghosts, or in a hell of ghosts, cannot be believed. Root up the tree, and we shall soon get rid of the fruit. It is labor lost to curse the fruit, and bless the tree that yields it.

That peculiar and obnoxious fruit called Mormonism also grows on this tree of immortal-soul-ism; and we had rather disown the tree than to own the fruit—a kind of fruit that can grow on no other tree. Hence, if we make the fruit evil, let us not eulogize the tree that produces it.

1. Mormonism originated in the claim that the ghost of a dead prophet, by the name of Maroni, who once lived on this continent, appeared to Joseph Smith, and revealed to him the whereabouts of certain plates of gold, said to contain the substance of what is now found in the Book of Mormon. If the devil had really tried to imitate God in making a Bible, and after having finished it, felt so much ashamed of it as to bury it in the ground, that ghost must have done a very naughty trick in telling "Joe" where to go and dig it up; and certainly a good ghost would not teach any man to dig up a bad book. If ghostly personalities leave men when they die, who can say that "Joe" never talked with a ghost? but if death really kills men, then down goes Mormonism.

2. One corner-stone of Mormonism is the claim that the ghost of John the Baptist ordained Joseph Smith to the priesthood of Aaronic order. If it did not kill John the Baptist to cut his head off, but merely subtracted a personal ghost from him, who can prove that this ghost did not ordain "Joe?" It is easy to say, "I don't believe it," but that does not disprove it. But if the act of severing a man's head from his body actually kills the man, instead of letting him out of a mortal prison, then John never ordained Joe Smith, for dead men cannot ordain people.

3. Another corner-stone to this system of Mormonism is the claim that Joseph Smith was ordained to the Melchisedec priesthood by the ghosts of Peter, James, and John. Now, if they were possessed of personal ghosts while living, and if at death these ghosts flew away from the body, who knows but what they did ordain "Joe?" While alive they had power to ordain men; and if, instead of being dead, they are still alive, as personal ghosts, who can say they cannot now ordain men? "Joe" says they are alive; and so do you; "Joe" says they ordained him; you say you don't believe it; but your unbelief disproves nothing. But take the Bible position—"The dead know not anything" (Eccl. 9: 5;) and that "there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave [sheol—THE STATE OF THE DEAD] whither thou goest" (Eccl. 9: 10)—and Mormonism wilts and dies before it. Take away the doctrine of a personal ghost in man, and Smith's ghostly ordinations are proved (not guessed) to be hypocritical claims, and the superstructure built upon this foundation, falls to the ground at once.

Can a tree yield so much evil fruit, the very existence of which fruit depends upon the existence of this tree, and could never have come into existence without this tree, and still be a good tree? Is it possible for a tree to produce all evil fruit, and no good fruit, and still be a good tree?

After seeing how much evil fruit it produces, will some one seek to partially redeem its reputation by saying that it also yields some good fruit? This I deny emphatically. There never has been a particle of good fruit on it, the existence of which depends upon the existence of the tree. You may stick apples upon a thorn tree, but the thorn tree never gave them an existence. So you may stick some good fruit on to the tree of immortal-soul-ism, but it is not a product of the tree. Not one item of Bible theology depends upon immortal-soulism for its existence, while many noted errors are its legitimate offspring. The judgment to come, the resurrection, the celestial kingdom, the giving of immortality to the saints, the giving of crowns of glory to the redeemed ones, and in fact every feature of the plan of salvation from its incipient stage to its mighty completion, are truths that exist independent of immortal-soulism. Blot out that principle, and these truths shine as brilliantly as ever; while the cardinal errors of Christendom and Heathendom are thereby plunged into the mighty sea of oblivion to rise no more.

For the World's Crisis.

TESTS.

There are many tests that arise before our minds, if we will not pertinaciously thrust them aside, which will discover unto us the genuineness of our faith in Christ. I have heard persons say they did not know whether they were accepted of God or not. It must be very sad to grope along in such moral darkness. I think it unnecessary, and can be avoided. If we are in fellowship with Christ, we certainly may know it; and if we are not, most assuredly we ought to know it. There are methods by which this knowledge may be obtained; and to me they seem simple enough. God will not withhold light from an honest inquirer. It is not for us to consider first what the world may say of, or about us; this should be of minor importance and of a secondary character. If God is first in our affections, he will inevitably be first in our thoughts; hence, when we are about to take a step of greater or less importance in life, our first and best thought will be, Will it please my heavenly Father? is it in accordance with the teachings of my Savior? Of course, if we love God truly, we shall be honest in this matter. We may deceive those with whom we associate, and, perhaps, deceive ourselves; but we cannot deceive God. His eye can search out the very intent of the heart.

If we are about to transact important business, and we love Jesus fondly (we all love our best friend fondly), we shall seek wisdom and direction of him, first. If we about to invest capital, our first consideration will be, How can I best dispose of this that God may be honored, and my own heart blest? If we are invited to participate in (so called) harmless amusements, our secret inquiry will be, Would Jesus be pleased to have me do thus, or would I be willing for him to come and find me thus spending these last hours he had allotted me for labor? If we are encouraged to adorn ourselves with all the fripperies of fashion, shall we at once acquiesce, or will the true lover of Jesus first inquire on bended knee, and from an earnest heart, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" Whatever the instructions we receive then and there, we ought to carry out in our life, and God will bless. Anything and everything that persons may suggest, and our desires for the moment tempt, if we can honestly and sincerely go to Jesus with it, and ask his direction, and follow it,—I think this, with previous tests, may prove our faith in Christ, our love for God, and our real position as believers in the speedy return of the Master. Let us be honest before God. Ask him to show us our faults, not our neighbor's, and make haste to correct them.

We have not to look to this one, or that one, for approval, and have our happiness guaged by their smile or frown; but above all things desire the "witness of the Spirit" that our ways please God. If our consciences condemn us, what peace have we? Better to lose all our friends, and have the approval of God, than to retain them at his displeasure. These are trying, testing times. Who will stand firm at the post God has assigned them? Who will cling tenaciously to the requirements of the gospel? Who will sacrifice pleasures and desires of an earthly character, that tend to alienate their hearts from God, for the sake of eternal life in the kingdom of God? With God's help, I will live to his glory here, that I may partake of his glory when earth is redeemed from the curse.

SOPHIA JACKMAN.

MY HOME IS IN EDEN.

My home is in Eden, my rest is not here,
Then why should I murmur when trials appear;
Be hushed, my dark spirit, soon Jesus will come,
To shorten my journey, and hasten my home.

CHORUS.

Then the angels will come, with their music will come,
With music, sweet music, to welcome me home;
In the bright gates of crystal the shining ones will stand,
And sing me a welcome to their own native land.

It is not for me to be seeking my rest,
And building my hopes in a region like this;
I look for a city which hands have not piled,
I pant for a country by sin undefiled.

The thorn and the thistle around me may grow,
I would not recline on roses below;
I ask not my portion, I seek not my rest,
Till I find them forever on Jesus' own breast.

LIFE AND IMMORTALITY IN CHRIST ALONE.

BY EDWARD WHITE.

(To the Editor of the Christian World.)

(Concluded.)

5. I have to add, under this head, that the reception of these interpretations will enable christian believers to resist the now powerful seductions of the fashionable theory of the salvation of all men, which involves practically giving up the Bible. Universalism is spreading on every side. It is eating like a cancer into the breast of the modern Church. Multitudes of ministers of Christianity hold it in secret, with more or less of fervency, who did not preach it. They are for some reason afraid boldly to proclaim it. Why afraid? Because they know that the common sense of serious christians, and of the still unperverted ministry, will explode their opinion as anti-Scriptural. The minds of these good men, however, are honestly unable to sustain the stupendous burden of the popular dogma of endless torments; and, knowing no other refuge, they fly to the doctrine of the final salvation of all men, quoting Mr. Tennyson's agreeable reveries when holy Scripture fails them. We agree with these secret Universalists that the common people will never receive their doctrine as scriptural, for it can be extracted from the Bible only by a system of special pleading which would be rejected in every court of law. Suppose there were an act of parliament portioning certain lands between a thousand of the people, commencing with a general statement of good will towards the whole company so designated for endowment, and an expression of earnest desire and intention of the Queen and Parliament for an equal division between all the thousand; but distinctly providing, in words repeated again and again, that if any of the beneficiaries should commit robbery or murder, or disobey the commissioners appointed to divide the land, they should on conviction be excluded from their shares of the property, and be shut out and cut off for ever from their portion of the grant.

What should we think of an advocate employed by such convicted criminals if he rested his plea, in an action against the commissioners, upon the clear and comprehensive language of the general terms of the Act, which expressed the intention of an equal distribution and professed an equal benevolence in Parliament towards every member of the thousand? If he were to found an argument on the fact that the Queen loves all her subjects equally, and therefore doubtless intended good and bad alike to share in the distribution, judges and juries would make short work with such a plea. They would point to the oft-occurring qualifying proviso, and to the evidence of the criminality of the offenders; and they would dismiss the plaintiff with costs, and a deserved rebuke for his audacity. Now, the plaintiff's advocate here precisely represents the Universalists. They take the clear expressions of God's love to mankind, of his gracious intentions towards all men in Christ, and boldly bring these declarations to bear to quash the equally clear proviso, repeated hundreds of times in the deed of redemption, that no persistent rebels shall enter heaven—that all unregenerate persons shall die, perish, and be destroyed for ever. In our judgment there is no more pernicious example of violence offered to sacred language in the history of the world. If these threatenings of death, destruction of body and soul in hell, really signify as Mr. Jukes thinks, a doom from which sinners will all escape into heaven at last, it seems useless to puzzle longer over a Bible which never means what it says. Let these writers consider the two oaths of God in respect of Palestine. He "sware by himself" to give that land to Abraham and to his seed for ever. He also "sware by himself," four hundred years after (Numbers 14), that none of the generation who had seen his work in Egypt should enter the land. The one oath qualified and explained the other. There was nothing in the shape of mercy behind the second oath of exclusion. "Their carcases fell in the wilderness." The "As I live" was no brutum fulmen. Even so there is a distinct threatening of "punishment eternal," of "death," of "destruction for ever," to all who, hearing the gospel, neglect or reject it; and we regard any tampering with such threats as most injurious to the influence of religion among men. It not only encourages vain hopes in the careless, and leads them to forget the to-day of salvation, but it strikes at the root of faith in the veracity of the Almighty.

But it is the overwhelming pressure of the doctrine of endless torments which tempts christians into these entanglements, and from them they are delivered by a doctrine which takes God's words as they stand, and exhibits at once the "goodness" and the "severity" of Him who kills and makes alive, saves and destroys, and dashes his enemies in pieces like a potter's vessel.

6. It will be easy for the reader to work out for himself the further statement that these views of truth will mightily promote the hope, joy, and love of the spiritual life in those who possess it. The prevailing doctrine renders the moral character of God simply incomprehensible; and most so to those whose moral character is most just and good. Such was not the character of the God whom David worshiped. The "Jehovah" of the Psalms was a being to whom a good and righteous man could ardently "sing," and song is the natural expression of affectionate joy. In our times there is much mechanical church music of the loveliest description, but very little genuinely jubilant song of human voices who feel "glad in the Lord." Men cannot "sing," with all their hearts, to a Being who is conceived of as having brought a race of creatures into existence, without their own consent, under the curse of endless misery for the sin of another; and perhaps (so Calvinists think) as having chosen only a limited number of them to escape that doom, leaving the remainder to the horrible results of their innate depravity, the large majority to live and die in paganism. Ah, such thoughts becloud the lives of millions; and the establishment of a less frightful and immoral faith will brighten the life of numbers who at present pass their days in gloom, and lie down in silent despair—righteous hearts whom man's theology has overshadowed, but whom the Lord hath not made sad. I forbear to urge here the statistics of lunacy—not, however, because they do not furnish a fearful count against prevailing errors.

7. My remaining space must be wholly devoted to the question of the effect of these doctrines in the work of awakening souls sunk in torpor, and in converting wicked men to Christ. There are many who have been accustomed to wield the common dogma as an instrument of immense power over the spirits of men, and who are capable of no other spiritual action, who will at once declare that "Satan" will rejoice over the proposed change in the church's faith. The idea is that headstrong sinners, both men and women, deeply committed to a life of vice and crime, will be sure to say, "Oh, there is to be an end to hell torments, is there? Very well, we are glad to hear it, and we will, therefore, persist in our enjoyments and risk the consequences." But do the persons who put this speech into the mouths of sinners forget that those hardened profligates have enjoyed the full restraining advantage of the threatening of everlasting torment, with scarce an interruption during all their lifetime, and that even this has not deterred them from their dreadful career? They are already as wicked as they can be, and cannot be made worse by the removal of a threatening which they have utterly disbelieved in and defied. It is even possible that some alteration in the way of presenting God's justice and love to them may be for the better, and diminish their blasphemies. At present the common doctrine seems to most of them, when they think at all, too horrible to be true; just as a wicked navigator recently said to a city Missionary, who was urging him to repent, as he sat in the mud, over his mid-day dinner—"But do you really think, master, that God Almighty will put me into the fire for ever and ever, after putting me in this here muck all my lifetime?" And not thinking it to be true, they lose the restraining influence of all the threatenings in the Bible, and drink and drink to perdition. As for the large majority of irreligious educated men throughout Europe, and an immense multitude of well-instructed artisans, they have thrown off religious faith altogether, and specially faith in hell, on account of the incredibility of this very dogma. Whatever you exaggerate you weaken. . . .

Besides, when you closely analyze the nature of terror, the feeling which it is the end of threatening to awaken, you find that it is not a moral emotion at all, but only an animal passion. You can frighten a horse or a dog, and you can also frighten a man with a prospect of present or future misery. But what you cannot do is to perpetuate the alarm; for all animal passions, terror among them, are of transitory operation. Each fit passes away, and each fresh excitement is weaker than the last. Thus it is with wicked men. You cannot reach any in these days, except the most ignorant and thoughtless, with the threat of endless torments; and, if you could, the impression would be but transitory. Multitudes of them hear these menaces without a pang of anxiety, and "take sittings" to listen to them, if eloquently set forth. The use of terror is to awaken by a sudden blast of the trump of God. If it fail in that, it is powerless for good afterwards. A menace believed in, of death in the torment of hell, a hell as real as earth or heaven itself, will awaken all who are susceptible of the permanent and really saving influences of the gospel. These are, Truth addressing the understanding, Grace appealing to the repenting will. These, and these alone, are the perpetual springs of spiritual life, while terror can neither convert nor sanctify. It is holy love which wins the heart and transforms the character, and the doctrine here defended unveils the love of God, that is, the transforming power, like the bright shining of the morning sun. It is sin which fills men with undefined alarm, and leads them to think they do God service by depicting his beloved Son as the Siva of Paganism. There cannot be any genuine love to God which has not been preceded by a sense of danger and of guilt; but it is by loving delight, not by overwhelming fear, that the power of sin is to be extinguished in the soul. In a word, that is the safest religion, not which succeeds in maintaining an incessant dread of hell, but that which most steadily upholds within man's heart the influence of love, reason, intelligible truth, divine authority, delicacy of sentiment, and filial awe. The evil of sin does not consist chiefly, as some coarse preachers to the populace suppose, in its being an offence against a power which is able, and willing, to inflict eternal torment upon evil doers, but in its being a wilful opposition to the holy light of eternal "loving kindness." He has not the deepest sense of sin who most dreads the avenging wrath, but he who most keenly feels the hatefulness of insurrection against the Father of spirits and the all-satisfying Good. Terror generates solely selfish views of sin, and selfish views of the evil of sin are fatal to genuine religion. Fear may arouse, but it is wisdom, grace, and holiness which can win men into union with the Everlasting Light. From God's throne there issue lightnings and mighty thunderings, but God himself is Love.

We conclude, then, that all true children of God will be reached by God's own threatenings, and that we need not contrive a corrupt Christianity to meet the case of those who are "past feeling." This has been the ruin of Christendom from the beginning, the desire of fabricating a religion for the ungodly masses, a religion which shall fill churches, tabernacles, and cathedrals, bring money and power to the hierarchy, move to terror or to tears animal men, frighten profligates into a false appearance of piety, or please and tickle triflers with the delusive "service" of music and a painted ceremonial. If we preach the Apostolic gospel we shall be contented with apostolic results. We may see fewer "influential" congregations of "natural" men gathered together, and fewer hysterical revivals, in which thousands of ignorant and wicked people are frightened for a little time by fear of endless torments, and then relapse straightway into their former debaucheries. But we shall train up, under purer influences, as Christ did, the "few noble" men and women who are not afraid to use their senses on God's works and God's revealed word; and more christians whose religion is a rational, hearty, and sympathetic affection to the Lord Jesus Christ; more who will say, amidst modern scientific atheism, modern theological infidelity, and the deep disgust occasioned by modern sectarianism, "Lord, to whom shall we go? Thou hast the words of eternal life!" For all others, untouched by the divine threatenings, we shall shake off the dust of our feet with the apostolic words, without waiting to contrive a false system which will impress or amuse them—"Seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo! we turn to the Gentiles!"

And may God grant that to the Gentiles—to dreaming India, with its 200,000,000, and to materialistic China, with its 400,000,000 more—this word of life may be soon carried, the uncorrupted word of life everlasting!

Sir, I present these considerations, for years successfully stifled by literary managers, to the vast audience which you have invited me to address; and in their presence earnestly beseech the examination of these arguments by competent critics; by critics whose competency does not consist only in a knowledge of the popular tastes, but in an adequate knowledge of the contents of the Scriptures, in some proved ability to confront ignorant clamor, and to withstand the anathemas of interested priesthoods, at any cost, when duty calls. To no others shall I pay the slightest attention. This controversy awakens the deepest feelings of which mankind are capable, and it is well for all concerned in it to avoid needless provocation, but there is no subject better worth examining to the foundation. The strife is not for our victory or defeat, but for men's faith in christianity, for souls, and for the everlasting salvation of the world. I am, Sir, yours faithfully, EDWARD WHITE.

For the World's Crisis.

"MY HEART IS FIXED."

The great desideratum for the service of God is a fixed heart; such a heart as knows no variableness of thought, or wish, or feeling, but is at every waking hour of morning, or busy hour of day, like the sun in its course, always on the same side; always, as it were, a nature (and is it not, by the grace of God?) meditating on the things of God, as the needle meditates on the pole; and always finding its springs of joy in him. Such a heart would be as restless away from this its equilibrium as the disturbed needle, or as a fish out of its element. It can not be getting tired of its equipoise, or like a caged bird be constantly trying to get out of its prison. It cannot be easily discouraged, nor tempted away from the fountain of godly joy out of which it drinks.

The devil has a discouraging work when he assays to move a "fixed" heart. There are but few such hearts among professed christians, else there would be more steadfastness of life, more "holding on his way," by the man who professes to be a "pilgrim." It is not rarely now that the heart may feel like holding to its course, but, alas! is lured away, and then, perhaps, weary of its wanderings, and sick of its allurements, it returns like a storm-tossed vessel to its harbor with a strong purpose, honestly formed, never to wander again. It may be its first experience, and it may thus learn the lesson of the "burned child," and keep its tryst; but it is too often true that it gets into this way of wandering, and, getting sickened, returns, resolves, and then wanders again. O for the Psalmist's fixed heart to cry, "O God, my heart is fixed."

THE NEW BIRTH.

We are taught in the holy Scriptures that "except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God." To be born again, is to be renewed, or regenerated. The apostle John says, "Ye must be born again; not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God." This heavenly birth is generated in man by divine power, through the operation of the Holy Ghost. It is a new life concealed, which will be consummated in the resurrection (in the first resurrection, too), "when," as Paul says, "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality," and death shall be swallowed up in victory, at the sounding of the last trump, in the second coming of Christ.

This new birth constitutes a man a new creature in Christ Jesus. His mind being renewed by the Spirit of God, he is endowed with spiritual light and understanding; so that he can think and deliberate on new and divine matters. The conscience is renewed and quickened, purified by the blood of Christ, awed of God, directed by his Spirit, and captivated by the influences of his redeeming love. The will must be subdued, and brought in humble submission to God's will. The affections must be rectified as to their objects. The memory must be qualified to hide the word of God, and to retain the impressions of his love. The body also must be sanctified and rendered an instrument of righteousness.

Thus being thoroughly remodeled, he becomes as a little child. The unerring word declares that "except ye be converted, and become as a little child, ye cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven." Now "if any man be in Christ, he is a new creature; old things have passed away; behold, all things have become new." We must possess the mind and disposition of Christ. For "if any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of his." Christ must dwell in us continually by his Spirit. We must lean upon him; draw all our sap and nourishment from him. "As the branch cannot bear fruit, except it abide in the vine"; neither can we, except we abide in Christ. Now "if the spirit of him that raised up Jesus from the dead dwell in you, he that raised up Christ from the dead shall also quicken your mortal bodies by his Spirit that dwelleth in you."

Then "quench not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption." Cherish its influences in the heart, and it will guide you into all truth. Yours in the faith and love of Jesus Christ,

P. TANDY.

PROMISES.

If Jesus had not said, "Blessed are ye that hunger," I know not what could keep poor, weary pilgrims from sometimes sinking almost in despair. Surrounded by the throng of trifling, careless worldlings; hindered in our labors and our progress by the misconceptions and the misrepresentations of formal professors and indifferent christians; who that loves the whole truth, and lives it, does not find frequent occasion for faintness and weariness, that nothing but unwavering confidence in the sure word of God can remove?

"Blessed are ye." How like a soothing balm it comes to our wounded and aching hearts. Words of One who knew every step of the rough and thorny path his chosen ones must tread. He himself has led the way, and marked out for them every winding, every turning; sending back to those who know his voice the sweetly encouraging direction—"Follow me."

Footsore, fearful, and faltering, we might well-nigh sink in despair, but for the recollection that He who "bore our sins" has promised to bear us up when our strength shall utterly fail. We may be sure he will not suffer us to perish. "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," is our everlasting support. And we must not think that any trial, or affliction, or temptation, can shut us out from his tender and loving sympathy. "Jesus knows," has kept me when all my way was shrouded in night; when rayless and pathless I struggled on amid the gloom, stretching out my hands to the right and to the left, but feeling no support. Straight onward was my only hope; and thus, at last, I came anew to the light of his presence, to the blessed assurance of his love; to the "patient waiting for Christ."

Yes, he who said "Blessed are ye," knows all our hungering and thirsting; all the sighings and cryings, and the unutterable longings of our hearts after real good; all our efforts to lead others into the way of pleasantness and peace, to which his grace has brought our own once wandering feet. And through all times of darkness our hearts must cling to the precious assurance that "Jesus knows" all the circumstances in which we labor, and pray and wait; and by-and-by we shall hear his voice saying unto us, "Come, ye blessed . . . inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."

GEO. T. ADAMS, Secretary.

P. Q. AND P. O.—Some of our correspondents are puzzled to make out the meaning of P. Q. and P. O., when attached to letters. P. Q. stands for Province of Quebec,—formerly Canada East; and P. O. for Province of Ontario,—formerly Canada West. The two provinces are now called "The Dominion of Canada;" and the two sections are distinguished from each other by the abbreviations P. Q. and P. O.

EUROPEAN REVOLUTION.

There are strong indications of a general European revolution before the close of 1870. A "Reform Congress" has just been held in London, at which sixteen nations were represented. The members of the Congress were said to be sterling men, who were taking hold of the matter in a business-like way. They propose to form a grand confederation of nations and set aside the crowned heads. It is evident that these men mean action. They are satisfied the time has come for the people to take the reins of government into their own hands, and govern themselves. The spirit of revolution is taking possession of all classes. Each one seems weary of restraint. Instead of liberty, they want license. This is in harmony with the teachings of the spirits of demons. They are stirring up the nations for the battle of the great day. We are truly living in an hour ominous of mighty events. The day of the Lord is rapidly approaching. A London correspondent, who is well posted in relation to the action of the "Reform Congress," makes the prediction "that the autumn of 1870 will not pass away without a rising throughout Europe. He says if the Russian delegates "are to be believed, Russia is not only ripe for a huge revolution, but the nobility of the land, nay, even many of royal, or rather imperial blood, will be the leaders thereof, when the time of rising comes."

Speaking of the plan of the revolutionists, the correspondent says:—"Their object is to create a number of republican States—as many as there are nationalities—bound together by one federation, the capital of which is to be Paris." It is high time to watch the signs of the times, with renewed interest. It is "sublime" to be living in these last days, so near the time when Jesus will come in all his glory to set up the kingdom of heaven.

NEWS FROM INDIA.

Miss H. G. Brittan writes from India, stating that the people are much interested in the speedy coming of Christ. The following was published in the Chicago Interior:—

"It is remarkable how the whole world seems on the tip-toe of expectation, looking for some remarkable event shortly to happen, just as it was in the days immediately preceding the birth of Christ. And surely the day of his second advent is drawing nigh. What a glorious prospect it is when 'the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ, and when he shall reign from the river even unto the ends of the earth.' A remark I read in the Madras Times, an entirely secular paper, impressed me greatly. After giving a brief summary of the events that took place in the world during last year, and the present position of things, is said:

'Surely none but the most foolish and senseless of men, but must pause at such a time as this, and ask what do all these things mean? Surely the crisis of the most remarkable events the world ever saw are at hand.'

When worldly men see these things, how is it that Christians do not awake? I do feel every day more and more convinced that 'the night is far spent, the day is at hand'—the bright and glorious day of Christ's coming.

We have been talking on these subjects, and Mr. Tracy, who has been a missionary in Southern India for over thirty years, said: 'Let me tell you what the people down there think. The Mahometans say that for the next few years there are to be a great many troubles all over the world, wars, earthquakes, storms, and famines. Then their tenth and greatest Imaun (prophet or high-priest) since Mahomet, is to appear. Then all the wicked are to be cut off, and he is to reign in righteousness all over the earth.

The Hindoos also state that there has been a recent incarnation of Vishnu; that he is at present in the north of India, somewhere in the neighborhood of Cashmere; that he is now about thirteen years old; that he is being thoroughly educated, and as soon as he arrives at man's estate, he will proceed to Delhi, where he will be placed on the throne of his ancestors; that immense treasures are still concealed in that city, which he by his divine wisdom will soon discover; that before this, however, there will be the most dreadful wars, and plagues, and the strangest sights seen both in earth and heaven. Kings and queens, from all parts of the earth, will come to bring him presents, and to worship him, and those who do not, he will destroy. All those who are very wicked will die, but the good will all continue to live most happily while his reign shall last, which will be many thousands of years.

Mr. Tracy tried if he could not trace these traditions up in some way to the Bible, but they are believed and held where the Christian religion was never heard of. Is it not singular?"

IS ELD. MILES GRANT A CONVERT?

In the "World's Crisis," for April 20, we find in an editorial item the following:

"The punishment of the wicked is eternal death in hell, or hades; not eternal life in misery."

That will do, Bro. Grant, if you mean what you say; for, if the wicked have "eternal death in hades," then they never will and never can have a revival. Hades is where the wicked dead are now. Is Bro. Grant converted to the blessed truth of "No life, future or eternal, out of Christ?" It would seem so. We welcome him to the trials and joys of such a faith. It has "joy unspeakable and full of glory." The doctrines of "eternal life in misery" and a "future life in misery" are twins, and live or die together. Kill one and you kill the other. One life blood sustains them both.

The above is from the Herald of Life, April 27th. As we do not like to have our friends entertain erroneous opinions, or rejoice in a mistake, perhaps it may be best to say that our belief in the following Scriptures is unshaken: "And many of them [or the multitudes, as some render it] that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt." Dan. 12: 2. "Marvel not at this; for the hour is coming in the which all that are in the graves shall hear his voice, and shall come forth, they that have done good, unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil, unto the resurrection of damnation." John 5: 28, 29.

"But this I confess unto thee, that after the way which they call heresy, so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and in the prophets. And have hope toward God, which they themselves also allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust." Acts 24: 14–15.

"And the sea gave up the dead which were in it, and death and hell [hades] delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged, every man according to their works." Rev. 20: 13. After hades has "delivered up the dead which" are in it, and they are judged, then they die "the second death," and are returned to sheol, or hades, and there remain dead eternally.

PROPER FOOD.—Prof. J. H. Griscom, of New York, recently gave an interesting lecture on the laws of health, in which he said:

"Food is the source of supply for every atom of the body. The mouth is the port of entry through which the system receives all its repairs. Food strengthens the hand to work. One article which, however, is largely used and taken into the stomach, is not only innutritious, but it is absolutely injurious and even dangerous. That article is alcohol, whether taken in the form of rum, gin, brandy, whisky, wine, or ale. There is, he said, no nutrition in any of them. Vegetable food is the most natural food of man."

FALSE CHRISTS.

BRO. GRANT:—How many false Christs does history enumerate? S. TENNEY.

Some twenty-four false Christs arose between the early part of the second century, and 1666. The following from Buck's Theological Dictionary is the best article we have seen on the subject:—

There have been numerous false Messiahs which have arisen at different times. Of these the Savior predicted, Matt. 24: 14. Some have reckoned as many as twenty-four, of whom we shall here give an account.

1. Caziba was the first of any note who made a noise in the world. Being dissatisfied with the state of things under Adrian, he set himself up at the head of the Jewish nation, and proclaimed himself their long expected Messiah. He was one of those banditti that infested Judea, and committed all kinds of violence against the Romans; and had become so powerful, that he was chosen king of the Jews, and by them acknowledged their Messiah. However, to facilitate the success of this bold enterprise, he changed his name from Caziba, which it was at first, to that of Barchocheba, alluding to the star foretold by Balaam; for he pretended to be the star sent from heaven to restore his nation to its ancient liberty and glory. He chose a forerunner, raised an army, was anointed king, coined money inscribed with his own name, and proclaimed himself Messiah and prince of the Jewish nation. Adrian raised an army, and sent it against him. He retired into a town called Bither, where he was besieged. Barchocheba was killed in the siege, the city was taken, and a dreadful havoc succeeded. The Jews themselves allow, that, during this short war against the Romans, in defence of this false Messiah, they lost five or six hundred thousand souls. This was in the former part of the second century.

2. In the reign of Theodosius the younger, in the year of our Lord 434, another impostor arose, called Moses Cretensis. He pretended to be a second Moses, sent to deliver the Jews who dwelt in Crete, and promised to divide the sea, and give them a safe passage through it. Their delusion proved so strong and universal, that they neglected their lands, houses, and other concerns, and took only so much with them as they could conveniently carry. And on the day appointed, this false Moses, having led them to the top of a rock, men, women, and children, threw themselves headlong down into the sea, without the least hesitation or reluctance, till so great a number of them were drowned, as opened the eyes of the rest, and made them sensible of the cheat. They then began to look out for their pretended leader, but he disappeared, and escaped out of their hand.

3. In the reign of Justin, about 520, another imposter appeared, who called himself the son of Moses. His name was Dunaan. He entered into a city of Arabia Felix, and there he greatly oppressed the Christians; but he was taken prisoner, and put to death by Elesban, an Ethiopian general.

4. In the year 529 the Jews and Samaritans rebelled against the emperor Justinian, and set up one Julian for their king; and accounted him the Messiah. The emperor sent an army against them, killed great numbers of them, took their pretended Messiah prisoner, and immediately put him to death.

5. In the year 571 was born Mahomet, in Arabia. At first he professed himself to be the Messiah who was promised to the Jews. By this means he drew many of that unhappy people after him. In some sense, therefore, he may be considered in the number of false Messiahs.

6. About the year 721, in the time of Leo Isaurus, arose another false Messiah in Spain. His name was Serenus; he drew great numbers after him, to their no small loss and disappointment, but all his pretensions came to nothing.

7. The twelfth century was fruitful in false Messiahs; for about the year 1137, there appeared one in France, who was put to death, and many of those who followed him.

8. In the year 1138 the Persians were disturbed with a Jew, who called himself the Messiah. He collected together a vast army. But he, too, was put to death, and his followers treated with great inhumanity.

9. In the year 1157, a false Messiah stirred up the Jews at Corduba, in Spain. The wiser and better sort looked upon him as a madman, but the great body of the Jews in that nation believed in him. On this occasion almost all the Jews in Spain were destroyed.

10. In the year 1167, another false Messiah rose in the kingdom of Fez, which brought great trouble and persecution upon the Jews that were scattered through that country.

11. In the same year an Arabian set up there for the Messiah, and pretended to work miracles. When search was made for him his followers fled, and he was brought before the Arabian king. Being questioned by him, he replied, that he was a prophet sent from God. The king then asked him what sign he could show to confirm his mission. Cut off my head, said he, and I will return to life again. The king took him at his word, promising to believe if his prediction came to pass. The poor wretch, however, never returned to life again, and the cheat was sufficiently discovered. Those who had been deluded by him were grievously punished, and the nation condemned to a very heavy fine.

12. Not long after this, a Jew who dwelt beyond Euphrates, called himself the Messiah, and drew vast multitudes of people after him. He gave this for a sign of it, that he had been leprous, and was cured in the course of one night. He, like the rest, perished in the attempt, and brought great persecution on his countrymen.

13. In the year 1174, a magician and false Christ arose in Persia, who was called David Almusser. He pretended that he could make himself invisible; but he was soon taken and put to death, and a heavy fine laid upon his brethren the Jews.

14. In the year 1176, another of these imposters arose in Moravia, who was called David Almusser. He pretended that he could make himself invisible; but he was soon taken and put to death, and a heavy fine laid upon his brethren the Jews.

15. In the year 1199, a famous cheat and rebel exerted himself in Persia, called David el David. He was a man of learning, a great magician, and pretended to be the Messiah. He raised an army against the king, but was taken and imprisoned; and, having made his escape, was afterwards seized again and beheaded. Vast numbers of the Jews were butchered for taking part with this imposter.

16. We are told of another false Christ in this same century by Maimonides and Solomon; but they take no notice either of his name, country, or good or ill success.

Here we may observe, that no less than ten false Christs arose in the twelfth century, and brought prodigious calamities and destruction upon the Jews in various quarters of the world.

17. In the year 1497. we find another false Christ, whose name was Ismael Sophus, who deluded the Jews in Spain. He also perished, and as many as believed in him were dispersed.

18. In the year 1500, Rabbi Lemlem, a German Jew of Austria, declared himself a forerunner of the Messiah, and pulled down his own oven, promising his brethren that they should bake their bread in the Holy Land next year.

19. In the year 1509, one whose name was Plefferkorn, a Jew of Cologne, pretended to be the Messiah. He afterwards affected, however, to turn Christian.

20. In the year 1534, Rabbi Salomo Malcho, giving out that he was the Messiah, was burnt to death by Charles the Fifth of Spain.

21. In the year 1615, a false Christ arose in the East Indies, and was greatly followed by the Portuguese Jews, who were scattered over that country.

22. In the year 1624 another in the Low Countries pretended to be the Messiah of the family of David, and of the line of Nathan. He promised to destroy Rome, and to overthrow the kingdom of Antichrist, and the Turkish empire.

23. In the year 1666, appeared the false Messiah Sabatai Sevi, who made so great a noise, and gained such a number of proselytes. He was born at Aleppo, imposed on the Jews for a considerable time; but afterwards, with a view of saving his life, turned Mahometan, and was at last beheaded.

Since the advent of modern Spiritualism in 1848, between two and three hundred have arisen who claim to be Christs. We think these modern ones are those referred to by our Savior in Matt. 24th chapter. After speaking of the "great tribulation," which we think was accomplished under the Papal persecution, symbolized by the "little horn" of Dan. 7: 8, the Savior says:—

"Then if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall show great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before. Wherefore if they shall say unto you, Behold, he is in the desert; go not forth; behold, he is in the secret chambers; believe it not. For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be."—Matt. 24: 23–27.

It appears from the context that these false Christs are to arise after the "great tribulation" is past, and just before the second coming of Christ. Satan may know from the fulfillment of prophecy that Jesus is soon coming, hence he is trying to set up counterfeit Christs to seduce the people away from the true Messiah, and cause them to look for some spiritual fulfillment of literal prophecy. Let us beware of his wiles. Many have already taken up with fables, and are not looking for the coming of the "same Jesus" who was laid in Joseph's new tomb, and was raised again the third day, and afterwards ascended to heaven, to be our High Priest and Mediator till his return to reign on the earth.

A CHEERFUL DISPOSITION.—In this world of trial and perplexity, what is to be more desired than an abiding spirit of cheerfulness? that turn of mind which will lead one to look upon the bright side of every picture? or, if it seems to have no bright side, at least forbear gazing upon the dark side? Do you possess by nature a cheerful disposition? Thank God for an inestimable blessing.

SPIRITUALISM EXPOSED.

F. Von Vleck gave an exhibition as a spiritual medium in this city ten years ago, giving all the manifestations that make the doings of spiritual mediums a mystery to the uninitiated. He appeared again last evening at the Carley House and gave an exhibition to a select party of about twenty, doing the same feats he did when here before and which have ever since been considered unaccountable by those who saw them. At the close of his manifestations he gave explanations showing how they are made and how spiritual mediums manage to deceive the public. He said the great tricks of all slight of hand performers are all very simple when they are understood, and that even such a man as Hermann could not understand the tricks of the Davenport Brothers any better than other people.

The first exposure made was that of the trick in which the medium, while having two witnesses in close proximity to his person to see that he does not move his person, makes, through the spirits of course, several musical instruments to fly about the room and furnish music at the same time. The light was extinguished and the manifestation was made with success. Von Vleck and the committee were seated together beside a table on which the musical instruments laid, and in such positions of personal contact that it was supposed he could not move without being detected by the committee. The hand of one of the committee was placed on the head of Vleck, who grasped the arm of the committee at different places with each of his hands. In this position, in the dark, the musical instruments were hurled about the room in a furious manner, making music, and when the gas was re-lighted the medium and committee still retained the same position and the instruments occupied their places on the table. The committee reported that Vleck had not moved his hands and hence the thing remained a mystery. Then came the explanation and exposure, which was very damaging to the spirits and the part that Spiritualists claim they perform in such manifestations. The explanation was simply that the medium did remove one hand, that he hurled the instruments around him above his head, that the committee was deceived and that it was all done without the aid of the spirits.

The way the committee was deceived is this: The medium grasped the arm of the committee with one hand near the shoulder the thumb being extended towards the elbow. By pressing with that hand the sensation was lessened on the arm below. A moment after, the other hand was placed on the arm, but did not touch it really. The illusion was made by pressing on the arm with the extended thumb, where the hand seemed to rest, and directing at the same time the committee to change the position of his feet. The second hand not being in contact with the arm, was removed as soon as the light was extinguished and did the work that mediums claim is done by the spirits.

Another exposure was that of the case of the medium being tied and the lights put out, when the spirits are claimed to perform all kinds of antics with the musical instruments. The explanation was that the knots are untied in the dark and the medium does the work of the spirits. He said the square knot that many people consider the hardest to untie is the easiest and he showed how easy it is to do it.

He also explained how raps are produced. He stood on a table and subjected himself to the inspection of the committee to satisfy them that he made no motion. While apparently entirely motionless he produced raps at will. He said he did it as all mediums do, by a sudden contraction and relaxation of a certain muscle in the foot that produced the noise, something as some people can do with their fingers or other portions of the body. The sending of the raps to different parts of a room he said was simply an illusion practiced through the skill of the operator.—Schenectady Union of April 21st, 1870.

IMMORTALITY.—Bro. Grant,—We have examined Bro. J. H. Whitmore's book, "The Doctrine of Immortality," published by the Western Advent Christian Publication Association, and we think it the best work on that subject published. It is written in a kind, candid, christian spirit. Its arguments are comprehensive and convincing, commending the book to every reader. Let every lover of the truth get one and read it; then get another, and lend to your neighbors.

"THE PLAN OF REDEMPTION."—Bro. Grant, I wish to just state through the Crisis that I have read "The Plan of Redemption," by Brn. Wellcome and Goud. I consider it a very able work, and would recommend it to all candid readers, especially to those whose minds are in any way unsettled with regard to the two covenants. I think that they will find the nature of the old and the new covenants very clearly and scripturally set forth.

WILL THE WICKED LIVE AGAIN?

MY DEAR BROTHER:—I received yesterday a very kind letter from you, in which I find what seems to me a very pressing invitation to write (for publication in the Crisis) a letter on the subject, or doctrine of the resurrection. And I very gladly accept the invitation. By way of preface, I would say that I am moved at this time in an especial manner by the spirit of love. And while I feel toward you more than ever a heart full of love, I cannot "use sharpness" in any personal way, but I earnestly desire to be led and enabled by the Holy Spirit to "speak forth the words of truth and soberness." I believe that you have a mind ready to see, receive and follow the truth, and that you have no intention or desire to oppose the plain teachings of the Bible and its great Author.

The question now before us is this: "Will the wicked be raised from the dead?" To those who spiritualize the resurrection, and believe that all men enter immediately into the bliss of heaven or the agonies of never-ending torment at death, this question will seem of no importance. But to those who hold that the Bible teaches in plain language that the wicked shall perish utterly, the question whether they have already so perished, and are never to be raised up,—this question seems both interesting and important. I am aware that bitter words have been used in discussing this point, but I have no inclination to follow such a course here. Neither do I invite or expect a public discussion through the Crisis. The proper field for such discussion is in the publications devoted (almost exclusively) to the defense of that doctrine.

Before bringing Scripture texts to prove the resurrection of the wicked, we will consider one point which is made very prominent by the leaders on the other side of the question, and that is the fact that "God is love." Here they rest, and we will see what follows. You remember that the apostle says something in 1 Cor. 3: 12 about building upon a good foundation with "wood, hay and stubble"; and a little further on he indicates that such work "shall be burned," and the workman shall "suffer loss." These words, "God is love," are the foundation of much that is false; that is, much error rests upon this foundation: "God is love," therefore all men will be saved. "God is love," therefore the wicked will never be disturbed, but will be left to rest in eternal silence, and never be called up to receive the just reward of their deeds.

Let us examine this method of reasoning: "God is love," therefore he will never permit any of his creatures to suffer. Is this so? Is there no such thing known as suffering at the present time, or since the world began? There ought not to be if "God is love," and nothing else. But it seems, speaking "after the manner of men," that he is a reasonable being, and also a God of justice as well as of love and mercy. In both the Old and New Testaments he is declared to be a God of vengeance. Now our good non-resurrection friends shudder at this, and declare that we would "transform our God into the theological devil." No, my friends, but we are willing to believe the record that he has given of himself. While he is merciful to all in a general sense, he is merciful to his people in a special and peculiar sense. While it is true that "God is love," it is also true that he is a "consuming fire," and a God that "taketh vengeance." The inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah did not see him revealed as a God of love, but only as a God of vengeance. And in the days of Noah, though the Lord waited long after the warning was given, yet at last he took vengeance upon the world of the ungodly, and destroyed them all.

Let us, then, be careful how we build upon a good foundation with poor material, but rather use the pure gold of truth that will stand the fire. It seems strange to those of us who are established in the belief that there is a day of judgment coming, and that all the dead, small and great, will stand at the bar to be judged; it seems strange that any candid inquirer can fail to see that ALL that are in the graves shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and "they that hear shall live." Yes, "they that have done evil" shall come forth "unto the RESURRECTION of damnation." The shifts made to break the force of this scripture remind me of a sermon I heard many years ago, in Albany, N. Y., on Judas Iscariot. The preacher was a Universalist, and if he could prove that Judas was saved, the idea was that it would follow that all men would be saved. The text was, "Wo unto that man by whom the Son of man is betrayed! it had been good for that man if he had not been born." The sermon was as smooth as a serpent, and resembled the serpent in various ways. Its course seemed to be indirect and uncertain. The aim was to show that Judas was saved, and now in heaven; yet it would have been better for him if he had never been born! It seemed to be a peculiarly difficult case, but the cunning of the serpent sought in the darkness to find an explanation. And it was found by supposing that Judas might have been saved and gone to heaven if he had never seen the light, but had died, as Job wished he had done, before his birth. This exposition was about as satisfactory to me as the position that the "evil," who shall come forth to the resurrection of damnation, are only a part of the righteous who shall be saved—as Judas was—but eternally labor under a great disadvantage on account of their former evil deeds.

No, the plain import of the word is, that ALL, both the righteous and the wicked, shall come forth, and be made alive; but it does not follow that they are all the children of God, because they are called out of their graves. We do not deny the power of God to call the dead from the grave. And we do not know that all the persons whom Christ raised from the dead were righteous. And if he raised the wicked then from the dead, he can again. And he says he will do it. "All shall hear," and all that hear shall live.

Although the passages bearing on this point have been often quoted, yet we may quote a few of them again. Job 21: 30,—"The wicked is reserved to the day of destruction; they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath." Solomon says: "The Lord hath made all things for himself; yea, even the wicked for the day of evil." This day of evil cannot refer to any day this side of the great and last day, for the wicked are not now more subject to tribulation, trial or affliction, than the righteous. David says of the wicked, "Their eyes stand out with fatness; they have more than heart could wish." "Behold, these are the ungodly, who prosper in the world; they increase in riches." "They are not in trouble as other men; neither are they plagued like other men." (See Psalm 73.) The advocates of the non-resurrection theory sometimes complain that we do not meet their points. They will please excuse us if we do not see them. We hardly need ask them to excuse us for refusing to receive error instead of truth.

In conclusion, permit me to ask whether the Holy Spirit leads one saint or believer to believe the truth, and another to disbelieve it? Jesus says, "He will guide you into all truth." John 13: 16. Then does it not follow if we are led by the Spirit we shall be kept from error? By listening to the voice of men, we may be led astray; but if we keep close to Jesus and the Bible, live in the Spirit, walk in the Spirit, and be led by the Spirit, we shall be led into all truth, and we shall "know the truth, and by the truth be made free."

With love unfeigned and undiminished, I am your Bro. in Christ,

Webster, Mass. F. H. CHAMBERLAIN.

REPORTS.

It is with much surprise that I lately learn, by remarks in our papers, that but few of their readers ever read Conference Reports. Is it so? It is not easy for me to believe it so, yet it is possibly true. But do we not always feel a deep interest in the welfare of absent friends and relatives, when we love them as we ought? Do we not eagerly read their letters if they write us, or read anything the papers say about their condition, character, action, prosperity, adversity, calamity, business, or religious connections, etc.? I always do, and really suppose others do. Is it not also a fact that those really alive in the work of the Lord are deeply interested to know how the cause of Christ is prospering in other places beside their own, and how their brethren and sisters—their kinsmen in Christ—are prospering in their pilgrimage and work in the Lord? I think this must be so. Who of us, that travel and labor as evangelists, do not? When we call on our brethren who are active in the Lord's work, we find them anxious to learn all about the brethren and the cause wherever we have been. They ask us a great many questions about them. Tell me such ones don't read "conference reports." I think they do read them.

I always read them, if I do not get time to read anything else. I am anxious to know of the prosperity or the adversity of Christ's cause, and of my brethren everywhere. They may be overdrawn by the scribe, or contain errors; but I learn much I could not otherwise learn, and these Reports are just the places, or documents to learn from. I generally read accounts of the personal travels and labors of those who are evangelists. I am much interested in their journals, and incidents in their labors, and accounts they give of the cause and of their brethren. I learn much from these; yet these are far less valuable documents for real information, as they are moulded by one mind, and are the views and impressions of one mind to a large extent. Much may be of a personal or local nature, which may especially interest the writer far more than any one else. In personal journals, there may be much egotism which would captivate and please a few, while such is not the case with official Reports of our conferences. Those who do not read our Conference Reports do not know much of the wants of the cause, the means used to aid it, the labors and trials of those engaged in it; nor can they feel deeply interested in aiding the missions, the tract cause, and the evangelists. Please all become interested in reading such Reports, and you will gain much, and the cause will gain much sympathy and aid.

I. C. WELLCOME.

"THE RELIGION OF THE DAY."

The religion of the day is (as we have seen) an easy-minded religion, without conflict and wrestling, without self-denial and sacrifice; a religion which knows nothing of the pangs of the new birth as its commencement, and nothing of the desperate struggle with the flesh and with the devil, day by day, making us long for resurrection deliverance, for the binding of the adversary, and for the Lord's return.

It is a second-rate religion—a religion in which there is no largeness, no grandeur, no potency, no noble-mindedness, no elevation, no self-devotedness, no all-constraining love.

It is a hollow religion, with a fair exterior, but an aching heart—a heart unsatisfied, a soul not at rest, a conscience not at peace with God; a religion marked, it may be, by activity and excitement, but betraying all the while the consciousness of a wound hidden and unhealed within, and hence unable to animate to lofty doings, or supply the strength needed for such doings.

It is a feeble religion, lacking the sinews and bones of hardier times—very different from the indomitable, much-enduring, storm-braving religion, not merely of apostolic days, but even of the Reformation.

It is an uncertain religion; that is to say, it is not rooted on certainty; it is not the outflowing of a soul assured of pardon, and rejoicing in the filial relationship between itself and God. Hence, there is no liberty of service, for the question of personal acceptance is still an unsettled thing; there is a working for pardon, but not from pardon. All is thus bondage, heaviness, irksomeness. There is a speaking for God, but it is with a faltering tongue; there is a laboring for God, but it is with fettered hands; there is a moving in the way of his commandments, but it is with a heavy drag upon our limbs. Hence the inefficient, uninfluential character of our religion. It does not tell on others, for it has not yet fully told upon ourselves. It falls short of its mark, for the arm that drew the bow is paralyzed.—H. Bonar.

IN MEMORIAM.

On my last visit to Athol, Mass., I found the church in deep affliction. One of their worthy members, a young man of much promise, and a sincere disciple of Jesus Christ, had suddenly fallen a victim to that fearful enemy, death. Bro. Austin F., the only son of Bro. Austin Ellenwood, of Athol, aged twenty-eight, was suddenly killed, Friday morning, April 15th, while at his work at the saw-mill, by the rolling of logs from the pile and crushing him under them. He left his house about five o'clock A. M. for the saw-mill. As he did not come to his breakfast, his wife became alarmed about him, and went to the mill and looked for him; but not finding him, she apprised his father, who was soon in search. The neighbors assisted, and soon he was discovered under three logs lifeless. Thus, in an unexpected moment, was this dear wife deprived of her husband, and a loving father of his only son; but they "sorrow not as others which have no hope." He was a good christian, a worthy member of the Advent church, an obedient son and faithful husband, loved by all who knew him. Sunday, at our meeting, was a day of weeping, as most of the congregation knew the departed one, and many were related to him.

The funeral services were held at the house of his father, Monday, the 18th, in the presence of a large gathering of relatives and friends. Bro. James Hemenway, who just about a year previous had united them in marriage, preached a timely, truthful, and comforting discourse on this sadly afflictive occasion, from Job 14: 13. It was one of those seasons that are not soon to be forgotten. But "the blessed hope" that the dead will come to life at the sounding of the last trump, and that that trumpet will soon sound, was heart-cheering to his bereaved wife and afflicted father, and numerous relatives, for they have the same hope. The Lord breathe the spirit of consolation and holy resignation on all the relatives and friends, who feel their great loss; also on the church, and through grace divine bring them all into his kingdom of life. Amen. L. BOUTELL.

FASHIONABLE WOMEN.

Fashion kills more women than all their toil and sorrow. Obedience to fashion is a greater transgression of the laws of woman's nature, a greater injury to her physical and mental constitution, than the hardships of poverty and neglect. The slave-woman at her task will live and grow old, and see two or three generations of her mistresses fall away. The washer-woman, with her scanty meal, and with scarcely one ray of hope to cheer her in her toils, will live till her fashionable sisters are all extinct. The kitchen maid is hearty and strong, when her lady has to be nursed like a sick baby.

It is a sad truth that fashion-pampered women are almost worthless for all the good ends of life. They have but little force of character, they have still less power of moral will, and quite as little physical energy. They live for no great purpose in life; they accomplish no great ends. They are dolls formed in the hands of fashionable milliners and servants, to be dressed and fed to order. If they rear children, servants and nurses do all, save to conceive and give them birth. They can not give them the care and food that nature designed, and when reared, what are they? Do they ever amount to but weaker scions of the old stock? Who ever heard of a fashionable woman's child exhibiting any virtue or power of mind for which it became eminent? Read the biographies of our great and good men and women. No one of them had a fashionable mother.—Selected by L. A. Lang.

"FINNEY ON MASONRY."

Rev. C. G. Finney, late President of Oberlin College, has written a book with the above title. It is published by the "Western Tract and Book Society," Cincinnati, Ohio. Price $1. Professor Finney has been a Freemason, but found after taking several degrees that he had been deceived, deluded, befooled and sworn to keep it secret; he then entered into a thorough examination of the subject, and with some forty thousand others renounced Freemasonry years ago. This was soon after they killed Morgan for exposing Masonry. Since then, many books disclosing the institution have been published; but the institution has revived recently and re-entered the churches, and its encroachments upon christianity, upon morals, upon the religious and civil rights of the people, are such as to alarm those who know the nature of the institution, and who love their fellow-men.

This work of Prof. Finney shows that he is fully awakened to the important fact that all men should examine the revelations which have been made of Masonry. His book is a terrible picture of the most horrible oaths, corrupting principles, and dangerous practices of which we could conceive. If this book be true (and he gives such proofs as we cannot doubt), then the institution is the most dangerous to society of any one ever known to exist among men. He has written at the peril of his life, and has been threatened assassination for doing his duty to his fellow-men, having no pecuniary benefits for writing. He claims that all young men should seek a knowledge of this institution, lest they become ensnared by its false claims. Some sixty-six degrees have been revealed.

"The Professor tells us that comparatively few honorable, respectable men ever take more than three degrees, when many become disgusted and silent, fearing to divulge, and ashamed to advance. He claims that the majority of Masons do not themselves know the real nature of the institution, especially of the higher degrees. As we know many professed christians who are active Masons, many real christians who are nominal Masons, and others who are or have been tempted to join them, we think it is high time that all such seek a knowledge of this institution from the revelations made by those who have been Masons; and who at the risk of their lives seek to lead men from Freemasonry to Christ. We have just read this book, and feel assured that no one who can obtain it will regret the dollar paid for it. I. C. WELLCOME.

Correspondence.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

"Study to be quiet, and to do your own business."—1 Thess. 4: 11.

I have been thinking what a blessed good thing it would be if every one would give heed to this language of the apostle. It would serve to make friends instead of enemies. Last evening, a Congregational deacon invited me to preach in their house the next day, as they were destitute of a preacher. I accepted the invitation. We had a good time, and good freedom in speaking. I am satisfied, if we as a people would be kind, and preach the word without pounding other's faith, we can do them good. It is not necessary for us to tear down an old building to get timber to make another. I had rather have all new timber. Brow-beating, twisting and flinging is not of God. Let us know nothing among the people but Jesus Christ, and him crucified.

North Hyde Park, Vt., to me is a new field of labor. I am well pleased with it. I find many warm and kind hearts. The little church here are trying to get into the kingdom.

If we all do as the following poetry prescribes, I think we shall get along nicely.

I'VE BEEN THINKING.

I've been thinking, I've been thinking,
What a glorious world were this,
Did folks mind their business more,
And mind their neighbor's less;
For instance, you and I, my friend,
Are sadly prone to talk
Of matters that concern us not,
And others follies mock.

I've been thinking, if we'd begin
To mind our own affairs,
That possibly our neighbors might
Contrive to manage theirs.
We've faults enough at home to mend—
It may be so with others;
It would seem strange if it were not,
Since all mankind are brothers.

Oh! would that we had charity
For every man and woman;
Forgiveness is the mark of those
Who know "to err is human."
Then let us banish jealousy—
Let's lift our fallen brother;
And as we journey down life's road,
Do good to one another.

J. A. CLEAVELAND.

North Hyde Park, Vt., March 27th, 1870.

From Bro. H. J. Baldwin.

Bro. Grant:—I would like to say to the brethren and sisters who read the Crisis, that New Preston, Ct., has once more been blessed by the Lord. We have been having very interesting meetings since Feb. 13th. At that time we expected Bro. Elliott, but he did not get here on account of bad traveling. The Lord did not disappoint us, but blessed us with his own presence. From that time to this (April 29th) we have had prayer and conference meetings every other evening. We have had but little preaching. Bro. Wood, of Collinsville, has been with us some, and the good Lord has blessed his labors. Several have been converted, and a number of backsliders reclaimed. Hobbies are set one side, and union prevails.

I write this to say that we want help. Several want to be baptized. Who shall forbid water? We want help now. We are poor, but what we have is the Lord's, and you are welcome to share with us. Praise the name of the Lord for what he has done for us. Pray for us. H. J. BALDWIN.

BRO. E. L. BITLER writes from New York, May 2nd, 1870:—"Last month I sent to you for some tracts, as I was anxious to be better informed with regard to the truths contained in the Bible. I have read them carefully, and am fully convinced that they contain nothing but Bible truths. I have been out in the mission field for six or seven years, and am sorry to say that, until recently, I was in the dark, believing that the soul was immortal, etc., etc. I am yet a learner, and while I am studying the word, I am also trying to obey the command, 'Go work in my vineyard.'"

Obituaries.

LUCAS. Died, in Hartford, Me., March 29th, 1870, Dea. Amasa Lucas, aged eighty-two years and eleven months.

The subject of this notice embraced religion and united with the Baptist church in 1816, remaining with them twenty-two years. Then the benevolence and kindness of his christian heart caused him to turn from the unscriptural doctrine of eternal wo for the unsaved, to the idea that all would finally be restored to God's favor. He remained with the Universalists a few years, until he became interested in the doctrine of the speedy coming of Christ and its kindred truths. Being a man of much reading, and a great Bible student, this opened a flood of light to his mind, which he rejoiced in during the remaining portion of his pilgrimage. He was no ordinary man. The community deeply feel the loss of an exemplary citizen, from whom they never received an unkind or bitter word. The church has lost a worthy member and an able man. He leaves a lonely widow, children, brother and sisters, with a large circle of relatives and friends to mourn his loss.

The sermon at his funeral was preached from Ps. 17: 15,—"As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness; I shall be satisfied when I awake with thy likeness" (his selection.) He sleeps in Jesus,

"Blessed sleep,
From which none ever wake to weep."

E. M. HAGGETT.

DOW. Died, in South Berwick, Great Works, Me., March 7th, of diphtheria, Mary Bell Dow, daughter of Harrison and Fanny F. Dow, aged nine years.

Mary was a very lovely child, of an amiable disposition, beloved by all who knew her. She always loved to hear about Jesus' coming. Her afflicted parents and friends were comforted by a discourse from D. M. Leavitt, on the resurrection from the dead, founded on 1 Thess. 4: 14–18. A. B. SHOREY.

PORTER. Died, in Pike, Bradford Co., Pa., March 29th, 1870, Eld. Nathaniel Potter, formerly of Westport, Mass., aged fifty-eight years and eleven months.

In early life he enlisted under the banner of the Prince of life and glory, and went forth to proclaim the gospel news to perishing and dying mortals, and was successful in doing much good in the cause of our adorable Redeemer. A few years since his health began to fail, until he was unable to preach the gospel in places of worship as he had done before, yet he tried to do all he could wherever he went. He had unwavering faith that Zion's King would soon appear to give eternal life to all the pure and good of every clime.

Words of consolation were spoken on the funeral occasion by Elder H. H. Gray, from Num. 23: 10. M.

DAY. Died, in Kennebunk, April 19th, Jacob P., only child of Bro. M. M. and Sister A. Day, aged fourteen years and nine months.

This dear boy gave his heart to God about two years ago, and was buried in the likeness of Christ's death. He was ambiable and highly esteemed by all his young associates. The bereaved parents mourn the loss of their only child, but they mourn not without hope.

Funeral services attended by the writer, assisted by Bro. B. S. Emery. W. H. MITCHELL.

JONES. Died, in Alton, N. H., April 9th, 1870, Sister Mehitable Jones, aged ninety years, three months, and twenty-three days.

Our sister having made God her refuge for many years, was ready to lay her armor peacefully by, to come up in the glorious morning of the first resurrection. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer at the funeral, from Romans 8: 24. J. G. SMITH.

PECK. Died, near New Hartford, Butler Co., Iowa, of scarlet fever, Fred Archer, only child of Nelson H. and Jane Peck, aged four years, seven months, and six days.

Sermon by the writer, from Matt. 19: 14,—"Suffer little children," etc.

"Yet stay the anguish of thy heart,
Nor of thy grief with mourning tell,
What though thy hopes like dreams depart,
Still faith confesses it is well,"

from the little grave. PETER S. W. DEYO.

PARIS, May 4. It is asserted that M. Thiers will issue a manifesto advising Frenchmen to vote "no" on the Plebiscitum.

The Emperor's proclamation has been distributed throughout the country, and is now in the hands of every voter.

The committee in favor of the Plebiscitum have issued their last address to the electors, declaring that they must put aside by a strong vote the irreconcilable minority, which resorts, in its opposition to the Government, to all means, even conspiracy, bombs and infernal machines. The manifesto concludes: "You must go to the polls on next Sunday, and vote as in 1848, with banners flying, and shouting 'Vive Napoleon!' If you desire liberty, order, stability and prosperity, you must vote for the plebiscitum."

LONDON, May 5. A Brussels dispatch says that Archbishop Kenrick has gone to Naples to finish his protest against Papal infallibility. Dupanloup's reply to Archbishop Spalding, on the matter of infallibility, will soon be published.

The Pope has urged that the discussion on the infallibility question be closed before ascension day. The committee on that subject has promised to present a revised schema immediately. One tenth of the Bishops present, including Germans and Hungarians, voted against the schema for a smaller catechism.

PARIS, May 6. The Journal Official this morning contains a decree convoking the High Court of Justice for the trial of those recently arrested for participation in the plot against the life of the Emperor.

PARIS, 6th. The edition of the Rappel was seized to-day by the police. Trouble is reported at Lyons, where the authorities have interrupted the publication of the Cloche newspaper.

PARIS, May 9. The returns received to this hour foot up, "Yes," 7,126,288; "No," 1,485,844. The vote of the army, so far as known, stands, "Yes," 219,000; "No," 36,598. It is estimated that without counting the vote of the arondissements, army, navy and Algeria, the Government will have a majority of over 5,000,000. The excitement has been intense all day, but there has been no disturbance whatever. The military precautions are still continued.

A Council of Ministers was held to-day, at which the Emperor presided. It is reported as the result of the Council's deliberations that the Ministers will tender their resignations to-morrow, and M. Ollivier will be charged by the Emperor with the formation of a new Cabinet.

The Emperor has complimented the Prefect of Police for his success in maintaining public order.

Victor Hugo has been cited to appear before a tribunal for his article in the Rappel, exciting hatred and contempt for the Government.

RELIGIOUS FANATICISM IN RUSSIA.—The fearful lengths to which religious fanaticism will carry an ignorant and superstitious people, is illustrated by a sect in Russia known as Marelschicks, who believe and practice the doctrine of self-mutilation and not unfrequently that of self-immolation, holding that thereby they are at once translated to a world of never-ending bliss. It is related that forty peasants, members of the sect of Morelschicks, having practiced their rites until they had come to the conviction that they had attained to a condition of perfect purity, which, however, might be endangered if they remained any longer upon earth, deliberately planned to sacrifice each other's life. They proceeded to a barn situated at some distance from the village, taking with them a block of wood, a cleaver and a rope. When all had formed in solemn array around the block, one stepped forward and laid his head upon it; another came up, seized the cleaver and cut his head off; the second one was decapitated by the third, and so on. Not a cry of agony was heard, and thirty-nine victims lay weltering in their blood. The fortieth of these fanatics—a merchant—was yet alive; two of his sons lay dead at his feet; it was his turn to die, and for him the rope was reserved. When he had already put the noose around his neck he was overcome by remorse, as he had told his wife nothing of what was going on, and he felt troubled at leaving her alone on earth. He went back to the village, whence he conducted his wife to the barn. When she saw the horrible spectacle, and her sons dead on the ground, her cries and lamentations attracted some persons who chanced to be near by. They reported the facts to the authorities and the survivor of the forty was sent to Siberia.

FRANCE AND THE PLEBISCITE.—As the 8th of May approaches the excitement in France becomes more and more intense. The government does all it can—and it can do much—to make the election sure. Every precaution is being taken by the government to bring the people to the ballot box with an affirmative vote. When we remember that every officer in the army, that every prefect of every department, that every mayor of every city and every township and every village in France is bound to do as he is bid, it is not possible to doubt that the Emperor must come off victorious.—New York Herald.

REVIVAL AT MONROVIA.—A revival, excelling in power and fruits any ever before known, was in progress in Monrovia and other parts of Liberia at the time of the date of the letter, Nov. 3d, from which the following extract is taken:

"I have the most cheering news to communicate. One of the most powerful and wide-spread revivals of religion ever known in this city, even exceeding that of 1839 in some of its features, has been in progress for over three weeks. Not less than one hundred and thirty persons have been converted. The Methodist Episcopal church for two weeks was thronged from daylight to late at night, services of various kinds being kept up continually. Scarcely a family has been passed by without some drops from the heavenly shower. A son of President Payne; a son of ex-President Warner, who served his country so well in the executive chair; a grandson of the immortal A. D. Williams, and one of the three graduates of Liberia College; two daughters and a son of one of our merchant princes, G. Morse, Esq.; two sons and three daughters of the late Attorney General, Hon. F. Payne; the eldest daughter of ex-Chief Justice Royce; these, and many more I cannot enumerate, are among the converts.

It was thought by many old christians that the little cloud which had been dimly seen at a great distance was drawn near by the constant, united, fervent prayers of the Ministerial Prayer Association, lately organized in this city. Services were held in all the churches. Episcopalians, Baptists, Presbyterians, and Methodists were seen in each other's places of worship, laying aside all minor considerations for the time being, and paying, exhorting, singing, preaching, encouraging, and thus making common cause with each other. Our Sunday-school has almost been swept! Blessed be God! prayers which seemed like seed covered over with snow and frost for so many, many months, have germinated, sprung up, and green leaves and even buds are appearing. Nine of our Sunday-school teachers, for hitherto we have had to work with some unconverted co-laborers, have been converted, and of scholars quite an army. Salvation has come, too, to our house, as well as to others. Two of our hired servants have been blessed. The work is still progressing."—January African Repository.

DOMESTIC.

UNION MEETING.—Rev. B. S. Batchelder preached in the North Congregational Church last evening from John xiv, 3: "And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself; that where I am, there ye may be also." Christ was about to leave his disciples, their hearts were sad in consequence, and Jesus spoke to them these words of comfort, "I will come again." There are two modes of interpreting scriptural language; the extremely literal, and the extremely metaphorical; the medium course is usually the true one. 1. The "coming" here promised is a real coming, and not a mere poetic reference to the death of christians, the destruction of Jerusalem, the outpouring of the Holy Spirit, at Pentecost or at any subsequent time, or any other event or providential dispensation short of the personal appearing of the Son of God. The language of the text obviously implies no less than this; the circumstances under which the words were uttered, compel us to believe that Christ would use great plainness of speech; the disciples would unquestionably understand that a personal coming was meant, and other scriptures fully teach the same doctrine. See Acts 1: 11, Heb. 9: 28. This has been the prevailing faith of the Christian Church in all ages. 2. The purpose of this coming, as here stated, is that Christ may receive his people to himself, that where he is they may be also. This implies the close of human probation, the resurrection of the just, the judgment, the destruction of the wicked and the completion of New Jerusalem, the "place" of which Christ speaks. 3. When Christ will come we may not know with exactness, but will come in the Father's appointed time, when prophecy is fulfilled, when the harvest of the earth is ripe, when the number of the elect is complete, in an hour when men are not aware. 4. This doctrine should have a practical effect upon us, leading us to inquire, "Am I Christ's? Is my work being done faithfully?" It should moderate our earthly joys, buoy us up in sorrow with the comforts of hope, and stimulate to earnest desire to lead others to Christ.—New Bedford Standard. April 16th, 1870.

The Fenian Conspirators.

The recent resignation of Col. Kirwan, Fenian Secretary of War, has embarrassed Gen. O'Neill. The colonel had, it is said, been induced to accept a post in the organization upon representations which were not altogether founded in fact; and on discovering this to be the case, at the last meeting of the Senate in this city, he returned to Philadelphia, put his office in order, and cut his connection with 10 West Fourth street at once. This disarranged, for the time being, all O'Neill's plans for an immediate descent upon Canada, as he relied mainly upon Kirwan, who alone was in possession of all the particulars of the projected campaign. A defection so important at a junction so critical could not be remedied in a moment; and hence the Dominion has not been yet visited this spring by the terrible Fenians.

Far-seeing and honest as O'Neill is said to be, he has made mistakes. While surrounded by a Senate and Executive Committee, all of whom were sworn officers, he ought to have consulted them on the details of his intended campaign. It was neither wise nor polite of him to refuse to enlighten Mr. P. J. Meehan, president of the Senate and acting Secretary of War, on this head, or to inform that gentleman that he should hold no conversation wit him on the subject unless under a new and special oath of secrecy. Mr. Meehan urged that he was already a sworn member of the Senate; but all to no purpose. O'Neill was inexorable, and there the matter ended.

The first misunderstanding between O'Neill and the Senate occurred shortly after the Pittsburgh Convention. Perceiving that his salary of $2,000 per gnnum, as president of the organization, was but poor pay for his loss of time and business, and for his family, he is said to have drawn an additional three dollars per day from the Fenian treasury. This was stopped by the Senate; an act which was considered by O'Neill and his friends small indeed. However, small or large, it caused the first bad blood between him and them, poisoned all their after relations, and led to the recent rupture.—N. Y. Eve. Post.

Passing Events.

☞ The Israelites residing in Lithuania and Poland are about emigrating in extensive parties to the countries lying on the river Don, and situated among the mountains of the Caucasus. Large numbers are also coming to the United States. The Government of Russia has consented to the removal, and furnishes a passport and sixty dollars to each emigrant. Important aid has been derived from contributions raised in London, Paris and the United States.

☞ The street passenger cars in Philadelphia, employed by seventeen different companies, number 688, with 179 miles of tracks. Last year they carried 55,000,000 passengers. Nine persons were killed and twelve injured by accidents. The receipts from passengers amounted to $3,500,000.

☞ Thirty-eight Spanish bishops announce from Rome their refusal to take the oath to the new constitution of Spain, although the Pope interposes no objection.

☞ The Czar of Russia is alarmingly ill, and has been hastened to the baths of Ems. The Czarina is also in delicate health.

☞ Napoleon III was sixty-two years old on the 20th of April.

☞ Eight million copies of a letter Napoleon has written to his voters concerning the plebiscite, are to be printed.

☞ Private advices from Florence state that Prince Bonaparte will arrive in this country next month.

For the World's Crisis.

ONE BY ONE.

One by one, our sins surprise us,
One by one, we learn them all;
One by one, our blessed Jesus
With his blood atones for all.

One by one, our sorrows gather,
One by one, they soon depart;
For 'tis he, our dear Redeemer,
Who removes them from our heart.

One by one, dense clouds will gather,
Frowning closely on our heads,
And we hear the distant mutter
Of the storm we so much dread.

One by one, the clouds are rifted,
Light streams o'er our up-turned face;
Thus our sorrows shall be lifted
From our sad hearts by His grace

One by one, our friends are taken,
One by one, we count their fall;
One by one, we know they'll waken
At the resurrection call.

One by one, thank God, we'll greet them
In a bright and fairer land;
And each voice shall swell the anthem,
"Worthy, worthy, is the Lamb."

SOPHIA JACKMAN.

For the World's Crisis.

"WALK IN THE SPIRIT."
Gal. 5: 16.

The important discoveries which the holy Scriptures make, respecting the blessed Spirit's agency, are connected with cautions or directions of the utmost moment to man's eternal welfare. "Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh."—Gal. 5: 16. "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption."—Eph. 4: 30. Our advancement in the divine life, and growing meetness for a home in the kingdom, depend upon it. Can the lamp burn without oil to feed its flame? Can the cold earth bloom with vernal beauty without the sun to warm its frozen surface, and to call that beauty forth? Can the stream flow whose fountain is dried up? Can the limbs move when the heart has ceased to act? Yet as easily would the lamp burn without the oil, the earth bloom without the enlivening sun, the stream flow without a fountain, and the limbs move when the heart is still in death, as a man shine in christian graces without the sanctifying Spirit. Then prize the Spirit. "Quench not the Spirit." Grieve not the Spirit. Grieve it not by slighting its blessed and holy influences. Grieve it not by undervaluing its aid. Grieve it not by allowing unclean imaginations and hateful passions to harbor in its temple. Grieve it not by lagging in the christian course, when it prompts you to run the race that is set before you. Grieve it not by cherishing a slothful, lukewarm mind, when it is exciting in your soul desires after fervent piety and distinguished usefulness.

Perhaps the Scriptures contain no admonition more momentous than this; yet how is it forgotten. "Thou shalt not kill"; "thou shalt not steal"; "thou shalt not commit adultery," and similar commandments, are frequently recollected; but, "Grieve not the Holy Spirit of God" is, by many who profess religion, an almost unguarded precept. As you wish for eternal blessedness, regard this important precept, and let it govern and rule your life. Often think, Is there anything in the disposition I cherish, or the conduct I pursue, calculated to grieve the Spirit? or am I anxious to enjoy its blessed aid, and to be guided and led by it? To these admonitions the Lord Jesus Christ adds what is in fact a direction, to pray for the Spirit's aid: "I say unto you, Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you. For every one that asketh, receiveth; and he that seeketh, findeth; and to him that knocketh, it shall be opened. . . . If ye then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children; how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask him." Encouraging consideration. Such a Father will not refuse a blessing so precious.

While we are taught that the Spirit's influence is of so much consequence to our own comfort, holiness, and happiness, we are reminded that it is of equal importance in our endeavors to benefit others. "Who then is Paul, and who is Apollos, but ministers by whom ye believed, even as the Lord gave to every man. I have planted, Apollos watered; but God gave the increase. So, then, neither is he that planteth anything, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase."

An animating motive for gratitude is furnished by this subject. Had a kind physician, at an immense expense, ransomed from the gallows a wretch condemned to die, and then cured him of a deadly plague that infused its poison through every vein, and threatened him with a dreadful and inevitable death, this man would lie under a vast and two-fold obligation to his kind benefactor. Yet how insignificant would be these obligations, compared with those under which every heir of the kingdom is brought. He, like this ruined but favored criminal, has enjoyed a double deliverance from death and ruin, from condemnation without, and the plague of sin within. O how divinely amiable does God appear as exhibited in the Scriptures, and how infinitely glorious a scheme is that for human redemption!

The Father pities an undone world, and cherishes love so infinite that he gives his beloved Son to be the sinner's sacrifice. He sends him into this world, by one dreadful offering of himself, to atone for sins unnumbered, and for guilt that deserved eternal death. The Son, acting his part in the wonderful plan of mercy, assumes human nature, and comes to be a willing victim. He dies, and accomplishes his Father's purposes and his own. The scheme of mercy has proceeded so far, that God can now be just and criminal man be saved, sin be punished, and the sinner be forgiven; for the Son of God has atoned for sin, and brought in an everlasting righteousness. He rises from the dead, and his Father thus declares that justice has no more claim on him. He rises to heaven to pursue the work of mercy, by acting as mediator between God and man. But all parts of this amazing scheme are not developed. The agency of the Spirit is now introduced to complete the wonderfully gracious plan. It enlightens the mind, subdues the soul, and disposes it to adore the Father's love and to rest on the Son's sacrifice. Thus God begins the scheme, carries it forward, and God completes it. From first to last it is divine. It began in divine love; it ends in human happiness and redemption, promoting divine glory. It began in heaven, was pursued on earth, and ends in the kingdom of righteousness, and the home of the saved. It began in heaven, was carried on in time, and, when completed extends its effects to all eternity.

This transitory world is the theatre on which the most wonderful part of this plan was acted; but it originated in the eternal world, and is completed there. Man, the object of this scheme, stands highly indebted to the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. Had either been withheld, man would have been forever undone. The atonement of the Son would not benefit the sinner, were the influence of the Spirit withheld; nor would the influence of the Spirit prepare him for a glorified state, were an interest in the atonement denied him; nor would either have been exerted for him, had not the Father so loved the world as to give his only begotten Son for human salvation. O, see God acting all through this scheme of mercy, and filling up the wondrous whole. See man, the object of the eternal Father's pity, of the Son's sufferings, and of the Spirit's influence. See every heir of the kingdom indebted, eternally indebted, to Father, Son, and Holy Spirit. And among the nations of the saved, not one can or ever will be found not thus indebted.

Thus, while God is seen shining conspicuously through all the scheme of love, beginning, pursuing, and completing the wonderful plan; the Son's sacrifice, the Spirit's influence, working out the wonderful plan of redemption, will call forth adoration and praise from every saint or child of God. O let us adore this mysterious love, admire this amazing work of mercy, and pray to be the ineffably happy partakers of this unsearchable grace. Let us walk in the Spirit, and glorify God in all we do, say, think, and are; and then, "when Christ, who is our life, shall appear," we shall "also appear with him in glory."

"NEVER DYING SOULS."

The above phraseology has become hoary with traditional usage among religionists, and often with sincere christians there is associated with it the sacredness of truth. No text of Scripture could be disputed in their presence, as to its divine authenticity, and deep, under-lying truthfulness, less easily than this same above-quoted language. We once held it thus sacred ourself, supposing certainly, as many do, that it was as much recognized by the Bible as the existence of a God. The two points we regarded as co-important, and we well remember our pious horror when we first heard the Editor of the "Crisis" question its scripturalness and truthfulness. We would not therefore venture to question it, or the propriety of any other such heartily-cherished opinion, simply for the sake of doing so. We have too much regard for the religious feelings which are associated with it, to seize it and ruthlessly tear it out of the hearts and faith of those to whom it is as dear as the Scriptures of truth. But we have long ago lost that horror we first felt when this our darling theory was questioned; and in doing so we have learned this valuable lesson, to wit: that theories and dogmas, creeds and opinions, must ever be subject to the ordeal of close, biblical criticism. Without that, tradition may be mingled with truth, and venerated equally with it, the truth being undistinguishable among the mass of traditional, human rubbish which is gathered around it; or there may be no semblance of truth in the whole theory, and yet there be no loss of credence in it. Hence the important question is, not what I believe, but what the Bible teaches; for simple opinion, aside from the Bible, is valueless, and not to be entertained by honest-hearted people even for an hour.

It must be by mere opinion, certainly, that the "never-dying-soul" dogma is held so fast; for it is never mentioned in the Bible, and must therefore be subject to our criticism, and be rejected on a Bible hypothesis as unworthy of our confidence. If God intended we should believe such a doctrine, would he not (for, could he not) have expressed it in words plain, unequivocal, precise, and strong? He has stated other matters as plainly as this would be.

All the doctrine of the Bible is stated thus plainly, and if in any case it is woven into parables, metaphors, similes, symbols, or any other type, or figure, then the plain, ungarnished words of truth stand as an index to the whole. Hence we ought, if it is the divine will that we should believe that man has or is an "immortal soul," a "never-dying soul," to have some texts in the Bible on this principle of literal plainness, like the following: Ye have never-dying souls; wherefore should ye sin and doom them to endless wo? That text, too, should have gone into the writings of Moses, who is now, for the interests of such a doctrine, painfully and wonderfully silent. It would also allow the advocates of the dogma, if they care much, as it would seem they must, for scriptural proof, to breathe much easier. They could more successfully meet the opposition of those who contend for the doctrine in literal language, for that would be plain enough to satisfy the most difficult and literal-language confirmed opponent; certainly if we could read that text as genuine to the Bible, instead of its opposite, which is already there, to wit: "The soul that sinneth, it shall die"; we should change to a "'bout face," and the advocates of the "never-dying" doctrine would not be so troubled and perplexed as they now are with this "hard-to-be-understood" text; as they are now obliged to say of it that, It means—ahem—it means—well—it means—yes, it means that—that—that you will not die, but live forever; for to "die" means to be cut off from happiness and the favor of God, and be forever alive in misery. An ingenious effort is thus made, certainly, and the last effort of a drowning man to catch at a straw characterizes such an attempt to interpret the plain, literal, obstinate, truth-telling texts which God has placed right in the way of such a doctrine as this of which we speak.

Again, if Paul would only have said, "Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your (never-dying) souls" from endless wo; or if Jesus had said, "Fear him who is able to destroy" (i. e., cut off from happiness) your never-dying souls in endless misery, and had incorporated these improvements, on what they really did write and say, into the place where the originals now stand, to be constitutionally there as inspiration, it never would have been half the work for the advocates of this scriptureless theory to have met the Bible views we advocate—that man's soul must die, and consequently cannot by any means be undying, or "never-dying." They would be saved, too, the loss of so many strong men and excellent members from their ministry and churches, who are not ALLOWED TO STAY where these erroneous views are held, because they are so fully convinced that the Bible is all on the other side, and who so persistently turn about and repeat, "from Genesis to Revelation," so many excellent Bible proofs, that they are justified in refusing the traditions of men, for the truth of God that man is "mortal" and "dying," and not "immortal" and "undying"; and then, as the sharpest cut of all, because of the plainness of the word on this side of the question, challenge for one solitary text in the whole "word of God" which thus states and proves that favorite, but unbiblical, dangerous dogma, of "a never-dying soul."

THE BACKBITER AND SLANDERER.

O how unlike the spirit of Christ is the spirit of the backbiter and the slanderer. How unlike the follower of the meek and lowly Jesus, is the person who, in the absence of another, employs an unruly member, the tongue, in slandering, insinuating and reproaching some neighbor for the gratification of self-esteem or retaliation and revenge. What a pest to society; what a curse on a neighborhood is he or she, who, instead of doing to others as they would wish to be done by, search, listen, and strive to catch at every word, or what they may call an improper action, to find excuse for stigmatizing and blasting the reputation of their neighbors or some one who does not belong to their society, or whom they consider not so popular as they wish to make themselves appear. And above all, for such conduct to come from persons professing the religion of Jesus. But do such persons, however great their pretence to piety and religion, do they possess it? Impossible! for if any man hath not the spirit of Christ he is none of his. The spirit of Christ is a spirit of love, benevolence, good will, peace and forgiveness. He ever went abroad doing good; making peace, and stopping the mouths of gainsayers and slanderers. Oh, how much better it would be for society, how much better for such individuals, if they bridled their tongues and looked into their own hearts, before they gave vent to their passions that set the fires of hell to blazing, producing a smoke that will only be blown into their own eyes. If the most trivial report unfavorable to a person's reputation be raised, it is to the slanderer and backbiter a feast of fat things. They seize upon it as a hungry eagle upon his prey, bearing it about, and like a whirlwind it draws into its vortex a variety of improbable circumstances which increases its force; one person relates it to another, with something more, and thus the devil is exalted and the innocent degraded.

A certain writer says of slander, "Hell cannot boast so foul a fiend, nor man deplore so foul a foe." It is the poisoned arrow whose wound is incurable; it is the heart-searching dagger of the dark assassin; it is the mortal sting of the deadly adder; murder is its employment; innocence its prey, and ruin its spoil. Slanderers are dangerous persons, for who is secure, whose reputation is safe, while such foes lurk about in darkness, seeking whom they may devour. A person's reputation is as dear to them as their own heart's blood. For a good name, says Solomon, is rather to be chosen than great riches; and says the illustrious Shakspeare—

"Who steals my purse, steals trash—'tis something, nothing;
'T was mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands;
But he who filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed."

Yes, however wealthy a person may be, if his reputation is prostrated, he may be said to be poor indeed, for wealth without a favorable reputation is but an empty sound. It is much the best, if people cannot in conscience speak well of their neighbors, to say nothing about them. If they cannot find any good to communicate in their respective visits concerning their fellow beings, whether high or low, rich or poor, professor or no professor of religion; let that charity that covers a multitude of sins be thrown over their supposed failings, and if any have just occasion to speak or think evil of their fellow creatures, let them go and see them face to face, and thereby adjust all difficulties, and settle all things in peace, for "when there is no tale-bearer the strife ceases."

How often are families and neighborhoods set in angry commotion and bitterness toward each other by the mischievous tongue of the slanderer and the backbiter. It is almost impossible, even for wise men, to compute the infinite misery, disgrace and wretchedness produced by those daring co-workers with Satan—those men and women who are often found even in so-called moral society. And it is true—and "pity 'tis 'tis true"—that many seemingly unimpeachable characters will sometimes assist in sowing "broadcast" this evil, backbiting seed, which is sure to take root and spring up like tares among wheat, and choke and destroy the good seed of peace, prosperity and happiness, which has been so frequently sown by the wise and good in all ages. "O, tell it not in Gath, publish it not in the streets of Ashkalon."

Then, oh slanderer, whoever thou art, remember that thou art accountable for thy words, and that God will by no means clear the guilty, but will bring every work and every secret thing into judgment, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

TENDERNESS.

"Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."—Eph. 4: 32.

It seems to me that there is no point upon which christians should be more guarded than the one which heads this article. I have traveled more or less in all the Eastern States, and have attended campmeetings, conferences, and preached in cities, and in the country; have visited from house to house, and talked and prayed with the people; but as far as my observation and experience extend, I see no point where many professed christians are deficient so much as in this. There is a lack of tenderness, compassion and love, toward the weak and erring. We have evidently come down to that period in the history of our world where we may look for the development of those traits of character described by the apostle in his letter to Timothy. Men were to be "proud," "fierce," "without natural affection," "despisers of those that are good," etc.

This spirit prevails and increases everywhere. It is not only seen in the world and the nominal church, but it creeps in among those who claim to have greater light, and therefore ought to be the best people on earth. The devil is constantly engaged in stirring up envy, malice, hatred, suspicion, jealousies, strife and evil-surmisings among the people of God. I know of quite a number of churches that have been torn and mangled in a shocking manner, because some of their members were willful, stubborn, and full of hatred. Instead of being "kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another," when some little offense has arisen, the devil has taken advantage of human nature, and stirred up hard feelings, and created contentions and divisions, until the whole neighborhood is in an uproar; the lambs are killed, Christ dishonored, the Spirit grieved, and the way of truth evil spoken of. O how much evil might be remedied and often prevented by a few kind words.

How many families and churches might share the hundred-fold of joy and happiness, if all possessed a tender heart, and were willing to forgive. How many erring ones might be reclaimed, and brought into the fold of Christ, if tender hearts and kind words attended their wayward course. Is it not time there was a change? Ought not the eleventh commandment to be more strictly obeyed? Can we be christians and not have the spirit of Christ? What saith the apostle? "If any man have not the spirit of Christ, he is none of his." If we have the spirit of Jesus, will it make us ugly, and full of bitterness and strife? No, it cannot be. "The fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, temperance; against such there is no law." Whoever drinks of this fountain will be a new creature; old things will have passed away. A fountain cannot send forth sweet water and bitter at the same time. If the spirit is in us, like a well of water springing up, our influence will be felt for good upon those around us. The christian lives and walks with a well of gentleness, goodness and love in his heart. His words and actions tell for God and the good of men. Let us, then, get nearer to the living fountain. Let us partake more largely of the spirit of Jesus, who was meek and lowly in heart.

What instructions would Paul give if he were here? Listen to him. "Let no corrupt communication proceed out of your mouth, but that which is good to the use of edifying, that it may minister grace unto the hearers. And grieve not the Holy Spirit of God, whereby ye are sealed unto the day of redemption. Let all bitterness, and wrath, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice. And be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you."

O how great has been God's love to us! Who can measure its depth or its height? It is a boundless ocean. We are nothing but sinners, enemies; yet God so loved us, that he gave Jesus to die that we might have eternal life. Our sins have been like scarlet, but for the sake of his Son he freely forgives us all. His love has followed us all our days. His love has forgiven us ten thousand times. His love protects us amid the dangers of the wilderness. His love holds up before us the crown of unfading joys; and his love will bring the faithful safely home, to share the raptures and enjoy the endless delights of the paradise of God. O, then, in view of the compassion, tenderness and love of our heavenly Father towards us, ought we not to show pity and kindness toward one another? There are sorrowful hearts all around us. One kind word, or gentle look, will send a gleam of sunlight along their gloomy way. Let us forgive, as we hope to be forgiven. Let us seek the wandering and the lost, and when the conflicts and sorrows of this life are past, we will sing with the white-robed band, on the banks of the river of life—

"Could we but see what hidden lies
Beneath the outward form;
Could we but hear the deep felt sighs
Which from the heart are drawn;
Or did we see what sorrows hang,
Like a dark curtain round
The heart, that late so sweetly sang,
With such a cheerful sound;
Or knew we what the motives are
Which govern every deed;
Or the various things which mar
The winding path we lead;
Or did we know the secret wish
The effort to do right,
And the temptation they resist,
Unknown to other sight;
Knew we the whole of every mind,
And all that dwells within,
O, could we ever be unkind,
Or cause a soul to sin?
But would we not more earnest be
To cheer the lonely one,
And ever strive to do and speak
That which would trouble none?"

J. W. THOMAS.

MEDITATION.

The heavenly meditant has the happiest life in the world, and the most enriching commerce with the celestial Indies, from whence he returns loaded with an unseen store of immortal joy and spiritual consolation. As he continues to meditate on the great things of God, such amazing plenitudes are displayed before his eye, that he finds in the divine fulness sufficient subjects for meditation through eternity itself.

Meditation, like the spies sent from Israel in the wilderness, returns with a good account of the goodly land, presents some of the fruits of Paradise, and produces refreshing grapes pulled from the true Vine. Here the weary soul retires to rest in the bosom of the promise, in the love of God, in spite of all surrounding troubles, and drinks at the river before the throne, which makes her forget her miseries as waters that flow away.

O the high estate of the sons of God in meditation. They walk in the fields of glory, associate with the angels of light, and hold communion with God himself. Thus having been in the mount with God, their souls are beautified; thus their faces shine, and their conversation seems as if in heaven, nobly opposing the base practices of the men of the world.

O my soul! while mortals are combating for crowns below, meditate thou on thy crown above; view the beauties of the better country; ruminate on the happiness of the inhabitants there; think on the fulness of the heavenly glory; talk of the love of God, and dwell on the adorable excellencies of the divine Redeemer. This work is its own reward, and assimilates the soul to "the bright and morning star." Be ashamed henceforth to occupy thyself in meditating how to raise thy fortune, how to make thyself famous, and how to plan thy lot in the world; this last commit to God, and cast the rest away. But let Him, whose favor is better than life, be the object of thy love, and the subject of thy meditation. Thus shalt thou begin in heaven, anticipate bliss, and prepare for eternity and glory.—Selected by Laura Ann Wheeler.

VOICES OF THE DEAD AND LIVING.

BY S. S. BREWER.

"Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them also that love his appearing."—1 TIM. 4: 8.

"That is, unto all who desire his second coming. To believe in the second advent of the Lord Jesus to judge the world, and to desire his return, became a kind of a criterion by which christians were known. No others but true christians were supposed to believe in that, and no others truly desired it."—A. Barnes.

IT HASTETH GREATLY.

Under this head I will present some brief extracts from the writings of good men:

"It hasteth greatly, and although we may think this dismal and black hour of temptation not likely to come so soon (seeing the clouds rise not fast enough so suddenly to overcast the face of the sky with darkness;) yet we are to consider that we live now in the extremity of times, when motions and alterations being so near the centre, become quickest and speediest; and we are at the verge, and, as it were, within the whirl of that great mystery of Christ's kingdom, which will, as a gulf, swallow up all time; and so, the nearer we are unto it, the greater and more sudden changes will Christ make, now hasting to make a full change of all."—Dr. Goodwin.

"Never was there a time when events developed themselves with such rapidity. As the world moves on, it seems to accelerate its speed, and to precipitate itself with headlong haste. Events seem to ripen before their time. The crisis comes ere we were aware of the commencement. Speed,—whirlwind speed—is the order of the day."—Edinburg Pres. Review.

Speaking of the events of the ever memorable year 1848, the Alliance and Visitor hath said: "The events of Europe have followed each other in quick and startling succession; the events of centuries have been crowded into a year; the amazing rapidity has astonished the human race; the hand of God should be recognized in these remarkable events."

"These events," said a writer in the Boston Traveller, are a fulfillment of prophecy uttered many hundred years ago; distinct enough to be understood by all who have lived to see them. They are so astounding as to seem more like the visions of the night than the sober realities of the day. There is not a throne that has not been shaken by the uprising of the past few months. That the work of overturning, and overturning in the earth, of which the prophets sang, has been commenced in very deed, it seems impossible to doubt."

Said the Reflector, "We can hardly begin to measure the results of these great events in Europe. There never lived in the imagination of the most visionary, that these natures would be shaken to their centre with the notions of Republicanism, and all, too, within the very short space of three months, and that without any premonitions of what was coming. It is indeed startling to pause and consider it. The Almighty appears to be driving asunder the nations, and is causing the everlasting hills to bow. They seem to be on the very verge of crumbling."

In referring to the above, the Rev. Dr. Kirk said, "We are living at an unusual period. The voice of God is speaking through his providence in solemn, awful, and encouraging tones. We have heard all the while the rolling of his awful chariot wheels. It is his hand that sways the nations. He has caused the great ground swell that men can not resist. Men cannot meet under such circumstances without peculiar feelings."

Lord Morpeth, one of the most eminent of British statesmen, at the anniversary of the British Bible Society said, "But whatever may be the final issue of these momentous events which we are called upon to contemplate,—and we can hardly keep our breath while we run, as it were, along with them,—yet I think it will be felt by all whom I address, that at a time like this, when the constitutions, the politics, the powers, and dominations of this world which we have been accustomed to, are heaving with unwonted throes; when the old foundations seem to be all broken up; when historic thrones are tottering, and imperial sceptres are shaking, we do receive the most thrilling warnings, as far as relates to individual capacities, to strengthen our foundations upon the Rock of Ages; and as far as relates to our household, to our neighborhoods, to our country, and to our species, to inculcate those doctrines, precepts, and promises which belong to the hope that maketh not ashamed."

The above event was beyond a doubt the fulfillment of the prediction uttered by the Seer of Patmos, and recorded in Rev. 16: 18, and resulted in the division of the "great city," as predicted, "into three parts."

"The world has grown old, and her pleasures are past;
The world has grown old, and her form may not last;
The world has grown old, and trembles for fear,
For sorrows abound, and judgment is near.

The sun in the heaven is languid and pale,
And feeble and few are the fruits of the vale;
And the hearts of the nations fail them for fear,
For the world has grown old, and judgment is near.

The king on his throne, the bride in her bower,
The children of pleasure, all feel the sad hour;
The roses are faded, and tasteless the cheer,
For the world is grown old, and judgment is near.

The world is grown old, but should we complain,
Who have tried her, and know that her promise is vain?
Our heart is in heaven, our home is not here,
And we look for our crown when judgment is near.

Bishop Heber.

"The groans of nature in this nether world,
Which heaven has heard for ages, have an end.
Foretold by prophets, and by poets sung,
Whose fire was kindled at the prophet's lamp,
The time of rest, the promised Sabbath, comes:
Six thousand years of sorrow have well nigh
Fulfilled their tardy and disastrous course
Over a sinful world; and what remains
Of this tempestuous state of human things,
Is merely the working of a sea
Before a calm, that rocks itself to rest;
For He, whose ear the winds are, and the clouds
The dust that waits upon his sultry march,
When sin hath moved him, and his wrath is hot,
Shall visit earth in mercy; shall descend,
Propitious, in his chariot paved with love;
And what his storms have blasted and defaced
For man's revolt, shall with a smile repair."

Cowper's Task.

"Whatever ills the world befall,
A pledge of endless good we call,
A sign of Jesus near:
His chariot will not long delay,
We hear the rumbling wheels and pray,—
Triumphant Lord, appear."

"This is for your health."—PAUL.

TOBACCO INJURES THE VOICE.

An observer, who has been in the habit of attentively noticing the qualities of the human voice, cannot only detect the tobacco-user, but he can usually detect the precise form in which he uses it. The cigar is wont to render the voice rather weak, husky, and indistinct; the quid gives it a rough and frog-like note, which often grates like a harrow upon the ear; whilst snuff, as all know, imparts to it the "nasal" twang so highly disagreeable.

Dr. Russell, who for forty years has been a professor of oratory and a cultivator of the voice, says: "As to the effect of the habitual use of tobacco on the quality and character of the voice, I must say that I know it to be injurious in proportion to the extent to which it is used. Snuff-taking destroys the natural sound and the pure ring of healthy human utterance. It deadens the voice, and by impairing its resonance mars the distinctiveness of articulation. Smoking creates a reedy, burning sound, which hinders purity of tone, and renders the voice more or less grating to the ear. Chewing, by its exhausting effect on the salivary glands, causes the quality of the voice to become dry, hard and bitter."

A good voice, it may seem superfluous to say, is essential to the eloquent orator, and to every preacher of the gospel. Wesley had a voice clear and silvery, often heard by tens of thousands. Whitefield had a voice which enabled him to roar like a lion, or, in turn, enchant like a magician—the rich qualities of which were never impaired by this baneful narcotic. Why, dear brethren, why ruin the rich and manly notes of human utterance, so charming and effective in our pulpits? Have we an excess of sacred eloquence? Do large convocations and precious revivals furnish no occasion for us to "shout unto God with the voice of triumph?" Do the floods of iniquity never lift up their voice? Do we never need a voice strong as the voice of many waters, when the nations rage and the people imagine a vain thing? When the preacher invites sinners to Christ in such strains as angels use, should not the voice be sweet, and delightfully harmonize with the theme?—Geo. Trask.

EXCITEMENT AND SHORT LIFE.

The following is by an unknown writer: "The deadliest foe to a man's longevity is an unnatural and unreasonable excitement. Every man is born with a certain stock of vitality, which cannot be increased, but which may be husbanded, or expended rapidly, as he deems best. Within certain limits he has his choice to live fast or slow, to live abstemiously or intensely, to draw his little amount of life over a large space, or condense it into a narrow one; but when his stock is exhausted he has no more. He who lives abstemiously, who avoids all stimulants, takes light exercise, never overtasks himself, indulges no exhausting passions, feeds his mind and heart on no exciting material, has no debilitating pleasures, lets nothing ruffle his temper, keeps his "accounts with God and man squared up," is sure, barring accidents, to spin out his life to the longest limit to which it is possible to attain; while he who lives intensely, who feeds on highly-seasoned food, whether material or mental, fatigues his body or brain by hard labor, exposes himself to inflammatory disease, seeks continual excitement, gives loose rein to his passions, frets at every trouble, and enjoys little repose, is burning the candle at both ends, and is sure to shorten his days.'—Reformer.

SUNLIGHT A NECESSITY.

Sun-baths cost nothing, and are the most refreshing, life-giving baths that one can take, whether sick or well. Every housekeeper knows the necessity of giving her woolens the benefit of the sun, from time to time, and especially after a long rainy season, or a long absence of the sun. Many will think of the injury their clothes are liable to, from dampness, who will never reflect that an occasional exposure of their own bodies to the sunlight is equally necessary to their own health. The sun-baths cost nothing, and that is a misfortune, for people are still deluded with the idea that those things only can be good or useful which cost money. Let it not be forgotten three of God's most beneficent gifts to man—three things the most necessary to good health—sunlight, fresh air and water, are free to all; you can have them in abundance, without money and without price, if you will. If you would enjoy good health, then see to it that you are supplied with pure air to breathe all the time; that you bathe for an hour or so in the sunlight; and that you quench your thirst with no other fluid than water.—Journal of Health.

SWEET OIL FOR POISONS.—A plain farmer says: It is now over twenty years since I learned that sweet oil would cure the bite of a rattlesnake, not knowing it would cure any other kind of poison, both on man or beast. I think no farmer should be without a bottle of it in the house. The patient must take a spoonful of it internally, and bathe the wound for a cure. To cure a horse, it requires eight times as much as it does for a man. Here let me say, of one of the most extreme cases of snake bite in this neighborhood—eleven years ago this summer—where the case had been thirty days standing, and the patient was given up by his physicians. I heard of it and carried the oil, and gave one spoonful, which effected a cure. It is an antidote for arsenic and strychnine. It will cure bloat in cattle by eating too freely of fresh clover; it will cure bites of bees, spiders, or other insects, and will cure persons who have been poisoned by a low running vine in the meadows, called ivy.—Ohio Farmer.

DANGER FROM EATING NUTS.—Medical men advise that salt should be taken with nuts, especially when eaten at night. One time, says a writer, while enjoying a visit from an Englishman, hickory nuts were served in the evening, when my English friend called for salt, stating that he knew a case of a woman eating heartily of nuts in the evening, who was taken violently ill. The celebrated Dr. Abernethy was sent for, but it was after he had become too fond of his cup, and he was not in a condition to go, he muttered "Salt, salt," of which no notice was taken. Next morning he went to this place, and she was a corpse. He said if they had given her salt, it would have relieved her; if they would allow him to make an examination he would convince them. On opening the stomach the nuts were found in a mass. He sprinkled salt on this, and immediately it dissolved.

THE NIGHT LAMP.—There are many families who use night lamps, and through inability to provide gas, have been in the habit of burning kerosene oil, a very good thing when properly used. A few words on the subject of its use at night may prove interesting to the general reader. When the light of the kerosene lamp is turned down low, the combustion is not perfect, and the atmosphere of the room becomes vitiated by the unconsumed oil vapors, by the gas produced by combustion, and also legitimate particles of smoke and soot thrown off, to be taken into the lungs of the occupants. Air thus poisoned is deadly in its effects, and the wonder is that the people are not immediately and fatally injured by breathing it. Its consequences are the unaccountable and mysterious headaches, irritation of throat and lungs, dizziness and nausea.

DANDRUFF AND FALLING HAIR.—Keep the hair quite short. Wet the scalp with cool water every morning, and shampoo the hair occasionally. The modern chignons, frizzled pugs, and other fashionable abominations of the kind, are making thousands of ladies prematurely bald.

SAILING THROUGH THE NIGHT.

We're sailing through the night on time's stormy tide,
Bound for the shore on the ocean's sunny side;
We're sailing through the waves, and through the tempest's roar,
Sailing for the port on Beulah's peaceful shore.

Dark has been the night, the waves been mountain high,
Black have been the clouds that hid the starry sky;
Fierce have been the winds, the tempest hard and long,
Great have been the dangers, the tide has been so strong.

Often have we heard the breakers' deadly roar,
And seen them dashing on the rugged rocks before;
But Christ our Captain has led us on our way,
And cheered our fainting hearts filled with sore dismay.

We've been on the ocean a long time in the past,
But now we are gaining the harbor at last;
The harbor where tempest and storms come no more,
Where calm reigns forever on Canaan's bright shore.

The night has been long and the darkness so drear,
Its swift flying shadows have filled us with fear;
But night now is ending, the shadows they fly,
The morning is coming, the daylight is nigh.

With this night of woe our voyage will be o'er,
And watchings and toilings shall then come no more;
And naught shall disturb our refreshing repose,
Where the river of rest eternally flows.

Our voyage all over, the darkness all past,
We rest with our Captain in sweet peace at last;
Sweetly resting in peace when storms pass away,
And night's dreary darkness has turned into day.

FRUITS OF IMMORTAL-SOUL THEOLOGY

BY WM. SHELDON.

Universalism originated in the doctrine of the immortality of the soul. Setting aside the Bible doctrine of a literal resurrection of the dead, it recognizes the soul as the only part of man to be saved in the future world, and assuming its immortality, the defenders of Universalism deny the damnation of immortality.

With truthfulness they insist that immortality can no more suffer pain than it can suffer death, for pain is the road to death; hence, they deny that the wicked are to be shut out of the kingdom in the world to come. Taking it for granted, without proof, and contrary to evidence, that the souls of the wicked are immortal, and knowing that immortality cannot feel pain, they come to the conclusion that endless pain is not to be experienced by the sinner, and then omit to learn that God has threatened them with the second death; and overlooking this fact, they have blindly come to the conclusion that all men, regardless of character, will finally be saved. They insist that the soul is a part of God, and that consequently it cannot suffer nor die, as God cannot inflict either suffering or death upon himself; forgetting that this assumption charges all the sin in the world directly upon God, as it is "the soul that sinneth" (Ezek. 18 : 4); that is, if the soul is a part of God, it is a part of God that sinneth. One of two conclusions must be correct: the soul is either a part of God, or a part of man; if a part of God, it is not only proved immortal, but God is proved to be the author of sin; a conclusion too revolting to entertain for a moment; but if the soul is a part of man, then it is mortal, as man bears no higher Bible appellation, in his present state, than "mortal man" (Job 4 : 17;) hence, if the soul is a part of "mortal man," it must be mortal, and capable of experiencing the "second death," agreeing with the statement, "The soul that sinneth, it shall die" (Ezk. 18 : 4); and, "The wages of sin is death. Rom. 6 : 23.

Endless torment is another fruit of immortal-soulism. Assuming for a fact—what never has been proved, and never can be proved—that the soul is immortal, the claim is set up that there will be no end to the sinner's suffering in hell; that even after unnumbered millions of ages shall have elapsed, death cannot come to their relief. This shocking slander on the character of God is based, mainly, on the unscriptural doctrine of the soul's immortality, while the Scriptures abound with threats of a death penalty against sinners, all of which statements must be made to signify directly the reverse of what they say, to harmonize with this dogma.

But we are told that we need endless torment as an inducement to move sinners to repentance. This is a spurious motive. Those who are moved only by the principle of fear cease to move when that principle ceases to propel them. Suppose I say to my child, Do you love father? and receive the reply, No, sir; whereupon, I take a whip, and make this threat: Now if you don't love father, I will whip you as long as I live! If I extort love on this principle, how much would it be worth? and how long would it last?

Theology represents God as saying to the sinner, Do you love me? The practical answer is, No. Then God is represented as holding the great hell-whip over the sinner, and saying, If you don't love me, I'll whip you as long as I live. Under the spell of fear, the sinner professes love; but how much is it worth? and how long will it last after the whip is out of sight?

Unless there is a principle of love underlying this principle of fear, the service of God is only a slavish task to engage in, and christian duty is ever irksome to discharge; and no wonder that the world is flooded with backsliders as a result of this principle. It moves men on the very principle that the hard-hearted sailor is moved to tears and prayers in the threatening storm; but "the goodness of God leadeth men to repentance," and when "we love him because he first loved us," we are moved upon by the genuine motive, instead of being influenced by a motive totally selfish and slavish, leading us to act merely for the purpose of escaping torment unending. Many are truly converted who are influenced by both of these motives, but the motive of fear exclusively is worthless. It is right to present the "terrors of the Lord," but not the terrors of theology.

It is no help to the cause of Christ to threaten the sinner with a retribution the most fearful and frightful that imagination can grasp, with a design to scare him into submission; for when the fright is over, the propelling power is instinct, and relaxation is the result. Let men be allured by the lovely character of God, and by his "exceeding great and precious promises," and be made to feel that he is truly their real friend, and is seeking their welfare, and not at the same time planning to eternally inflict unmitigated anguish and endless agony and pain on any of his creatures, and if anything will successfully reach their hearts, this will.

It is true that God threatens the sinner with retribution for sin, on the one hand, while he offers him glory on the other hand; but it is a retribution which, in the first place, appears consistent with the character of a merciful and just God, and in the second place does not look like a mighty effort to scare men, or like an unbounded display of blind rage, unbecoming the character of Deity. The sinner never had any claim upon God for existence. God saw fit to give him a trial existence, with the offer of endless life on condition of faithfulness. In case of unfaithfulness, God does him no injustice in inflicting a punishment upon him for his sins, ultimating in the loss of life, after the judgment, by the infliction of the "second death."

An endless residence of deathless sinners in a literal hell of fire is beginning to look so shocking in the eyes of enlightened people, that there is a revised edition of hell being arranged by theologians, which reduces hell to a mere guilty conscience. Well, that is changing from endless fire to no fire, with a mighty stride. I know it looks unreasonable that literal fire should burn immaterial ghosts; and having reduced sinners to mere ghostly shadows, it is quite natural to reduce the fire to conscience; but how would some Scriptures sound when quoted with this definition of hell? e. g., "Not that thy whole body should be cast into a guilty conscience;" or destroy both soul and body in a guilty conscience." But when these guilty consciences are "scared" by an excess of sin, this fire burns low. Guilty conscience stings the man terribly who has committed the first murder, but after he has murdered forty men, conscience becomes easier, being "seared." Besides this, guilty conscience is not the result of judgment, nor after the judgment. The guilty conscience of the horse-thief s no part of his punishment. So with the sinner "who shall be punished with everlasting destruction." Guilt for crime is one thing, and punishment for crime is another thing.

The spiritual resurrection theory grows out of immortal-soulism. It sets up the claim that there is a spiritual body within each material body, and that when the material body dies, the spiritual body is resurrected therefrom, leaving the material body to sleep in the dust to all eternity; thus reducing man's future existence to a mere phantom or spectre. But is this theory true? Why may it not be, if the soul is immortal? Why ever reanimate the body, if the soul is a personality independent of the body, and can be better off without the body than with it? But the voice of Inspiration cries, "The dead shall be raised" (1 Cor. 15 : 52); and, "Thy dead men shall live; together with my dead body shall they arise." (Is. 26 : 19.) If there is a spiritual body existing cotemporary with the natural body, the spiritual body being immortal, the resurrection cannot be affirmed of the spiritual body, for it is a "dead body" that is to "arise," instead of a deathless body. Hence, the resurrection, instead of extracting a live body from a dead one, makes a "dead body" "arise," and "live," and "sing." Paul, in speaking of the spiritual body, does not even hint that it dwells within the natural body as a distinct personality, to be subtracted therefrom at the hour of death; but instead of teaching that the one exists cotemporary with the other, he plainly establishes the fact that they exist successively; that is, that the natural body first has its day, and goes into the grave; then at the resurrection the same body is immortalized, thus becoming a spiritual body, but not a bodiless spirit. And Christ, in his resurrected, immortalized state, is presented as a true sample of a spiritual body, being thereby "made a quickening spirit" (1 Cor. 15 : 45,) having "flesh and bones" (Luke 24 : 39;) being in this respect unlike an angelic spirit, which "hath not flesh and bones." Once Christ possessed a "natural body" like ours; but at his resurrection, he became a spirit-body, or spiritual body; and our spiritual body will come into existence by the same process. The Apostle affirms, "That was not first which is spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterward that which is spiritual." We now have a natural body, and, "It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body" (1 Cor. 15 : 44); not a spirit without a body. Here the true order is given: "first," the natural body; "afterward" the spiritual body. The natural body has its day first, and then enters the grave; but at the resurrection, "it is raised a spiritual body;" but the saint has no spiritual body this side of the resurrection. This is heaven's theology concerning the spiritual body, and is subversive of spiritual resurrection theology.

The doctrine of the spiritual coming of Christ, at the death of his saints, to convey them to a sky-kingdom, is a sprout from the tree of immortal-soulism. Paul tells us that we are to "wait for God's Son from heaven, whom he raised from the dead" (1 Thess. 1 : 9, 10), and this proves that the coming of Christ will be personal—the coming of a person who had once been "dead," instead of some spiritual manifestation, as a substitute for this event; and the same apostle also affirms, "Unto them that look for him shall he appear the second time" (Heb. 9 : 28), and this precludes a plurality of future advents of the Savior, and allows us to look for only one, instead of legions, and that one a personal coming. Christ tells us the object of his coming; "If I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again, and receive you unto myself" (John 14 : 3,) negating the claim that they are previously received by him. The following facts are set forth: (1.) The very Jesus who was once "dead" is to come; (2) it is to be his "second" coming; (3) not till then will he "receive" the saints unto himself; hence the fallacy of the claim that he comes spiritually, thousands of times every year, to transport saints to another world.

For the World's Crisis.

FULFILLING PROPHECY.

BY L. C. MCKINSTRY.

God has "declared the end from the beginning," the "end" of governments, of tribulations, of captivities, and of this whole world. He has taken in, with one great glance of his infinite eye, from "the beginning," all that would transpire, and the "time" of the duration, even of this vast globe, in its present state, and of its inhabitants. He has numbered its days, and foretold the flight of its years. The earth, the sea, the air, and human governments and individuals, are called into requisition, as talismanic proofs of fulfillment, like a grand response, a great "Amen" to all he has declared. Whether we go back to golden-headed old Babylon, silver-armed Media and Persia, brazen Grecia, or iron Rome; whether we consult the quaking earth, or the roaring, surging sea, when the apocalyptic angel stands, with his shining feet, one on the land, and the other on the sea, declaring, as he receives light from both these sources and evidence on which to stand—"There shall be time no longer"; whether we look at a darkened sun at noonday, or a blood-red moon, or the showering stars; whether we see nations perplexed; whether we find the "faithful servant over the household" giving "each his portion in due season," or the "evil servant" saying "in his heart, My lord delayeth his coming," or hear scoffers saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" or see the "perilous times," or mystic Babylon falling, or note the indifference to the truth and apathy of the world when the truth-telling events which herald the coming of the Lord himself from heaven are pointed out,—the great mass of evidence thus accumulated tells plainly that history has forgotten to echo its amen to the voice of God's prophetic annunciations. If so, then all these things have fulfilled, or are fulfilling, prophecy.

No difference is seen in the aptness of these fulfillments, whether men are thus employed, or unintelligent, material objects; the sun, the sea, the earth, are no truer in their responses than wicked nations and godless men. And the most wonderful part of all this fulfillment is, on this account, that human beings, free-will beings, responsible beings, obstinately opposed to God, to a near-approaching judgment; who scoff, and mock, and deride, persecute and defame, all attempts and attempters to show the fulfillment of prophecy, are themselves a striking proof of the truth of the testimony they dispute; for in disputing, they fulfill, in saying "it is not so"; they are as emphatically made by the prophetic word to say it is so. Saying no themselves, God's word makes their no his emphatic yes. Not because prophecy seizes their wills, or forces them to take a course of conduct as individuals which is uncongenial to them; but it simply takes them as God saw they would be, and do, with all their natural heart-opposition to the approaching judgment, and makes their "wrath praise him" by making it a sign of his near coming. God appoints his servants to preach the judgment near, thus stirring them up to oppose, which they would not, could not do, were there nothing to oppose, and hence they freely do what is in their hearts, which the great foreseeing God could as well contribute to prophetic annunciation and fulfillment as a willing, co-operative work, as well as his servant's declaration that "the end of all things is at hand," and both naturally occurring just prior to the judgment are thus, together, as really evidence of its approach as the events which call out the servant to preach it near.

This class of prophetic fulfillments are specially "last day" fulfillments. The mockers at Noah and Lot were not subjects of prophecy. Their wickedness made a judgment against them necessary, as the wickedness of this generation causes the judgment of the whole world to hasten greatly. But these are more really fulfilling prophecy than those. "There shall come, in the last days, scoffers," says the apostle. "As it was in the days of Noah"; "as it was in the days of Lot, so shall the coming of the Son of man be," said Jesus. "Men shall be lovers of their own selves, proud, covetous, boasters, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, having a form of godliness, and denying the power thereof," says Paul. "The evil servant shall say in his heart, my Lord delayeth his coming," Jesus declares again; and so makes them all do a work without their option as readily as though their consent was obtained.

The great wonder is that men can be found who, with these declarations before their eyes, unwittingly fill the place assigned them. Yet they are not wanting, as instance upon instance furnishes the proof. We go back to the beginning of the "time of the end," and even further, to the papal persecutions, and those who put the saints to death identified themselves with the scenes and persons under the fourth seal, who are represented by "the little horn power"; and later, when the Pope wore on his mitre the word "mystery," and had at another time the medal struck which bore on its reverse a woman with a cup in her hand, he, without intending it, identified himself as the harlot-woman-power. And so with men of to-day. A knowledge of the language of prophecy, though it would seem to be, is no hindrance to their taking their place, and doing their work as fulfillers of prophecy. If the Pope could read of that harlot woman in his Latin Vulgate, he could infallibly (?) as he claims, interpret it to mean, as his church does, Pagan Rome, and then what should prevent his wearing the word "mystery," or any other word he might choose, on his mitre, and taking a woman with a cup in her hand to represent his church? Could not he reason that a pure woman could bear a cup, as well as a corrupt one, and he adopt for himself a symbol to represent his church, as really as God could adopt it to represent a corrupt power? He might reason thus, or in any other manner, but always in such a way as to keep out of his sight his own identity with the corrupt woman, that he would not be supposed to see, or acknowledge, and thus he could take the position unwittingly, unintentionally, and yet make the identity perfect.

So with the last day scoffers. Their eyes are turned from God's declarations, even though they are referred to the Word, where they can read for themselves. They consider the evidences, moral, chronological, and physical, as all of human invention, and their own impression is, that they are only opposing a few "fanatics," who themselves "set the time,' and preach what is in no other Bible but their own. To mock and scoff at such can be no evil thing certainly. Why should it? No reason can be assigned satisfactorily to that class that this is any "promise of his coming," certainly in their day, and if not, "where is the promise?" They are not the "last day scoffers," they think. Those who occupy that position will oppose something more than is opposed in our day; and so they scoff, and scoffing fill the position indicated in the prophetic word. In short, any reason which can mislead their willingly misled minds, they eagerly adopt as the true one, and as eagerly reject any thing which appears like a condemnation of their course, which is certainly natural to the carnal mind; and there they stand, God's swift witness against them, their work still progressing and the judgment nearing. O, what a fearful doom is theirs! for, although they are fulfilling God's prophecies, they are on the wrong side to be saved, as they are fulfilling the wrong class of prophecies to belong to the number "whose names are in the book of life."

The other side of the question is, however, the more deeply interesting to the children of God,—that which represents the true servant as doing prophetic work; and in himself, being a prophetic expositor, not only in his explanation of the chart of prophecy, but in himself. He is a willing subject of prophecy; he really desires to be found giving the household seasonable meat, and thereby be himself an evidence that "the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." Nevertheless, even he cannot be until "the fulness of time," "the time of the end," when "the hour of . . . judgment is come."

The things which Daniel and John saw were to be sealed up and not understood until the proper time; then the seals being broken, the faithful and wise servant—"the wise"—who "shall understand," would "run to and fro" with increased "knowledge," and stand out in full relief, bold and clear, as a living, joyful, glad evidence of the coming of Jesus, while they preach the evidences exterior to themselves that "the Lord cometh," so willingly, that they bear the scoffs of mockers, the bitter opposition of the world, and the smitings of the evil servants, a spectacle to angels and men, and without complaint, in meekness even instructing those who oppose themselves, and glad to be witnesses in this double sense of the nearness of that event

"They long so much to see."

God has had as true and as humble servants before this time as these. Those "of whom the world was not worthy," those who suffered the martyr's death, some of them even, like Paul, being pressed in Spirit to declare to present hearers that they should not be troubled, as that the day of the Lord "could be at hand," for "that day" should "not come except there come a falling away first, and that man of sin be revealed, the son of perdition." "These all died in faith," and often bloody deaths were theirs.

It was their work to suffer death. It is ours to-day to fulfill in ourselves the great, glorious fact that Jesus is coming soon; for we have come to the "time of the end," and we are living in it.

O, it is glorious to stand on the confines of the blessed, eternal kingdom of Christ, and tell the world that it is to be established soon; that soon our eyes shall "behold the King in his beauty"; that soon his lovely face will be seen; that soon "the tabernacle of God will be with men"; that soon "there shall be no more death"; that soon God's hand shall "wipe the tears from off all faces"; that soon "the reproach of his people shall be taken away"; that soon vice and crime shall cease, sin and the sinner be finished, suffering and misery be over, and the saints be "forever with the Lord." Glory to God in the highest! Soon on earth will be peace, and there will be good to willing men. Amen.

THE VICTOR'S CROWN.

It matters little where I was born,
Or if my parents were rich or poor;
Whether they shrank at the world's cold scorn,
Or walked in the heights of wealth secure.
But whether I live an honest man,
And hold integrity firm in my clutch,
I tell you, my brother, as plain as I can,
It matters much.

It matters little how long I stay
In a world of sorrow, sin and care;
Whether in youth I am called away,
Or live till age hath bleached my hair;
But whether I do the best I can
To lighten the weight of adversity's touch
On the careworn cheek of my fellow man,
It matters much.

It matters little where be my grave,
Or on the land or in the sea;
By flowing brook or stormy wave,
It matters little or naught to me;
But whether the Lord of life comes down,
And marks my brow with his loving touch,
As one that shall wear the VICTOR'S CROWN,
It matters much.

VOICES OF THE DEAD AND LIVING.

BY S. S. BREWER.

THE COMING OF CHRIST WILL FIND THE CHURCH IN A LAODICEAN STATE.

In direct opposition to the plain teachings of our blessed Lord and Master, some professed teachers have of late been tampering with his word, and have endeavored to lull all within the reach of their influence into security by asserting that before the coming of that day the churches would all understand the time, and the ministry would teach it. I do not hesitate to say that I believe this to be in direct opposition to Scripture, and an error of a decidedly dangerous character. By the speedy coming of the day of doom, I exhort all to beware of this dangerous opiate; it is a device of Satan.

Cotton Mather, who died in A. D. 1728, wrote thus: "When our Lord shall come, he will find the world almost void of true and lively faith, (especially of faith in his coming;) and when he shall descend with his heavenly banners and angels, what else will he find, almost, but the whole church, as it were, a dead carcass, miserably putrified with the spirit and manners and endearments of this world." It is even so.

Bishop Chase, in his Inquiry, significantly remarks, "Are not these signs of our prognostics of the speedy coming of our Lord to judgment? When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith upon the earth. How awful to reflect that this sign seems so exactly the fact."

Says Charles Beecher, "O woeful day, O, unhappy church of Christ! Fast rushing round and round the circle of absorbing ruin! Thou sayest, I am rich, and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art poor, and miserable, and blind, and naked! Christ have mercy.—Radically corrupt, and appealing every hour to every base element of their natures to hush up the truth, and bow their knee to the power of apostasy."

At the commencement of the Mexican war with the United States, in 1846, an English minister, and close observer of the signs of the time, made the following observation: "As far as man can judge, the crisis so often spoken of is fast approaching, and can hardly be delayed even for a few months—it may involve us like a storm spread over the horizon, contracting its circle every instant, and closing in upon us on every side. Few persons can see this,—still fewer care for it; and our ministers of the gospel are the blindest of the blind. Not one faithful warning—not one hint as to futurity is given from the pulpit; national crimes are passed over without notice or rebuke. Little things are exaggerated into importance, and gigantic atrocities are passed by as insignificant. The oracles of God are falsified by false and flattering expositors, it is time that some one, even in the weakest manner, should point out the dangers that are at hand. Those dangers are found on every side, and in every variety of form. Repentance is out of the question. It would be folly to speak of it. When the evangelical world encourages our enormities; when the gospel of Christ is made the cloak of our avarice and pride; the cause is past all remedy. The very religion of the age is a religion of hatred and blood. By adopting the principles of the world, by justifying the most unrighteous wars, by the propagation of christianity with the sword, they are setting at naught all the precepts of the gospel, and running counter to the practice and example of the Lord and his apostles."

Rev. Mr. Atkins, of Liverpool, Eng., in a sermon, said: "Apostasy! apostasy! apostasy is engraven on the very front of every church; and they know it, and did they feel it, there might be some hope; but, alas! they say, We are rich and increased in goods, and have need of nothing; and that blasphemy is added to apostasy. My brethren, my brethren, the whole gospel object is perverted, and yet I am censured as a railer, for calling the churches apostate. The churches do not know that Satan's method of damning souls is by giving them much that has the appearance of good, that he will go to the length of making a three parts christian to keep the inquirer in peace, that he may thus not only make his damnation sure, but also bring deeper reproach upon Christ and his cause."

The above testimonies must suffice to illustrate the condition of nominal christianity at this awful hour, and such, we are informed by some ministers, are yet to know, believe, and preach the time of Christ's coming. I would as soon believe the Queen of England would marry the Pope of Rome, and the Shakers tolerate polygamy, as to credit such an absurdity. Would you know what He who cannot err hath declared concerning the last state of the church? "These things saith the Amen, the faithful and true witness, the beginning of the creation of God; I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot; I would thou wert cold or hot. So then because thou art lukewarm, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth." Such is the character of the churches that temporizing teachers would make the credulous believe will become a mouthpiece to utter time and evidences of the coming of the great day of God's wrath. No, no, upon their foreheads is written Laodicea; "lovers of pleasure more than lovers of God; having a form of godliness but denying the power thereof; from such turn away."

THE SIGNS OF THE TIMES.—"This is an age of the world when nations are trembling and convulsed."

"A mighty influence is abroad, surging and heaving the world as with an earthquake."—Mrs. H. B. Stowe.

"Every aspect of the present times received in the light of the past, warrants the belief that we are on the eve of a universal change."—Sir Robert Peel.

The Rev. J. Cox, of England, upon the signs of the times, and coming of Christ hath said, "This I conceive is the next great event that we are to look for. So far as I can discern, no farther signs are to be expected, as it seems to me we have entered into that last period of awful expectation during which the church is likened to ten virgins. By comparing the signs of the times with numerical prophecies, we may know with certainty when the awful and glorious day of the Lord is rapidly advancing upon us. The great and broad outline of prophecy is obvious to every man who is a student of the prophetical writings, long before the predicted events are fulfilled. The prophecies of Daniel were closed up and sealed till the time of the end, when the book was to be opened, the seals to be removed—the mysterious dates were to be developed—many were to run to and fro and prophetical knowledge was to be increased. The period here foretold is that in which we are now living; for never, since the time of the reformation, has there been such deep and intense interest paid to the sacred prophecies, as within the last thirty and forty years.

"The seals are now being removed—the signs of the times shed a light on prophetical dates, and the dates shed light on the signs of the times.

"Science, indeed, tells us that the centre of our earth is filled with floods of rolling liquid fire which are continually wasting and destroying it. Better than science, we have 'a more sure word of prophecy;' "As for the earth, out of it cometh bread; and under it is turned up as it were fire."—Job 28 : 5. These fires are continually rolling to and fro, seeking to escape through the safety-valves, (volcanic mountains), which God has prepared that the earth might not explode, while thus in motion. They operate on the various strata of the earth, wasting, exploding, and removing it, and causing a rumbling of the earth, which we call earthquakes. Thus these fires have been at work for about 6000 years; and is it not reasonable that the effect of them should be still more apparent? Hence, we conclude, that having in a great measure devoured the very foundations of the earth, there must be more frequent alarms felt and seen from them. But the thinness and weakness of the remaining strata cannot hold them down. They must immediately "set on fire the foundations of the mountains and consume the earth with her increase." Deut. 32 : 22.—Preble's Voice of God.

"Among other signs that the 'time of the end,' that is, the season during which the great periods of chronological prophecy run out, and the great things so long predicted will transpire, is described by very strong and marked signs, and particularly signs in the heavens. The sun shall be darkened, the moon shall not give her light, the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. It is supposed by some, and we think with some plausibility, that while these physical events are to be regarded as symbolical of the revolutions and commotions of empires, they nevertheless will literally occur, striking atmospheric and celestial phenomena shall be observed, which being beyond the reach of man's philosophy, may be regarded as the visible symbols which God himself hangs out in the heavens to predict the consummation coming. It is remarkable, especially for the last fifty or sixty years, the atmospheric and celestial phenomena have been more marked, frequent and varied, than in any previous age of the world. It is said not less than fifteen stars have faded from the vault of heaven; and some of them were observed in a state of conflagration. Ever since the French revolution, the peculiar signs, moral and political, which were predicted to mark the time of the end, have been developing. The preparation is making for a great and fearful crisis. The kings and rulers of the earth are leaguing and conspiring together and becoming more and more involved in their ambitious schemes. The Lord is sealing his people, pouring out his spirit and gathering his elect."—G. Duffield, D. D.

"THE DAWN OF OUR WORLD.—What this change is to be, we dare not even conjecture; but we see in the heavens themselves, some traces of destructive elements, and some indications of their power. The fragments of broken planets, the descent of meteoric stones upon our globe, the wheeling comets welding their loose material at the solar furnace, the volcanic eruptions in our own satellite, the appearance of new stars, and the disappearance of others; all are foreshadows of the impending convulsions to which the system of the world is doomed. Thus placed on a planet which is to be burned up, and under heavens which are to pass away; thus treading, as it were, on the cemeteries and dwelling upon the mausoleums of former worlds; let us learn the lesson of humiliation and wisdom, if we have not already been taught in the school of revelation."—North British Review.

"While all human appearances indicate the approach of changes more important than man has ever seen before, God's word lays before us just what that change is to be."—Dr. S. Tyng.

"And, thou, Lord, in the beginning hast laid the foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the works of thine hands. They shall perish, but thou remainest; and they all shall wax old as doth a garment; and as a vesture shalt thou fold them up, and they shall be changed; but thou art the same, and thy years shall not fail." Heb. 1 : 10–12.

"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise; and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also and the works that are therein shall be burned up. Seeing then that all these things shall be dissolved, what manner of persons ought ye to be in all holy conversation and godliness; looking for and hasting unto the coming of the day of God, wherein the heavens being on fire shall be dissolved, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat? Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. —2 Pet. 3 : 12, 13.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea. And I John saw the holy city, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God himself shall be with them, and be their God. And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain; for the former things are passed away. And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new. And he said unto me, Write; for these things are true and faithful." Rev. 21 : 1–5.

Said the gifted Charlotte Elizabeth some years since, "We shall soon need to exercise judgment in the discerning of spirits. The sixth vial, under which there can be no doubt that we now live, is marked by the going forth of the three unclean devils, of whose miracle-working powers we are forewarned; and he who has designed to show us things to come, has not set forth cunningly devised fables to amuse our fancy, but revealed solemn truths to guide our steps aright, when our path becomes perplexed beyond what we have ever known hitherto, or that the experience of the church has recorded."

"World! do thou the signal dread,
We exalt the drooping head,
We uplift th' expectant eye,
Our redemption draweth nigh.
When the fig-tree shoots appear,
Men behold their summer near;
When the hearts of rebels fail,
We the coming Conqueror hail.
Bridegroom of the weeping spouse,
Listen to her longing vows;
Listen to her widowed moan,
Listen to creation's groan.
Bid, O bid the trumpet sound,
Gather thine elect around.
Yet the awful hour is nigh,
We shall see thee eye to eye.
Be our souls in peace possessed,
While we seek our promised rest,
And from every heart and home,
Breathe the prayer, "O Jesus, come!"
Haste to set the captive free,
All creation groans for thee."

For the World's Crisis.

A FRIEND.

There are times when we all feel cast down, every thing looks dark, and doubts haunt our minds. At such times we are too prone to forget the many blessings constantly bestowed upon us who are so unworthy. Yet though we may by our moods seemingly forget what we are receiving at the hands of our great Friend, he will never forget us or forsake us.

How good it is to have one on whom we can implicitly rely, one to whom we can unburden our hearts without fear of betrayal, knowing that he is ever ready to comfort and sustain us. What a glorious friend and comforter we have in Jesus our Lord. "Come unto me, all ye that labor, . . . and I will give you rest." Through the medium of prayer we may approach him with all confidence, and always find in him a present help in time of need. We may fly to him as the refuge of our souls, knowing that whosoever comes to him shall not be cast out.

"His loving kindness, oh, how great!"

What precious promises we find stored in God's holy book. Sinner, why will you neglect his liberal overtures of mercy? why longer delay? He says if we "confess our sins, he is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness." Come now. Now is the acceptable time. Now is the day of salvation. Turn now and forsake your sins. Turn unto that friend you have used so ill, with a penitent heart, believe on him, trust his grace; then shall you find that peace which passeth all understanding, and at Christ's coming, life eternal.

What a cheering thought, that after all the disappointments of this life, we shall, if faithful, live and reign with him forever on the new earth, where there shall be no more trouble nor sin, but everlasting light and peace. Lord Jesus, come quickly! God help us who claim to be thy children, to ever keep before us thy Son's goodness, and may we have grace to grow more like him day by day. May we be fervent, active christians, not cold-hearted professors; remembering that "faith without works is dead." Almighty Father! help us to be more worthy of such great love, and may we have strength to keep thy commandments, thereby proving that we love thee, and showing our gratitude for mercies toward us. RUTLAND.

The meetings in Rutland continue to be seasons of special interest. The good Lord gives us some very rich feasts. We have great reason to sing his praise, and to love him with all our hearts. The young converts are doing nicely. They have very interesting prayer-meetings by themselves, where they receive much strength to perform other duties. They are prompt to speak for Jesus in the great congregation. The most bitter opposers have to admit that the Lord is doing a good work here. Swearing, drinking persons are now praying temperance men, happy in the Lord God, anxiously waiting for the coming of Jesus. Sectarian winds are still blowing against us, and they may cause the shipwreck of some precious souls; but most are singing with warm hearts,

> "We will stand the storm,
> It will not be long,
> We'll anchor by and by."

Bitter things are said; men in high standing look down upon us with a cold frown, but Jesus smiles, and gives abundant peace, which is of more value than all the glory of this world.

It is said this is the most interesting revival in Rutland for forty years. Had it not been for the opposers of religion, it is thought that double the good would have been accomplished; but it is a great pleasure to say that many of the best members of the Methodist, Baptist and Congregationalal churches continue to render valuable aid in the good work; and in return the Lord is bestowing upon them very rich blessings.

A promising Sabbath school and Bible classes have been organized, and the future prospect is specially encouraging. Three Baptist ministers, who have visited Rutland, on different occasions, have spent a Sabbath afternoon with us, and taken a part in the exercises, manifesting a christian spirit.

The following is from the Rutland Independent, of April 20th, 1870:—

BAPTISM.—As considerable excitement has occurred in regard to the "re-baptism" of members of other churches, by Elder Miles Grant, and as numerous rumors are afloat in regard to the action of some of the churches, we have been requested to publish the following document, which was read at the Methodist church last Sunday:

"The following paper was prepared by Rev. Bennett Eaton, the Presiding Elder of Burlington District, and adopted by the Official Board:

We, the Official members of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Rutland, Vt.—in view of the fact that several members of the church we represent, have recently been led to renounce their christian Baptism, which had been in accordance with the discipline and usages of our church, and have been immersed by Elder Miles Grant, feel it a duty, on account of our official position, to express our views in the premises, as follows:

1. However sincere and upright might have been the motives of those members, we are obliged to look upon the course they have taken, as amounting to a breach of their church covenant, and altogether subversive of harmony and church order. And if they do not see and confess their mistake and wrong, it is clearly our opinion that a sense of propriety and consistency should lead them at once to withdraw from the M. E. Church.

2. While, on the supposition that those members acted sincerely, in the matter we have specified, it may not be deemed best that the church should institute proceedings against them for this act, yet, we do think that any efforts on their part, while they remain members, to lead others into irregularity and impropriety into which they have fallen, or to create dissatisfaction with the doctrines, usages or services of our church, would be highly reprehensible, and would call for the immediate exercise of church discipline, that there be no divisions among us.

3. We earnestly and affectionately exhort all our members to christian harmony and brotherly love; and to the experience and practice of Scriptural holiness and personal devotedness to God.

Wm. A. Burditt, C. H. Kinsman, Geo. C. Thrall, Ben. K. Chase, L. F. Southard, H. Bateman, C. Brewer, Jr., R. O. Hewitt, F. W. Shedd, W. D. Goodnow. A true copy, attest, A. F. BAILEY.

W. A. BURNETT, Sec.

Rutland, April 18th, 1870."

Mr. Marshall Smith, one of the persons baptized, requests us to print his answer to the above, as follows:

To the "Official Members" of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Rutland:

DEAR BRETHREN:—The copy of your official circular, of the 18th inst., recently put into my hands, has been appropriately considered, and for answer I have to say:

That waiving all criticism for the encouragement some of your Board gave for the step; if is true I have been baptized (immersed as you say) by Elder Miles Grant, and by that act I admit my denial of the validity of the rite of Sprinkling, held by the church as christian baptism.

The issue thus presented, is a well-defined one, and invites solution by the word of God, the laws of language and the history of the christian church. To such high authority I appeal.

I reciprocate the charity with which you are disposed to regard my motives, and hope that mutual forbearance may be promotive of mutual good. If however, the act for which you arraign me, and my considerate approval and recommendation thereof to the practice and adoption, of yourselves and others, subjects me to the discipline foreshadowed in your manifesto, it will only remain for me to illustrate the value of your closing utterances; given as I should hope, and certainly received with the ingenuousness of that wise statesman, if not devout christian, who said "Let us have peace." MARSHAL SMITH.

Rutland, April 28th, 1870.

Bro. Marshall Smith was a class-leader, and received a great blessing at his baptism. He has felt like a new man ever since. He never felt such a victory over the world before since his conversion.

The following is from the Rutland Courier, May 6th, 1870:—

A PROTESTANT BULL.

Mr. Marshal Smith, of this town, a member of the Methodist church, thought proper, as an American freeman, to attend Elder Grant's church and was finally baptized by immersion, by that holy man.

For this high crime and misdemeanor, Mr. Smith has been indicted by the Methodist church, and told that he ought to see and confess his wrong. He is informed by letter that, although the church may not deem it best to institute proceedings against him, (as the Jews did against Jesus Christ), yet his efforts to lead others into salvation would be highly reprehensible, and would call for immediate exercise of church discipline.

Mr. Smith does not deny the charges brought against him, but most of our people think that he has effectually quashed the indictment brought against him, when he says:

The issue thus presented, is a well-defined one, and invites solution by the word of God, the laws of language and the history of the christian church. To such high authority I appeal.

I reciprocate the charity with which you are disposed to regard my motives, and hope that mutual forbearance may be promotive of mutual good. If, however, the act for which you arraign me, and my considerate approval and recommendation thereof to the practice and adoption of yourselves and others, subjects me to the discipline foreshadowed in your manifesto, it will only remain for me to illustrate the value of your closing utterances; given as I should hope, and certainly received with the ingenuousness of that wise statesman, if not devout christian, who said, "Let us have peace." MARSHAL SMITH.

The English of this Methodist bull is, that the recusant Smith has renounced christian baptism, in seeking a second performance of the rite, in another form. That while the act may be overlooked, any attempt on his part to induce other members of the Methodist church to a like course, will be followed by excommunication. In other words, the Methodist church says to Mr. Smith, "You belong to our church, and under its covenants you have no right to read the Bible and adopt any interpretation not in accordance with the tenets of that church; you ought, under the circumstances, to withdraw. Still, in view of your honest holding of this heresy, you may stay in, if, in the future, you will agree to stultify yourself as to that honest faith. You may believe in immersion, and may have thus been baptized but you must not teach others to believe the truth as taught, as you think, "by Christ and his apostles."

What answer would Luther have hurled back upon the church of Rome if they had said to him; "Believe in heresy and practice it, but you must not teach it?" The manly and christian course would have been to expel Mr. Smith at once. If to be immersed is unchristian, he ought to be expelled. If immersion is a christian rite, then what wrong has been done? The truth is, that by this letter the Methodist church arrogates to itself the right to interpret the Bible authoritatively, just as much as the Church of Rome does, and as effectually denies to its members the moral and ecclesiastical right of personal interpretation. It strives to dictate as haughtily as ever the Councils of Rome did. It differs from the earlier councils only in this: that while, like the Catholic church, it proclaims its readiness to enforce its dogmas with discipline and excommunication, it fortunately lacks the power to put in force the inquisition as well.

Mr. Smith meets the question manfully. He affirms that he regards the baptismal rite of the Methodist church as not in accordance with the sacred teachings as he understands them; and more, he declares that he will not only hold to that belief, but that he will inculcate it; more still, he advises the Reverend council to be immersed themselves. To be consistent, the council should excommunicate him. Well, so be it. Smith, we doubt not, will find that the mantle of God's mercy is broad enough to cover him, if, perchance, he finds himself thrust out of the Methodist fold. We have no doubt of the well meaning of the "official" members of the Methodist Episcopal church. There was a time when there was but one Shepherd and one flock. While we do not lay claim to much Biblical lore, we still have a dim remembrance of that Shepherd seeking his erring lambs, enfolding them in his loving arms, and bringing them gently back into the fold. We suppose the times are changed. There are rival shepherds now, and it is, of course, much more wicked for the lambs to stray in these, than in the olden times; especially if they stray into other folds. If they stray, we warn them; if they keep astray, we excommunicate. The first Shepherd drew his flock towards him by kindly words and tender tones. In these latter times, we correct them with the rod. Perhaps this brimstone business may be thought the best; but at all events, whether President Grant is a devout christian or not, we, too, say:—"Let us have peace."

PLEASING NEWS.

At ten o'clock A. M., May 17th, 1870, at the residence of Bro. C. C. Pickering, Lowell, Mass., we had the pleasure of witnessing a very happy union of the hearts and hands of BRO. J. COUCH, of Concord, N. H., and SR. MARIA G. PICKERING, of Lowell, Mass. We have the best of reasons for believing that these nuptials were sanctioned by the Lord. Two christian hearts have been blended into one, in harmony with the divine appointment. May their love, peace, and joy be perfect through the journey of life; their pathway grow brighter, their union with Christ stronger, and their usefulness continue to increase till they "are called unto the marriage supper of the Lamb."

THE PRIESTS AT ROME.

Things are progressing slowly at the Ecumenical Council, but surely. We may expect to see some important change soon. We give below an extract from a correspondent of the New York Times:

ROME, April 20. All the news that can be written from Rome may be put into a few lines. Politically, this mine is not a rich one, and lately it has been a good deal overworked. The Council has furnished no valuable ore, and your columns are too much needed for other uses to have a half dozen of them filled with the dross of many trivial inventions. The Council, up to this time, as you very well know, has done little work, but has given way to the common human weakness of a great deal of talk. The light work of revising the catechism, doctrine, discipline and heresies, has received attention, but the heavy work of proclaiming the infallibility of Pio Nono and his successors, is yet on the shoulders of the fathers, a wearisome burden, and the load may be thrown down to be taken up again after an adjournment, which a few weeks more increasing disputes may bring about.

THE PRIESTS AND THEIR APPEARANCE.

The spectacle now presented at Rome is one of the most remarkable illustrations of the weakness of human nature. Here are something less than a thousand high priests, claiming a great deal of learning—indeed, the cream of the intellect of the Roman Episcopacy—who cannot or will not understand the wants of the age in which they live. They have a great deal of faith in dogmas of their own invention, and are ready to set the world by the ears to defend them; but have no faith in the progress of the human intellect, the supreme utility of science, the power of character and a better condition for the human race. These men go about dressed in all sorts of finery, with garments of cut and color like those of women, often exhibiting, also, a truly feminine vanity and weakness. Some are distinguished by hat-band and fringe of golden cord, and others have it of silk—either crimson, green or some other color. The petticoat, or sottana, is also of various colors, according to the nationality, and, indeed, the livery of the church, for ecclesiastics of every degree is varied as much as are the soldier's uniforms. The clerical organization has in it much that resembles the military. The common priests form the rank and file of the army; the Canons, Monsignori and Bishops are the Majors, Colonels and Generals, while the Cardinals are the Field Marshals, from whom the great directing chief may be taken. The glitter and tinsel of the one rivals the dazzling shine of the other. The mitres of Bishops and crowns of Patriarchs, like the helmets of officers of grenadiers, glitter with the splendor of the cap of the hero described with so much spirit by Homer,—"High on his helm celestial lightnings play." If you ask a priest why so much display, he will say, "Because the dignity of the church demands it;" or in other words, it is necessary that the illusion shall be kept up."

ADULTERATED FOOD.

Adulterations of food have become alarming. But few are aware of the extent of the evil. It is the natural result of the covetousness that is ruling in the hearts of men. But little regard is paid to health, provided more money can be secured by an unhealthy adulteration. The following from an interesting work, entitled, "What we Eat," may cause the reader to be more careful in relation to what he allows to enter the system:—

When we come to examine the list of adulterated articles of food, we are surprised at its extent. Nothing seems to have escaped which is not in its nature insusceptible of vitiation. Bread and butter, tea, coffee, cocoa, sugar, milk, spices, confectionary, preserved fruits and meats, vinegar, pickles, oils, wines, and liquors, almost every article which we find upon our tables—bear upon them the trail of the serpent, in the form of such delectable substances as salts of copper and arsenic, the chromate, oxide, acetate and carbonate of lead, bi-sulphuret of mercury, gamboge, chromate of potash, Prussian blue, Brunswick green, catechu, alum, indigo, sulpuricacid, Venetian red, yellow ochre, bronze powders; to say nothing of less injurious, though not less dishonest, additions, of plaster of Paris, chalk, starch, burnt peas, beans, rye and chicory, water turmeric, lard, meal, potatoes, etc. All of these articles, and not a few others of the same kind, shall be demonstrated to exist in the food consumed daily by the people of this country. The more poisonous substances are usually found in a minute, though by no means homœopathic quantities, but this makes them only the more deadly, because it admits of their constant and undetected use, until the constitutions of the victims are fatally undermined. Sometimes, however, immediately serious and even fatal results occur, and we not uncommonly see accounts of the death of children, especially from the use of colored confectionary. How many attacks of "cholic," "vomiting," "dysentery," "sick headache," how much "nervousness," "blindness," "deafness," "dyspepsia," or even paralysis and insanity, might be traced by rigorous investigation to such sources it is frightful to think of.

Dr. Hassall, in his most admirable work on "Adulterations Detected in food and Medicine," makes the following remarks upon this point:—

"Now with evidence such as the above, it is impossible to contend that the use of such a variety of injurious, and even poisonous substances is unattended with danger, and that adulteration does not affect the public health. It may so happen, and it doubtless does sometimes occur, that the same person, in the course of a single day, receives into his stomach some eight or ten of the articles above enumerated. Thus with the potted meats and fish, anchovies, red sauces, or cayenne, taken at breakfast, he would consume more or less bole Armenian, Venetian red, red lead, or even bi-sulphuret of mercury. At dinner with his curry or cayenne, he would run the chances of a second dose of lead or mercury; with the pickles, bottled fruit, and vegetables, he would be nearly sure to have copper administered to him; while if he partook of bon bons at dessert, there is no telling what number of poisonous pigments he might consume. Again, in his tea, of mixed or green, he would certainly not escape without the administration of a little Prussian blue, and, it might be, worse things; if he were a snuff-taker, he would be pretty sure to be putting up his nostrils, from time to time, small quantities of either some ferruginous earth, bi-chromate of potash, chromate of lead, or red lead; finally, if he indulged himself with a glass or so of grog before going to bed, he would incur the risk of having the coats of his stomach burned and irritated with tincture of capsicum, or essence of cayenne." If he gets nothing worse than cayenne in his grog, in this country, he is lucky indeed.

THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS.

BY J. LITCH.

"As Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so the Son of man shall be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," said Jesus to those who desired a sign from him. Many have been the attempts to harmonize this saying with the facts in the case. And perhaps it will not be amiss to attempt it again.

What constitutes a day and night. In Gen. 1: we read, "And the evening and the morning were the first day," "the second day," &c. Did that evening begin at sunset, as usually understood, and continue till sunrise? and the morning begin at sunrise and continue till sunset? If so the afternoon is the morning. Is it so? Clearly not. It is evening from mid-day to mid-night, and morning from mid-night to mid-day. Such an evening and morning corresponds with nature and makes the day and night. It is at high noon, when the sun is on the meridian, observations are always taken; and from thence, time is reckoned. In other words the natural day always begins then.

THE TIME OF CHRIST'S DEATH.

If Christ was crucified on Friday, about noon, he died about three in the afternoon. Saturday noon would be one day; and begin the seventh day, or the Sabbath, and continue until Sunday noon, when the first day of the week would begin, which would end Monday noon. Before sunrise, on the first day of the week, or early in the morning, the women found the tomb vacant. If he died on Friday at three o'clock and rose about six on Monday, it would lack nine hours of three full days and nights that he was dead. The testimony is that "he rose the third day according to the Scriptures."

THE CREATION SABBATH.

Time in the beginning was reckoned from evening to evening, so that it made a complete day, and the first Sabbath, the one God sanctified, began Saturday noon.

THE LAW SABBATH.

In the law of Moses (Lev. 23: 32,) the Lord ordained that Israel should "celebrate their Sabbath from even to even." This then is the true sabbatic time. The Jews begin about eighteen hours too early, and thus only keep six hours of the true seventh day, while christians beginning at 12 at night to keep the first day, do in fact keep twelve hours of the first day; so that neither keep the day they design to keep. If the observance of the creation Sabbath or the Sabbath of the law, is essential to salvation, those who intend to seek justification in that way, must go back to the original order if they will secure it. But for christians to seek justification by the law is to fall from grace.

TIME OF CHRISTS BURIAL.

Dying about three, the inquest was held after that. When all the formalities were gone through with and the body embalmed with an hundred pounds of myrrh and aloes, it must have been night when he was buried. But the women who followed him from Galilee, "saw how he was laid;" and returned and prepared sweet spices and ointments; "and rested the Sabbath day according to the commandment." What time had they to make this preparation if the Sabbath began with sunset, so as to rest on the Sabbath as it is said they did? It will be seen by this that christians keep as much of the seventh day as Sabbatarians.—Herald.

For the World's Crisis.

CHARITY.

Among all the characteristics of christianity there is none that shines so brightly, so far, so lovingly, so attractively, as charity. Charity is that disposition of heart which judges with liberality the character, actions and motives of men. Charity remembers the poor, the sick, and the afflicted. Christianity and charity are inseparable. Who can be so presumptuous as to profess himself a christian, and yet not expect to be charitable? If when we are strong in faith and full of hope we are reminded by Paul that charity is even greater than these, we may have some conception of that virtue which of all other virtues is chief.

Did the great apostle overvalue charity, or do we undervalue it? We should be very willing to think that if we had "the gift of prophecy, and understood all mysteries and all knowledge, and had faith sufficient to remove mountains, and bestowed all our goods to feed the poor," that we were about perfect. But it would profit us nothing if we had not charity. 1 Cor. 13: 2, 3.

Charity in the broadest sense is love—perfect love. The superlative degree of charity is charity towards the uncharitable. A christian can no more live a life pleasing in the sight of God without charity, than he can become a christian without being born again. Can you conceive of a person more conveniently, beautifully, and protectively dressed and equipped than he who has put on the breastplate of faith and love, and for a helmet the hope of salvation, and for a garment charity? If there is one word that will echo longer than any other in the arches of heaven; if there is one word that will unite all christian churches and people, that word is charity.

Faith may build a ladder to heaven, and hope may climb to the topmost round, but charity only can open the door and enter in to the Celestial City. "Finally, brethren," if we have Bible faith, hope, and charity, I think we shall "love one another with pure hearts fervently."

A scriptural definition of charity may be found in the thirteenth chapter of 1 Cor.

> With Charity let us be clothed,
> With Faith and Hope be shod;
> Then shall we know the narrow way
> That leads to heaven and God.

"TRINE IMMERSION."

A pamphlet on tripple baptism was handed me by Bro. J. Stone. The author offers a reward of five thousand dollars for a correction of his main point—one baptism each, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. The prize may pass as if put forth with no proper right on the part of the author; or perhaps for effect; but I volunteer a correction of the error it is made to sustain.

The author makes out his case as clear as mist. The starting-point, the progress and conclusion, has human presumption, testimony and assertion for its basis. The more excellent way is to believe "the word of God," that "one baptism" is ONE immersion, rather than THREE—one action, as he says, and not three. The absolute unity of idea in "one baptism" (against his imagined three) is confirmed by the fact of one death of Christ, and his one resurrection by the one death to sin, and one burial of the believer in the one baptism, and one rising again to newness of life. Rom. 6: 3–5. The author seems swayed from the most simple truth at the outset, and forgets that it is written, "Every word of God is pure, . . . add thou not unto his words, lest he reprove thee, and thou be found a liar." Prov. 30: 5–6. God's ways and thoughts are high as heaven, above him, and hence he can no more ADD two to God's "one baptism," making it three, than the one death of Christ can be converted into THREE.

Nothing can be more primary, positive or plain, than that "one" with God cannot be increased to three. The nature of number one, the reason of things, and the unerring wisdom of the word, forbid such a change. Try it in arithmetic. The three for "one" might ruin a bank, or a nation. Nay, it would undermine our faith in religion. To unsettle this truth, as this author does, is to unhinge and derange every thing to which it is applied. To add to or take from God's truth seems a serious matter. Rev. 23; 18. Hence, while he assumes to alter "one" to three, I say NO, SIR. Because "ONE BAPTISM" is only ONE immersion. Amen.

He asserts and argues from the early church, from "spiritual immersion," and from the three names, Matt. 28: 20. But I reply (I), that "the mystery of iniquity" wrought in the apostle's day (2 Thess. 2: 7; 1 John 4: 3), and the early church covers a dark, doubtful and misty period, from which all arch-heresiarchs invoke the spirit that inspires their heresy. The Bible reads "one," and not three, when speaking of baptism. Amen.

II. The reasons given for trine immersion are too various. First, it is the three names, Matt. 28: 20. Second, it is the three days of Christ's burial. But these TWO reasons (saying nothing of others less distinctive) are just one too many to be believed at all.

III. The "one baptism" (Eph. 4: 3–13) cannot be "spiritual immersion," as he asserts, because it is not so written, nor consistent with the context.

Note. "The spirit-baptism" is from God through Jesus, and is not primarily in the hands of the church, to be used in baptism. John 14: 16–26; 15: 26; Acts 4: 5; 2: 2–23. But John, the baptizer, preached and baptized in water. The apostles preached the "one faith," and administered the "ONE" baptism—one immersion. This is the most precise expression of "one action." It is God's authorized and emphatic expression of one against the author's three. The apostolic church taught "one Lord, one faith, and one baptism." This throws his three to the bats. The unity of the faith, and the one baptism, come to us in a cluster of a tenfold unity. "One God" may commence this group, and the "one body" close and crown the assertion of ten times one; but to convert the number one baptism into three, is to destroy each other "one" and "the unity of the faith" altogether, as here taught. The gifts of the ministry are to perfect the saints, to edify the body of Christ, till we all come into the unity of the faith. Their action in baptism is expressed by "ONE." This idea of unity in the midst of this tenfold cluster, is as firm as a rock, which nothing can move.

CONCLUSION. 1. The "one baptism" answers and meets and memorializes the one death and one resurrection of Christ; the one death and burial of the believer "into the likeness" of his one death; and our one hope of life at the resurrection of the just.

2. "Truth beareth away the victory." "Thy word," saith Jesus, "is truth." It is truth as it stands. "One" is guarded by such several groupings of admitted facts that forbid the change. J. B. COOK.

THE CHRISTIAN MISSION CAMP-MEETING.

The church of Christ at New Hartford, Iowa, to those of like precious faith, and who wait for the Son of God from heaven, greeting: Beloved in the Lord, believing that the signs of the times indicate that we are among the perils of the last days, and that we are rapidly approaching those scenes of final trouble, such as never was; we have thought it good to invite our brethren in Christ, and the preachers of his word, who are interested in these momentous themes; strangers and friends, saints and sinners, Jews and Gentiles, bond and free, to attend this meeting at New Hartford, on the old camp-ground, to commence July 2nd, 1870, and continue over the 10th. Come to exhort one another, and to invite sinners to Christ; to encourage each other in the good work committed to us as a people. Eld. C. C. Ramsay, of Chicago, and other ministers, are expected to be present to preach the word.

The call for this meeting was caused by the great interest awakened by Bro. Ramsay at the dedication. The community at large desired the campmeeting to be held. All are invited to come that can do so, to work for God and the salvation of souls. Bring your unconverted friends and children. Hay, straw and tent-frames furnished free of charge.

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.

By the hand of G. T. Adams, from a reader of the Crisis, $3.00. Thanks are due to a good many readers of the Crisis; and though their donations are not usually acknowledged there, they are receipted privately always, and reserved for future publication (except where otherwise requested). Like all new enterprises, this has its share of friends, who stand off and speculate as to its ability to walk alone; whenever it can do so, they mean to come to its help, exclaiming, "See how we helped that to start off." A few also wait to see it fall in its infancy and weakness, and are afraid all the time that it may not. But these are not all. It has its tried, devoted friends, who water the tender plant with their prayers, and care continually for its interest, doing what they do, as unto the Lord, heartily. Above all, the Lord himself has his eye on us, and amid all the trials and difficulties of a young institution, we have the sweetest and surest tokens of divine favor in all our labors.

Some of the faithful have written kindly in reference to our health. To such we would reply, that we are on duty again two evenings in the week, part of each day, and in the Bible class and school on the Sabbath. The Master is there too, and in his name we purpose to go on noiselessly, humbly, and trustingly, while he gives us any strength to do so. Pray for us, and help us as Father may direct, and may he abundantly bless and comfort those who are so doing. The church will know ere long who they are, if we are permitted to tell it; but if not allowed, it will soon be known by the Master saying very publicly in judgment—"Inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least," etc.

"GIVE TO HIM THAT ASKETH THEE."

I have prayed earnestly to be delivered from the necessity of again asking help of my brethren, but my prayer in this case is not answered. Want and debt press us so hard at present, that I am forced to say, "Brethren, help!"

To those who have this world's goods I would say, you see your brother in need; will you aid him? If so, please write to

Correspondence.

From Bro. H. Snyders.

Bro. Grant:—Peace and joy of our heavenly Father, and Jesus the Lord, be richly with you. Dear brother, I never feel able to pay the Lord gratitude enough for his inexpressible goodness in revealing to me the true and only gospel of life and immortality through Jesus; and that this pearl of great worth is to be revealed at the Master's coming, in the morning of the resurrection, to all his waiting, believing, and loving children. O! for the coming of Jesus. We wish to crown him Lord of glory, when we shall see him in his beauty. Many years ago, one of my friends died, as an unconverted sinner; still she had led a moral life, and done many a noble act. The thought of her being in torment, racked by unheard of pains, blaspheming God and Christ to all eternity, worked so upon my mind, that I could no longer justify God in his dealings with men. The words, "dear Father," would die upon my lips. For three weeks I could not pray. The thought of my own father, who died also unconverted, and others of my deceased friends, would harrow me even in my dreams, till the blessed Lord, having compassion upon my ignorance, one night waked me up with the words, The Judge of all the world will judge the same in righteousness. I could then humble myself again before the Lord, and the Lord led me to the Advent people, where I heard of the coming of Jesus, and where I heard the first sermon on life through Jesus alone, by our old Bro. Blain, who gave me his book—"Death not Life." I read it, and God sanctified his truth to my heart, so that I felt as happy as in the day when I first found peace in the blood of the blessed Redeemer. I could now see clear through the plans of God, in the creation of men, and why God allowed sin to enter into the world, and the blessed redemption as revealed in Jesus, and how God through all this sin and wretchedness was gathering a people that would serve him and love him so well, that from the free choice of their hearts they would hate sin and strive to please God through faith in Jesus; and once in the new earth, would fully understand that great and loving heart of Jehovah, who so loved his enemies as to give his only begotten Son for their salvation. Should not our hearts vibrate with gratitude, and constantly breathe anthems of praise to God and the Lamb?

Dear brother, I have been trying to preach these glorious truths to our German population, also to any I could reach, and the Lord has given success to the work. There are now three German churches believing these glorious truths; one in Chicago, one in Watertown, Wis., and one in Ottawa, Minn. A great help to me have been the tracts of dear Bro. Reimer, who has sent me hundreds and hundreds without price and without money. The dear brother has borne the burden mostly out of his own pocket.

I saw an appeal in the Crisis to establish a Tract Fund for the Germans. I have been thinking that is the thing, the very thing that is needed. If there was a German tract and book fund, we could have such works as "Death not Life," and Whitmore on "Immortality," "The Soul, what is it?" and "The Spirit, what is it?" besides the tracts which Bro. Reimer has given out already. Then we would have some literature to give into the hands of the thinking people. I feel sure the English-speaking brethren and sisters will respond. I know my American friends too well to doubt their willingness to assist in bringing the truth before our great German population. Come, ye children of the kingdom, open your pocket-books, and let your hearts be great. I am a poor preacher; never had quite $400 a year for salary during all these costly times, and the year round divide my bread with the widow and the orphan, the poor and the stranger; still I'll give ten dollars. Where to get this moment, I do not know, but my Father will help. Now, brethren, remember Bro. L. Reimer, No. 1006 Chestnut St., Phila., and help also to pay for a tract on hell, translated by Bro. Koier. Send your help to print the same to J. V. Himes, Buchanan, Mich. The Lord will bless you abundantly, and pay you back ten times in this world, and after that eternal life. Your Bro. in Jesus, H. SNYDARS.

Chicago, April 29th, 1870.

From Bro. P. A. Smith.

Bro. Grant:—The church in this place attended meeting three miles from here, over and down the river, last Sunday. It was my first appointment in this place. Those whose hearts are in the work, and were willing to assist in spreading the blessed truth into other neighborhoods—three boat-loads of them, went over and assisted with their prayers, exhortations, and singing, and we had a glorious good time. Two more from Jacksonville were baptized. One of them has been a member and a steward of the Methodist church, and the other has been under conviction ever since. I preached the first sermon here two years ago last Nov. They can make two useful men, by God's help, to assist in spreading the truth.

A Mr. Ellenwood, from Madison, Fla., editor of the Southern Messenger, was there, and became very much interested. I gave him some books, and a copy of the "Crisis." If our people here were not so scattered, we would have quite a company; but it is a rare thing to get them all together at one time. There appears to be some of what they call the hardest cases, who attend our meetings; and when they hear once, they are anxious to hear more. I think the Bible hope is becoming more and more respected, as it is understood; and I think, as a whole, we have no reason to be discouraged here in Fla. One after another of the preachers are receiving the truth, and are beginning to proclaim it.

A man by the name of French, who has been a Baptist preacher, and is now teaching school a few miles from Lake City, has come into the faith. He was with us Sunday over the river, and gave us a short discourse the second coming of Christ, and it had the right ring to it. He has preached it some out where he is teaching. So you see the truth is spreading. And why? Because Jesus said, This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world as a witness. Glory to God. Let the echo roll on; for "He that shall come, will come, and will not tarry." It fills my heart with joy, to know we are almost home. Yours in hope,

P. A. SMITH.

Jacksonville, Fla., May 10th, 1870.

From Bro. B. F. Davis.

Bro. Grant:—I thought I would write a few lines for the Crisis, for it has been to us like an angel of light. It led us out of Spiritualism, and from believing that old lie of the devil, who said to our first parents in the garden, "Ye shall not surely die." Question: Did Adam die? Yes, he "lived nine hundred and thirty years, and he died." Adam and his posterity have obeyed the voice of God from Adam until the present day,—"Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return"; and if God had not made that blessed promise that the seed of the woman should bruise the serpent's head, death would have been an endless sleep. I am glad, glory to God, that Jesus came into the world, and lived our example, died our sacrifice, rose a mighty conqueror, and ascended into heaven, there to plead for poor lost rebels like us. I am glad to believe the testimony of angels, that this same Jesus that went away into heaven shall so come in like manner—literally—yes, personally, and shall sit upon the throne of his father David, and "reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end."

O what a blessed thought! Earth is to be restored back to its Eden beauty and glory; and the dear pilgrims, those that have made a covenant with God by sacrifice, shall take their new Eden home, and dwell there forever. There will be no more sin, no more sorrow, no more pain, no more death, and no more tears. These things will be forever in the past. The time will soon come. This generation shall not pass until Jesus comes.

One word to the dear pilgrims. How is it with us? Can we say with Paul, "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith"? Are we all ready for translation? Could we say, if we should see the Lord coming, "Lo, this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us"? Are we crying, "Come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly"? The language of my heart is,—

> "Come and reign, come and reign,
> Jesus, on thy throne;
> And, O, it fills our hearts with joy,
> To know we're almost home."

B. F. DAVIS.

Portland, Me., April 22nd, 1870.

BRO. J. E. AINSWORTH writes from Wales, Mass., Feb. 1st, 1870:—"As I have been a reader of the Crisis for many years, I wish to add my testimony to the truths it advocates. It is next to the Bible, or I might say it goes hand in hand with the Bible. I hail its weekly visits with delight. I am some six miles from any church looking for Jesus, and the Crisis is my companion when I am detained at home. As I read the stirring epistles from the brethren and sisters, it kindles the fire in my own heart. I feel that we are living in a time when, like Peter, we should stir up each other's pure minds by way of remembrance. 'And let us consider one another, to provoke unto love and to good works; not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; but exhorting one another; and so much the more as ye see the day approaching.' Heb. 10: 23, 24. 'And that, knowing the time, that now it is high time to awake out of sleep; for now is our salvation nearer than when we believed.' Rom. 13: 11.

When we examine the Scriptures in relation to the coming of Christ, and see the overwhelming evidence of his speedy coming, it is astonishing that so many who profess to love him, should be so bitter against the time of his advent, and heap such anathemas upon those who are looking for and loving his appearing. How much love can that woman have who despises the day of her husband's return? Brethren, let us hold fast the profession of our faith to the end. I do believe the time is at hand, when he that is righteous will be righteous still; and he that is filthy will be filthy still. Who of the readers of the Crisis will be able to say, 'Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us. This is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.'"

Bro. J. Wilbur, West Hoosick, N. Y., writes:—"The Lord is doing a good work in Hoosick. Many persons, both old and young, are under conviction. Some have already repented of their sins, and have become truly converted to God and his blessed truth. Sixteen have been baptized here of late, and eighteen united with the church, and still they come. Several more are about ready to go down into the watery grave and show forth to the world their faith in the death and resurrection of Christ. Pray for us. Elder C. Pike, of Hebron, N. Y., has been laboring here for the last two weeks with good success."

For the World's Crisis.

AN AGED WOMAN.

There is in this city a colored woman, who is said to be nearly one hundred and five years of age. Mary Ann Decker is her name. She was born in this State, and was once a slave, as was also her husband. She retains her faculties in a remarkable degree. She can see, hear and read, and has a distinct recollection of events a century ago. She is able to work, and, until the last winter, has walked to church, and been a constant attendant. She employs her time in cutting carpet rags. She has a distinct recollection of the dark day, in 1780, and the account she gives of it is similar to what we have often heard from other sources. The children came into the house crying with fear; the fowls went to roost; and the general impression was that the last day had come. The mistress took her Bible and read in it, and prayed, and the remainder of the day was spent as the Sabbath. No one had any desire to work.

While in her room to-day, a boy came in about twelve years of age. Said she, "There is one of my great, great-grandchildren." It may be that she is one of the chosen ones, who will "not pass away until all these things are fulfilled," spoken of in the 29th of Matt. She says she feels impressed that the Lord will soon come; though she has not probably ever heard a sermon upon the subject. She says she does not see why the Lord has been so good to her as to preserve her life so long. She has a good hope of eternal life, and is waiting for deliverance. D. N. Smith.

WALKER—DOW. In South Elliot, Me., May 1st, 1870, by Elder Geo. W. Brown, Mr. Samuel Walker, of Berwick, Me., and Miss Fanny Dow, of South Berwick, Me.

Obituaries.

Clark. Died, at Clark's Mills, Richmond, R. I., May 9th, Charles Clark, in the fifty-third year of his age.

I trust that my brother "sleeps in Jesus," and when the "Lord himself shall descend from heaven," he will awake to endless life.

"How long shall death the tyrant reign,
And triumph o'er the just?"

O come, Lord Jesus, and wake up thy sleeping ones; bring them out of the condition of death into which they have fallen; make them incorruptible; give them their promised inheritance, the earth, with the curse removed, that they may dwell therein forever. S. P. Clark.

Cochran. Died, in Searsport, Me., April 21st, 1870, of consumption, Eliza, wife of Capt. Frank Cochran, and only daughter of Mr. Benjamin Tripp, aged thirty-eight years.

A kind husband, father and three children, are left to mourn. The subject of this notice had never given her heart fully to God until upon her dying bed. When she saw all hopes of recovery were in vain, she turned her sad heart to Christ, and found a friend who could carry her safely through the dark valley, and she feared no evil. A. M. Tripp.

Tryon. Died, in Youngstown, Niagara Co., N. Y., May 6th, 1870, of bronchial consumption, Sister Amelia Tryon, daughter of Bro. Joel and Sr. E. J. Tryon, aged twenty-five years.

Sister T. lived a true christian life and died a triumphant death. She fell asleep in Jesus in the full assurance of faith. She hoped for life only through Christ and the resurrection of the dead. She leaves many sorrowing and sympathizing friends. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, from 1 Cor. 15: 19. C. W. Low.

Gray. Died, suddenly, in Dover, N. H., May 3d, 1870, Mrs. Hannah I., wife of Bro. Solomon Gray, aged fifty-one years, five months and fifteen days.

Sister Gray has enjoyed much of the divine favor since she was baptized last winter. Her kindred who mourn her loss, also the church, rejoice amid their sorrow, having the blest assurance that she rests in hope of the "better resurrection." Through the kindness of the Calvinistic Baptist Church we were permitted to attend the funeral at their house of worship, where a goodly congregation listened to the word of the Lord. John G. Hook.

Horton. Died, in Poultney, Vt., May 7th, 1870, Bro. Asa Horton, father-in-law of Bro. Asa Rogers, aged eighty-seven years.

Bro. Horton has been a christian pilgrim some fifty years, and now sleeps in Jesus. He was buried at Mt. Holly, in his family burying-ground.

Remarkable Phenomenon.—The Syracuse (N. Y.) Journal of the 14th inst. mentions a very remarkable phenomenon as having occurred in the town of Marcellus last Tuesday night. It says:

"A tract of land containing about three acres, lying upon both sides of the highway, and situated about four miles south of Marcellus village, at a place called Tyler's Hollow, was upheaved during the night by some subterranean force, the surface being piled into hillocks as high and as large as a house, and huge cracks or crevasses were opened, which extend irregularly all over it. The ground where the tract crosses the public road was thrown into the most fantastic shapes, rendering the road impassable.

It is supposed the earthquake took place about mid-night, but no noise was heard in the vicinity, although some inexplicable sounds were reported as being heard at Marcellus.

A strong smell of sulphur is noticed in the vicinity of this remarkable occurrence, but nothing further to indicate the cause of the upheaval.

This singular occurrence has produced a great excitement in the vicinity, and hundreds of people have already visited the spot."

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

Paris, May 11. The French opposition and clerical organs question the result of the election. They maintain that while the vote may have a numerical value, it is without social, political or religious significance.

The police arrested over 200 persons last night, and searched many houses in the disturbed districts. Arrests continue to be made to-day. Fresh troubles are feared to-night. Crowds of people are in the Faubourg du Temple. Large numbers collected in front of the barracks, but were dispersed by the police, and the guards around the soldiers' quarters have been increased.

A desperate attempt at revolt was made by the inmates of the prison of La Roquette yesterday. The prisoners, while at work in the shops, attacked their keepers, and a fierce struggle followed. One keeper was killed and two other officers were wounded.

London, May 11. The Queen in state to-day opened the new building of the University of London, in Burlington Gardens. Among the eminent persons present were Messrs. Gladstone, Disraeli and the leading members of the Government and Parliament. The Earl of Granville and Messrs. George Grote and Robert Lowe received the Queen at the doors and presented the address. Her Majesty, instead of reading the reply which had been furnished her, said in a clear voice; "I declare this building to be opened." The Queen was loudly cheered, and cheers were called and given in succession for the royal family, the Premier and Mr. Disraeli.

Madrid, May 10. The Spanish Progressist party have finally settled on ex-regent Espartero as the future King of Spain, and have finally placed his name before the Courts for the elevation to the throne. This selection causes great rejoicing in Catalonia and other provinces where the ex-regent has long been the choice of the people.

Florence, May 10. The insurrection which lately broke at Filadelphia, in the southern part of Italy, was confined to that immediate locality and was by no means formidable. The latest news announces the dispersion of the insurgents by the Government arms without serious difficulty.

Vienna, May 10. The Weinpresse says that England undertakes to clear Greece of brigands on these conditions, viz., that King George temporarily withdraw, a regent be appointed, the ministry be dismissed, and the habeas corpus act suspended.

Paris, May 14, 1870. Great preparations are being made for the official proclamation of the vote recently thrown.

The Emperor will receive a deputation of the Corps Legislatif, and deliver a discourse on the subject.

Vienna, May 13. The Austrian Government is resolved to resent the proclamation of Papal infallibility by a restoration of the placentium regium which was abolished in 1855.

Rome, May 13. The Pope threatens extreme measures against the American Bishops who quit their posts at Rome.

DOMESTIC.

A Remarkable Religious Community. There is a remarkable community living in Iowa, who call themselves the "Christian Brothers." They have a monastery upon one of the highest Mississippi bluffs, approached by a rough and rocky road. They wear the garb which is the identical pattern of that worn by St. Bernard in the sixth century. Not a change has been made during the twelve centuries that have elapsed since the death of that saint. A great deal of time is devoted to religious exercises. From two o'clock in the morning until daylight they repair to the chapel and devote the balance of the time until daylight to prayer. They are exceedingly abstemious in their food, and observe all the rules of the society rigidly. Some of them have been there twenty and a few about thirty years. Their religious belief is Roman Catholic, and they are never allowed to marry. Women are never allowed in their place of worship under any circumstances. After a certain time they take upon themselves a vow never to speak aloud, and a number have kept that vow for twenty years. Such is the humble seclusion of this community.

The Grasshopper Pest in Utah.—A Salt Lake correspondent of the Sacramento Union thus speaks of the devastation caused by grasshoppers in Utah:

"For four seasons the grasshoppers have hatched out in countless swarms, have lived on the surrounding vegetation until fully developed, and then have wafted themselves in clouds over the Territory, doing a vast amount of damage. Farmers are discouraged, particularly in the Northern part of the Territory, where they have suffered most, for myriads of the black, ugly-looking little insects—as they appear in the first stages after hatching out—are hopping and swarming around, in many places covering everything green, and blighting the vegetation on which they touch. There is something poisonous in their bite, and a dark colored slimy fluid, which they emit, seems to have a similar effect. The ways that Mormon farmers have tried to overcome the invader have been many, but the hosts of the enemy are so numerous that the destruction of a few millions does not seem to diminish them. They have been swept together in heaps and burned; driven into streams and caught in gunny sacks by hundreds of bushels, and then buried deep under the earth; but all is of no use, the plague continues. Had it not been for this, there never was a brighter prospect for an abundant harvest in Utah, of fruit, grain and vegetables, than there is at present."

The Strikes in France.—The Paris correspondent of an English paper says the great question of the day in that capital is not that of government, dynasty, or succession, but of strikes. Frequent Cabinet councils are held which are devoted entirely to this subject. Money comes from London, Geneva, Forence, Berlin and St. Petersburg. M. Ollivier proposes that there should be a distinct contract between master and man, engagement so many days, pay so much, so much time on each side to break the agreement, disputes in the meantime to be referred to a jury of the deacons of the craft; any breach of engagement to be referred to the Correctional Poilce.

"Foot-washing" by the Pope and Kaiser.—A correspondent at Rome, who went to St. Peter's on Thursday in Holy Week, writes respecting the usual reception of poor pilgrims by the Pope: The waiting at the table of the pilgrims was done, as usual, in the hall over the portico; so this I saw not, and can only say what I heard. A long table was spread, and very tastily adorned with vases of flowers—much, I should think, as in a London dinner party. The pilgrims were placed along it, and had something given them—nobody could say what; and equally inscrutable was the amount of the Pope's service. The squeezing was terrific. One of my informants saw a priest carried out insensible by two Zouaves; but, on the other hand, a lady, whose looks would win her way, reports that she got a good sight of the Pope and the table, and was presented with one of the flowers. The Pope returned to the choir, and soon did the feet-washing. There sat on a bench raised above the heads of the assembled bishops twelve men, in large, loose-fitting, whitish garments, with very tall caps of the same hue. The Pope came to them, well-supported by cardinals, and supplied with water and towels from the dressing table, which I had thought a sideboard. All one could see was a wonderful quantity of bowing and kissing. Wherever the Pope's hand went a head went down to kiss it. They say that he really does throw some drops of water on their feet and rub it off with a napkin. The poor men, it is said, are priests who ask the honor.

The ancient ceremony of washing the feet of twelve poor old men and women (says the Eastern Budget) was performed this year by the Emperor and Empress of Austria in the throne-room of the Imperial Palace. The royal family of Hanover, the principal court dignitaries, Count Beust, and most of the other Ministers, were present, together with an immense crowd of visitors. The old men and women, whose ages ranged from eighty-eight to ninety-three, were dressed in the old German costume. They first sat down to a cold collation, the men being waited on by the Emperor, the oldest of the women by the Empress, and the rest of the women by the maids of honor. This was a mere form, as the various dishes were only put on the table, and then taken away and placed in wooden vessels appropriated for the purpose. The feet of the women were then washed by the court chamberlain and dried by the Empress, while Prince Hohenlohe and the Emperor performed the same office for the men. After the ceremony the Emperor and Empress washed their hands, and hung round the neck of each of the poor people a bag containing thirty pieces of silver. The latter were then sent home in court carriages, each with a bottle of wine and the vessel containing his or her dinner.

☞ More than 600 Catholic ladies of distinction have signed an indignant protest against the idea of a commission being appointed to examine the convents in England. Among them are the Duchess of Norfolk, the dowager Duchess of Argyll, the Marchioness of Londonderry, Lady Victoria Hope Scott, Lady Fitzallan Howard, the Countess of Portarlington, Lady Gertrude Douglas, Lady Alexander Gordon Lennox, and many others of similar exalted station.

Passing Events.

☞ People at the North think that no other people ever saw such fluctuations in gold as they have experienced. The Confederates, however, had their trial. January 1, 1865, one dollar in gold bought sixty dollars in Confederate currency. May 1, 1865, one dollar in gold would buy $1200 in Confederate money.

☞ There are said to be in Europe about twenty five theatres and more than 18,000 concert halls. Germany boasts a greater number of both than any other country.

☞ A lady correspondent of the Independent asserts authoritatively that Queen Victoria is utterly opposed to female suffrage, much to the disgust of strong-minded British matrons.

☞ The "Plebiscitum" of France is nothing more nor less than universal suffrage under the control of monarchism.

☞ In the Hungarian Empire they are about to celebrate the feast of one thousand years' jubilee.

☞ The late Fenian "scare" in Canada is said to have cost the New Dominion $200,000.

"FOLLOW ME."

The Master's voice was sweet:
"I gave my life for thee;
Bear thou this cross through pain and loss;
Arise and follow me."
I clasped it in my hands:
O Thou who diedst for me,
The day is bright, my step is light,
'Tis sweet to follow thee!

Through the long summer day
I followed lovingly;
'Twas bliss to hear his voice so near,
His glorious face to see.
Down where the lilies pale
Fringed the bright river's brim,
In pastures green his steps were seen—
'Twas sweet to follow him."

Oh, sweet to follow him!
"Lord, let us here abide."
The flowers were fair, I lingered there,
I laid his cross aside.
I saw his face no more
By that bright river's brim;
Before me lay the desert way—
'Twas hard to follow him.

Yes, hard to follow him
Into that dreary land:
I was alone; his cross had grown
Too heavy for my hand.
I heard his voice afar
Sound through the night air chill;
My weary feet refused to meet
His coming o'er the hill.

The Master's voice was sad:
"I gave my life for thee;
I bore the cross through pain and loss;
Thou hast not followed me."
"So fair the lilied banks,
So bleak the desert way;
The night was dark, I could not mark
Where thy blest footsteps lay."

"Fairer the lilied banks,
Softer the grassy lea,
The endless rest of those who best
Have learned to follow me!
Canst thou not follow me,
All weary as thou art?
Hath patient love no power to move
Thy slow and faithless heart?
Wilt thou not follow me?
These weary feet of mine
Have stained red the pathway dread
In search for thee and thine."

O Lord, O love divine,
Once more I follow thee!
Let me abide so near thy side
That I thy face may see.
I clasp thy pierced hand,
O thou that diedst for me;
I'll bear thy cross through pain and loss,
So I may cling to thee.

CONDITION IN SHEOL.

Ed. World's Crisis:—I send you article No. 7 in the discussion now proceeding between myself and Rev. Noble Palmer, Episcopal clergyman of Nunda, N. Y. I hope this will not be considered ostentatious or inopportune, but that its insertion in the Crisis may be approved by yourself and readers. The heading chosen by my opponent, who takes the affirmative of natural immortality in man and the consciousness of the dead, is, "The Unceasing Existence of the Soul," and the caption of my articles was chosen to contrast most naturally with his; or in other words, to correspond in the way of a direct negative;—immortality being shown to be conditional, and not inherent. C. C.

THE SOUL'S EXISTENCE UNCEASING, ONLY THROUGH CHRIST.

Inasmuch as we have been distinctly and emphatically admonished by the affirmative that sheol is the receptacle of the souls of the dead, it is quite beyond our ability to perceive what we have to do with passages of Scripture declared to locate and reveal those souls with Christ and God and angels. What possible necessity is imposed on us to do this, in view of the glaring inconsistency involved in a quotation of such passages? If souls can be at one and the same time in sheol and in heaven, or, again, if angels and Deity are also actually captive in sheol, then our own work is the more exactly defined.

We are perfectly willing and ready to examine every passage in the Bible bearing on the great question of the nature of man and the state of the dead; but the limitation specified, of disembodied souls to sheol, would render an exposition of scriptures assigning them to heaven and glory a work of superfluity or supererogation. Let us keep scrupulously mindful of the necessities or dictates of consistency. Now let us look a little further at the testimony of God's word respecting the state of the dead. Says David, "The enemy hath made me to dwell in darkness as those that have been long dead." Then certainly the dead are in the darkness of sheol. And the Psalmist, in his affliction, felt a premonitory shadow of death. He approached the gateway of the under world, but without any intimation of light being descried to relieve the profound gloom and desolation of the place. Job exclaimed, "Let me alone, that I may take comfort a little before I go whence I shall not return, even to the land of darkness, and of the shadow of death; a land of darkness, as darkness itself, and of the shadow of death, without any order, and where the light is as darkness."

This is very plain indeed. Darkness four times applied to the state of death and the dead, whither Job is going. We have been carefully premonished by the affirmative that the body goes to kever, and the soul to sheol. Body or soul, Job says he shall go to darkness, the land of darkness, whether it is kever or sheol. Job will be there, no matter in what aspect Job is surveyed. Whether it is one place or the other, it is darkness.

Suppose it is maintained that the place denoted is the grave (kever), and that only Job's body goes there. We immediately cite the following: Job 17: 13,—"If I wait, the grave is my house; I have made my bed in the darkness." In this passage, the Hebrew for grave is sheol. So that sheol, which is to be Job's house after he is dead (the house of his soul, if you please), is a place of darkness, for the dead man's bed in that house is made in the darkness. Behold the patriarch, cold and lifeless, laid away to sleep in silence (for the bed is the place of slumber) until the resurrection. See v. 16,—"They shall go down to the bars of the pit (sheol), when our rest together is in the dust." We think it would strike an honest mind as an arbitrary and strange rendering of such language, to say, "Their living souls shall go down to the bars of the pit, when our bodies rest together in the dust." And it would strike many as a singular and undesirable destiny for the souls of the righteous, to go down alive to the bars of the pit, or a place of darkness, and picketed and palisaded like a prison. But we understand it perfectly when we know the dead are unconscious there, and the whole period of their imprisonment is but a moment in their experience.

Parenthetically, let us inquire if it is indeed uniformly true, as alleged, that the soul alone, and not the body, is scripturally represented to sheol. If this be true, how comes it that Jacob protests in the event of mischief happening to Benjamin, "Then shall ye bring down my gray hairs [not my soul] with sorrow to the grave (sheol)." Judah, in his conversation with Joseph, uses precisely the same language, in describing the effect of such a calamity upon his father. David enjoins upon Solomon the duty of executing the punishment which Joab's iniquities had provoked, and charges him thus: "Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let not his hoar head go down to the grave (sheol) in peace." Nothing said about Joab's soul here. And he reiterates the injunction, "His hoar head bring thou down to the grave (sheol) with blood." Thus we see there is an unmistakable intimation that there is something besides an immaterial conscious entity (as supposed) that goes to sheol. The gray head and gray hairs of the dead are consigned to sheol. Hence we understand that the Hebrew terms are used somewhat interchangeably, sheol denoting a locality less definite and circumscribed than cer, but equally involving their total absence of light, life, or intelligence. Not only do we see that "hoar head and gray hairs" are brought down to sheol, but we also find the soul assigned to "shokhath" as well as sheol. This word signifies "a pit, a miry pit, a ditch"; and Hezekiah says, "Thou hast in love to my soul delivered it from the pit of corruption." Elihu also (whom God did not reprove), in Job 33: 18, advises the patriarch: "He keepeth back his soul from the pit"; so that the soul is not represented as exclusively going to sheol.

But let us not run the hazard of any error here. We will further fortify the position with plain and positive scriptures. In Psalm 6 we read, "For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave (sheol) who shall give thee thanks?" What more emphatic testimony could be reasonably demanded, to the unconsciousness and inaction of the dead? They are utterly oblivious even of God. The memory of his divine mercy is extinct. The sentiment of gratitude is unfelt. The recollection or recognition of God, surely would survive and defy the power of moveth (death), if any intellectual exercise or quality could; but sheol and moveth are marked with the same peculiarity. What could be more explicit and significant? What unavailing effort of ingenuity should seek to ascribe to the dead any function of intelligence, when the word of God declares with comprehensive simplicity that "in death there is no remembrance" of God. And though a thousand million souls of saints are in sheol, not a single soul of all the mighty multitude is occupied with the ascription of one syllable of praise or thanksgiving to the Almighty. This may be hard upon popular opinion, but it is the undeniable declaration of the word of God. It is impossible to ascribe functions to the denizens of sheol, which are upon the authority of inspiration denied, without coming in direct conflict with the testimony of revelation. Let us be teachable, and willing to sacrifice an indefensible pre-conception to the authority of Jehovah.

Again in Ps. 88, "Wilt thou show wonders to the dead? Shall the dead arise and praise thee?" Would a rendering of the first question be ventured, which should designate the body and exclude the soul, thus,—"Wilt thou show wonders to the bodies of the dead?" What an absurdity! But suppose an intelligent entity, the soul, to be meant, then of course the interrogation is equivalent to a simple negative—"thou wilt not show wonders" to such, and "they shall not arise and praise thee" until the power of God is exerted to raise the dead. It is, therefore, clearly unscriptural to teach that any intelligence untouched by death, and superior to it, rises by an inherent property of lightness or elasticity, and soars away to glory. Nay, the dead are in sheol, and soar to heaven they cannot. "They have made their bed in the darkness," and both supine and unconscious, how can they arise and praise God? "Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteousness in the land of forgetfulness?" No, indeed. For "there is no wisdom nor knowledge in sheol."

Let us revert a moment again to Hezekiah's experience. "I said in the cutting off of my days, I shall go to the gates of the grave." Now it happens that we have again in the original, sheol for "grave." This being Hezekiah's destination in the event of death, we would naturally seek for any testimony associated with this locality, specifying its most prominent peculiarity, and particularly the effect of a residence in sheol on the intellectual part of man, or the inseparable and characteristic incident of such a residence. In the 18th verse, the case is made perfectly plain in a few words. "For the grave [that is, sheol] cannot praise thee, death cannot celebrate thee." This is confirmation direct and positive in regard to the non-exercise of gratitude, the non-expression of praise, and the non-existence of sentient souls in sheol. It is testimony which can be neither evaded or resisted. Hezekiah, in recalling a troubled anticipation of becoming captive to sheol, disavows the possibility of praising God in that captivity. There is no Te Deum Laudamus there.

The question now arises whether a solitary passage can be cited in the Bible which shall in any way impute intelligence to the inhabitants of sheol. Is there one scripture (not parabolic or figurative), one explicit testimony in conflict with those we have quoted? If so, let it be produced for examination, and we will look at it carefully. If there is a verse or line, from Genesis to Malachi, asserting knowledge and wisdom, or any emotional or mental activity in sheol, we wait for it. If immortal souls are there endowed with sensation and thought, let us clearly understand the fact. We can well afford to search this matter thoroughly. Our knowledge surely need not be superficial, if we are patiently resolved to be accurate. And so, too, in regard to hades, the New Testament equivalent for sheol. If there can be found, outside of the figurative license and usage of parable, one syllable of testimony to disembodied consciousness and intellect, in the use of this term, let us have it. If souls think and feel, love and hate, in hades, we are ready and waiting to be instructed. Truth is the precious prize we seek. We care nothing for the absurdities of heathen mythology. What has flowed down to us from antiquity, on the stream of corrupt tradition, does not concern us. One line from the word of God is worth more than all the fables and fancies of Alexandria or Athens, Corinth or Rome. How Pluto governed, or Minos judged, or Charon rowed, or Cerberus barked, or Tantalus, Sisyphus and Ixion suffered, is of no account. And as we proceed, we shall be able to estimate correctly, I trust, what value is to be attached to the opinions of the Pharisees, to whom our Lord almost constantly directed the language of sharp reproof and terrible denunciation.

TELL ME OF JESUS.

Tell me of Jesus, for I love him. He is to me the "chiefest among ten thousand," and the one "altogether lovely." I have listened hundreds of times to the old, old story of his earth-life, and wonderful love for sinners, and it sounds sweeter each time I hear it. Tell me of Jesus. I would have his life and sufferings ever before me, that I may learn to be like him. Jesus, blessed Jesus, how sweetly the sound of the hallowed name falls on my ears. How many times, when cares and trials have pressed heavily, my lips have breathed the sacred name—Jesus, and my heart has grown lighter, and strength has been given me to toil patiently on.

I have dear friends, and I love them so much I am willing to toil hard and suffer for them; and were it in my power I would gladly shield them from the sorrows of life; but much as I love them, I love Jesus better. Do you wonder why I should? He is my best friend. He has done for me what no earthly friend could do. I was a wanderer in the intricate labyrinths of sin, lost and perishing. He saw my helpless condition, and came to my rescue. He led me to the path which leads to life eternal. He washed away my sins in his own blood, and brought peace, sweet peace to my heart, peace such as the world can neither give nor take away; "and . . . put a new song in my mouth, even praise unto our God." My heart thrills with the music of the new song as it never thrilled before. O wonderful change from nature's darkness to the marvelous light of the gospel! O love divine, that would stoop to lift from the depths of sin and woe, and wash every guilty stain white as the driven snow.

Jesus is mine, and I am his. With his smile resting on me, and his hand clasping mine, I can go wherever he chooses to lead me, though the way be very narrow and thorny. I had rather have his approbation than the applause of the whole world.

Tell me of Jesus. The transient pleasures of earth have no charms for me. I have started on a pilgrimage to that beautiful city, which the exile of Patmos saw in vision long years ago. And never since I gave my heart to Jesus and became a pilgrim, have I had any desire to mingle with the gay and thoughtless in the giddy scenes of earth. The atmosphere of any gathering, public or private, where Christ is not an invited guest and a revered personage, is oppressive to me. I had rather sit down alone and read my Bible. I do not need the excitement of any place of amusement to make me cheerful and happy. "Wisdom's ways are ways of pleasantness, and all her paths are peace." "Light is sown for the righteous and gladness for the upright in heart."

In looking over the past I can say, "Surely goodness and mercy" have followed me thus far. "By the grace of God I am what I am." A child of God and an heir "to an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." And I am trying day by day to "grow in grace and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." If you would help me, tell me of Jesus.

EVIDENCES OF CHRISTIANITY.

These are usually considered of three classes—historical, internal, and experimental.

Christianity was introduced among men under very remarkable circumstances. Miracles were performed, and future events foretold, in attestation of its divine origin. These constitute the historical evidence.

When we examine the book itself, its truths, its doctrines, its spirit, we find it exactly such in its nature and tendency as we should expect a message from Jehovah to us would be. This is called the internal evidence.

And when we look at the effects which the Bible produces, wherever it is faithfully received, we find it answers the purpose for which it was sent. This is the experimental evidence.

These three kinds of evidences are entirely distinct in their nature, and may be illustrated as follows: You have a substance which you suppose is phosphorus, because in the first place a boy in whom you place confidence brought it for you from the chemist's, who said it was phosphorus. This is the historical evidence. In the second place you examine, and it looks like phosphorus; its color, consistence and form all agree. This is the internal evidence. In the third place you try it. It burns with a most bright and vivid flame. This is the experimental evidence.

This last is the best of the three. No matter what grounds of doubt and hesitation there may be in regard to the first and second kind of evidences, if the article proves its properties on trial. If any one should say to you, "I suspect your messenger's honesty; he may have brought something else"; or, "This does not look exactly like phosphorus; it is too dark, or too hard"; your reply would be, Sir, there can be no doubt; see it burn.

THIS SPRING—THIS SUMMER.

INDULGENCE.

Dear Christian Sisters:—To you the writer of these lines addresses the thoughts that may follow.

How often with "unfeigned faith" do we look upon and cherish portraitures of human perfection of all that is excellent in the City of God. We review the past and cherish all its images of promise, all its finished workmanship. We dwell with gladness on all the goodliness and beauty of the rich present time; but just now let us reflect. We certainly have a goodly heritage and a pleasant land,—so goodly that we have fallen into a sad error; the error of hurtful "indulgences." In the early days of Luther it came to be a part of the corrupt Roman church's "sin" to sell "indulgences to sin," and this very evil first roused the soul of the Wirtemburg monk.

Dear sisters, have we not also come almost, nay, quite, to similar times? It seems as though the churches of this time are (not so much by precept as by example) granting indulgences which experience proves ruinous. Shall we examine the most common and injurious?

Among one of the first evils of our American society is found that almost universal evil—extravagance. In dress, it creates or fosters vanity. In food, it corrupts the appetite. In both, it exhausts the vital forces. It surely saps prematurely the very life-blood.

Intemperance is in reality but one form of hurtful indulgence, and it is found not only in the use of excessive stimulating drinks, but in food too rich in quality, too great in quantity. It is found in even those most natural forces of life itself—in love, in anger, in sorrow, even in fondest hopes.

These may be common-place words, but none the less important; and the tide of time and events seems to have borne us to the time when we must "choose" between life or death.

Two questions now are forced upon our fathers, husbands and brothers, and upon us, my sisters, as earnestly. The first in popular discussion seems to be woman's work. The last, but more alarming, is the late grave question, substantially this: "Is there strength enough in American Protestant church influence to keep the Holy Bible in the schools? or, can and will the Roman power force it out?"

Dear sisters, the present must mould the future of our land. Shall we live to ourselves, to our children, and the living God, through the principles of "temperance and righteousness" in practical life? or shall we, through vain self-indulgence, die for ever? The royal church of the King of kings will live on, through sunshine and through storm, through the darkest days, and through the Red Sea of blood.

Shall we not this very spring, this summer, give up wholly those extravagant indulgences which enslave us, and which threaten ere long to bring even our now proud land into bondage to the Church of Rome? Our Bible is in their threatenings, and the history of Europe proves that there is determination in the purposes of that power. Are we fully aware that our vain show in even our matters of dress, and useless, nay, injurious outlay, is now, perhaps, the weakest point in the Protestant American churches?

O, let us be wise, ere another deluge of blood overwhelm us. Let us return to simplicity and strength. P. M. Eaton.

Warner, N. H.

STATE OF THE DEPARTED.

There are sometimes soothing, beautiful sermons delivered at funerals and other occasions which describe little children as turned into angels, and the spirits of departed friends as hovering around us, influencing us to good, having a more tender interest in us than when they were in the body. It is only occasionally a clergyman of the church falls into this careless way of expressing himself, which strikes us as unscriptural, both in language and sentiment, and nothing but a beautiful theory.

It seems quite impossible for a child to become an angel. Angels are not made in that sort of way. That a child can be a christian, a saint, a redeemed soul, is very true, from the language of our Lord and that of St. Paul. "Christ took not on him the nature of angels." When they become "children of the resurrection" they will be "equal to the angels." That is all. . . . .

It is to be regretted that there is so much of this kind of preaching. The clearer the preacher's views are of the doctrine of the intermediate state; the guardianship of angels; the nature and office of Him who is the regenerator, and sanctifier, and comforter of the race and of the doctrine of grace through the appointed channels; the less will he discourse on such a theory of the departed. The looser a minister's views are of the incarnation,—"the everlasting miracle of all time,"—a miracle which stands out clearly by itself, and of which the miracles that went before of old were but the heralds, thrust on into time by the force of this, as the early morn precedes the effulgence of the noon-day sun, and all miracles which followed this, followed necessarily as attendants in a train—the looser a minister's views are of this; of the sacraments; of the Catholic faith; the ministerial gifts conferred on an order of men, and the work of the Holy Spirit, the greater prevalence will this opinion of the departed have in the pulpit, and among unlearned and unthinking people. Anything which cannot be clearly proven from Scripture, no clergyman has any right to advance in the pulpit, or in private, to muddle the minds of his people, or to please their fancy, or to gratify himself.—Gospel Messenger.

For the World's Crisis.

LOVE ONE ANOTHER.

This is what Christ teaches, to love our neighbor as ourselves; not to think ourselves higher than others. He also says, "He that keepeth my commandments, the same is my mother, and sister, and brother." Now if all professed christians loved each other as brothers and sisters, there would not be so much stiffness in some of these popular churches. But the doors would be thrown open wide, and the poor laborer be welcomed there, and be conducted to a seat as politely as the rich merchant in his fine broadcloth. And why not? For if the poor man is clothed with the robe of righteousness, is he not just as worthy of attention as the rich man? For is he not rich indeed having on such a beautiful robe, made clean and white by the blood of Christ?

But some of these rich professors do not seem to think so; they look down upon a poor person as not being as good as the rich, because they are poorly clad; and when they see them coming into church, they will gather their pharisaical robes about them, and toss their heads back with a scornful look, as much as to say, What are you in our church for? we do not want such as you here; we have no room for you. Is it any wonder, then, that so many poor persons stay away from the house of God Sunday after Sunday, thinking they have no clothes good enough to wear?

O, if all those who profess to love Jesus were truly possessors, and had the true spirit of meekness in their hearts, as he had when on earth, as he wants all to have now, they would search out all these poor ones, and speak a kind, gentle word to them, and cordially invite them to go to the house of God, assuring them that they would be welcome there, that Jesus is in their church, and he loves the poor and rich alike, and welcomes all.

O that there was but one name for all the churches; that, instead of being called Methodists, and Baptists, and Orthodox, and so on, they could all be called the church of Christ, and all the doors be thrown open wide, and over them printed in large letters, so large that all might see, Come, welcome all, rich and poor, Jesus bids you welcome. Then we would see the poor, the lame, the blind, and all who are now cast down and dejected, coming boldly with their heads erect to the house of God, to learn about Jesus, and get their spiritual strength renewed.

What a glorious sight this would be, would it not? to see all classes of people, from the highest to the lowest, all walking along together side by side towards the house of God, to listen to the teachings of the blessed Jesus, who loveth all alike, who places the poorest persons that have the love of Christ in their hearts on the same level with the richest ones.

Riches sometimes take to themselves wings and fly away, and then where is the rich man's honor who has no Christ? His popular friends all leave him then, and he is considered no better than the poor laborer. Let us see to it that we have the true spirit of Christ in our hearts, and then we shall consider ourselves all like one family here below, and we shall love each other like brothers and sisters, remembering that God is the maker of us all, and we shall help to bear each other's burdens, weep with those that weep, mourn with those that mourn, and rejoice with those that do rejoice; and when Christ comes we shall all be gathered into his kingdom—those who have tried to be like him in this life; then he will claim them as his own ransomed ones; then we shall all be rich together; eternal life will be ours. Thus let us strive to gain this eternal life, to reign with Christ forever in his kingdom.

Portland, Me. M. E. Chute.

"BEHOLD, I STAND AT THE DOOR AND KNOCK."

Knocking, knocking, ever knocking?
Who is there?
'Tis a pilgrim, strange and kingly,
Never such was seen before;
Ah, sweet soul, for such a wonder
Unto the door.

Knocking, knocking, ever knocking?
What, still there?
O, sweet soul, but once behold Him,
With the glory-crowned hair;
And those eyes, so strange and tender,
Waiting there;
Open! open! once behold Him,
Him so fair.

Knocking, knocking! what? still knocking?
He still there?
What's the hour? The night is waning—
In my heart a drear complaining,
And a chilly, sad unrest!
Ah! this knocking! it disturbs me!
Scarce my sleep with dreams unblest!
Give me rest,
Rest—ah, rest!

Rest, dear soul, he longs to give thee;
Thou hast only dreamed of pleasure,
Dreamed of gifts and golden treasure,
Dreamed of jewels in thy keeping,
Waked to weariness of weeping—
Open to thy soul one lover,
And thy night of dreams is over—
The true gifts he brings have seeming
More than all thy faded dreaming.

Did she open? Doth she? Will she?
So, as wondering, we behold,
Grows the picture to a sign,
Pressed upon your soul and mine;
For in every breast that liveth
Is that strange, mysterious door—
The forsaken and betangled,
Ivy-gnarled and weed-bejangled,
Dusty, rusty, and forgotten—
There the pierced hand still knocketh,
And with ever patient watching,
With the sad eyes true and tender,
With the glory-crowned hair—
Still a God is waiting there.

— There is none so bad to do the twentieth part of the evil he might, nor any so good as to do the tenth part of that which he might do.

To Prevent Horses being Teased by Flies.—Take two or three handfuls of walnut leaves, on which pour two or three quarts of cold water; let it infuse one night; pour the whole next morning into a kettle, and boil for a quarter of an hour; when cold it is fit for use. Moisten a sponge with it, and before the horse goes out of the stable, let those parts which are most irritable be smeared over with the liquor.

To get Horses out of a Fire.—A gentleman whose horses had been in great peril from fire, having in vain tried to save them, hit upon the experiment of having them harnessed, as though they were going to their usual work, when, to his astonishment, they were led from the stable without difficulty. The plan of covering their eyes with a blanket does not always succeed.

THE PLAN OF GOD.

NUMBER ONE.

Our purpose in writing these articles is, to set before the readers "the purpose of God in creating the world"; and show from the sacred word that his purpose is finally to be consummated notwithstanding Satan has tried hard to thwart it. In presenting my own views, I expect to differ materially with many of my brethren; but so long as we differ honestly, and keep "the unity of the Spirit," we may expect to "come into the unity of the faith" by and by.

In the first place, let us notice the original purpose of God in creating the world. In Isa. 45: 18, we read: "For thus saith the Lord that created the heavens; God himself that formed the earth and made it; he hath established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord, and there is none else." In Gen. 1: 26, we read, "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the air, and over the cattle, and over all the earth."

It is evident, from the foregoing, that the purpose of God was originally that the earth should be inhabited, and that man should inhabit it. And that his purpose will not fail of a consummation, is evident from the expression—"He made it not in vain." It is also evident that if God made the earth to be inhabited, and made man to inhabit it, there must exist an adaptation between man the inhabiter and the earth to be inhabited. In other words, man must be adapted to the earth in order to inhabit it, "dress it and keep it" (Gen. 2: 15); for everything must be adapted to the sphere in which it moves. And as the earth is a material substance, and man was created to dress and keep it, and enjoy its luxuries, of course man must be created a material being; for an immaterial ghost could neither dress the garden, nor eat its fruits. Neither was it necessary for God to create a material body, and put in it an immaterial soul, for the body was all that was required to perform the work assigned the man.

It is admitted by all that if man never had sinned, he never would have been driven from the garden of Eden, but would have lived eternally on the earth in its pristine state. Therefore if it was not in the purpose of God that man should live eternally on the earth in its paradisiacal state, then it was in his purpose that man should fall; and if it was in his purpose that man should fall, was it sin for him to carry out the purpose of God? I leave that for those who believe it was in the plan of God that man should fall, to answer.

That it was not in his purpose that man should fall, we will now proceed to show:

1. It is evident from the fact that he put man in the garden to "dress it and keep it"; and if it was his purpose for man to "keep" it, then it was not in his purpose for him to lose it.

2. In the midst of the garden he placed the tree of life; and the fruit of this tree was either to change the nature of man, and render him immortal, or it was to protract his life, so long as he lived in obedience to the divine law. If it was to change his nature, then it was his purpose that his nature should be changed by it, else he would not have placed it there. It seems very obvious, however, that the design of the tree of life was not to change the nature of man, from the fact that he had access to it before he transgressed the law. And if partaking of its fruits would render him an undying being, how inconsistent in the Almighty to place it accessible to him, thus providing him with a remedy that would, if partaken of, place him out of reach of the law under which he had placed him.

Then it must have been to protract his life as long as he lived in obedience to the law. And then it could not certainly have been the purpose of God that man should fall; for had it been he would not have provided a remedy to protract his life. But the idea is undoubtedly simply this: Man was made a mortal being,—made out of the elements of nature; and therefore, whether he violates the divine law or not, he would die from natural causes; and as he is placed under a law, the penalty of which is death, it devolves upon the Creator to provide a remedy to protract his life as long as he lives in obedience to the law. And the very day he violates the law he is driven from the remedy, and dies from natural causes. So "sin entered into the world, and death by sin"; not that we all die simply because Adam sinned; but, because he sinned, we are debarred from the remedy that would protract our life, and we die because we cannot help it. We have no remedy to ward off death resulting from natural causes.

But, says one, It must have been in the purpose of God that man should fall; for if he had not, he would not have needed a Savior, and we "were chosen in Christ Jesus before the foundation of the world." But such a conclusion, from such declarations as the above, is not a legitimate one. In Col. 1: 16, we read: "For by him [Christ] were all things created that are in heaven [or, the heavens—Macknight], and that are in the earth, . . . all things were created by him, and for him." By this we learn that God created the heavens and the earth by his Son, and for him; and it is just as easy to understand that had man never sinned, the time would have come when the Son would have been manifested, and, without suffering for man's sins, would have reigned eternally over the world that the Father created for him.

There is some good evidence for believing that the six days of creation are typical of six thousand years. And if this be so, then, undoubtedly the six thousand years was the time allotted by the Creator for man to multiply and replenish the earth; and had he not sinned, at the expiration of this period the Son would have been manifested in glory, and man's nature changed to immortality. And as God "declared the end from the beginning" (Isa. 46: 10), we need not fear but that in his own appointed time this great work will be accomplished, and his purpose be consummated, the same as though man had not transgressed the divine law.

A NOVEL SABBATH SCHOOL LESSON.

The excessive hot weather during the summer has made Sabbath school teachers, as well as other people, seek for cooler places than can be found within streets walled with brick. This desertion has borne heavily upon our Sabbath schools, and invention has been put upon the rack to discover some means to make their absence less hurtful and observable. Therefore, when D. L. Moody said, "I've got it," and shook some slips of note-paper above his head, and when asked "What?" wouldn't tell, but said, "Next Sabbath come and see," it was natural enough that a larger number than usual found their way into the Illinois Street Chapel.

The lesson was about the "King's Supper," described in Luke 14:15-24. Teachers had been instructed that there would be no teaching by them. Some twenty-three questions had been prepared by Mr. Moody, and distributed among as many teachers, with instructions—which were unknown to each other—to ask them of him after the reading of the Scriptures.

Mr. Moody announced to the children that he had an invitation for them to come to a great supper made by a certain king, and he wanted to read it to them. Then from manuscript, he read the account above referred to. Instant upon its close a teacher arose and asked:

Whose table will the supper be at?

Mr. Moody replied:

The King's son, sir, said, "That ye may eat and drink at my father's table in my kingdom." Luke 22: 30.

Then another teacher inquired: "Whom does he invite?"

The Spirit and the Bride say come, and let him that heareth say come, and let him that is athirst come, and whosoever will let him come and take of the water of life freely. Rev. 22: 17.

Question after question was asked, and as each one was propounded, the interest deepened and intensified. It became as though the parable had become real, and the multitude were anxious to know all about it. Its success was so great in awakening a new interest that we give, following, the remaining questions and their answers, believing that our Sabbath-school friends will thank us for so doing.

When and where is it to be?

I will not drink henceforth of this fruit of the vine until that day when I drink it anew with you in my Father's kingdom. Matt. 26: 29.

Will the weather be pleasant?

Neither shall the sun light on them nor any heat. Rev. 7: 23.

The city has no need of the sun, neither of the moon to shine in it, for the glory of God did lighten it and the Lamb is the light thereof. Rev. 21: 23.

Who is going to be there?

A great multitude which no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne and the Lamb. Rev. 7: 9.

Will it be free?

Ho, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy wine and milk without money and without price. Isaiah 55: 1.

Did it cost the king anything?

Ye were not redeemed with corruptible things as silver and gold. But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb, without blemish and without spot. 1 Peter 1: 18, 19.

What shall I wear?

After this I beheld and lo! a great multitude stood before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and palms in their hands. Rev. 7: 9.

Where shall I get the robe?

And white robes were given unto every one of them. Rev. 6: 11.

What time will it break up?

And they shall reign forever and ever. Rev. 21: 4.

Will I get tired?

There the wicked cease from troubling, and there the weary are at rest. Job 3: 17.

Will the society be pleasant?

And there shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth, neither whatsoever worketh abomination, or maketh a lie, but they which are written in the Lamb's book of life. Rev. 21: 27.

Will it be healthy there?

And the inhabitants shall not say I am sick. Isaiah 22: 24.

Neither shall there be any more pain. Rev. 21: 5.

Will there be any one there to oppress me?

They hear not the voice of the oppressor. The servant is free from his master. Job 3: 18, 19.

Am I expected to take any company with me?

Go out into the highway and hedges and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled. Luke 14: 23.

Will there be any music there?

And they sing the song of Moses, the servant of God, and the song of the Lamb, saying: "Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty: just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints. Rev. 15: 3.

Will I be a stranger there?

Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellow-citizens with the saints and of the household of God. Eph. 2: 19.

Is the way plain?

And a highway shall be there and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it, but it shall be for those. The wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein. Isaiah 35: 8.

How long will it take me to get there?

There is but one step between me and death. 1 Sam. 20: 3.

I know not the day of my death. Gen. 27: 2.

How do I know whether the King will receive me or not?

Him that cometh to me I will in no wise cast out. John 6: 37.

Is it necessary for me to decide at once whether I will accept this invitation or not?

Behold now is the accepted time; behold now is the day of salvation. 2. Cor. 6: 2.

To-day if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. Hebrews 3: 15.

Can I send a substitute?

Every one of us shall give an account of himself to God. Romans 14: 12.

Can I go late?

And they that were ready went in with Him to the marriage, and the door was shut; and afterward also came other virgins, saying, Lord, Lord, open to us; but he answered and said, Verily I say unto you, I know you not. Watch, therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh. Matt. 25: 10-13.

Can I be excused?

As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live; turn ye, turn from your evil way, for why will ye die, O house of Israel? Ezekiel 33: 11.

PERVERTED DOCTRINE OF REWARDS.

BY WM. SHELDON.

Almost every fundamental doctrine of inspiration is perverted by immortal-soul theology. This is true of the doctrine of the reward of saints. Where and when, and to what part of man, will reward be given?

If the soul exists as a distinct personality, after the death of the body, it is quite natural to conclude it must have a dwelling-place in some locality, and that it must there be either happy or unhappy; so theologians have generally concluded to assign heaven to good souls, and hell to bad ones, as soon as death liberates them from the body, regardless of the affirmation that Christ "shall judge the quick and the dead at his appearing" (2 Tim. 4: 1), and in opposition to the Revelator's testimony concerning the scene due under the sounding of the seventh trumpet: "Thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead, that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give REWARD unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and to them that fear thy name, small and great." Rev. 11: 18. That this is the true epoch for the giving of rewards is further evident from the testimony of Christ on different occasions, in the following language: "The Son of man shall come in the glory of his Father with his angels; and THEN he shall reward EVERY man according to his works." Matt. 16: 27. Here the time of "reward" is specified as plainly as language can be framed together; and we are not only informed here that reward is due when Christ shall "come," but that "every man" will remain unrewarded till that time. About sixty years later, many years subsequent to Christ's ascension, Jesus reiterates this same sentiment, in almost the same phraseology: "Behold, I come quickly; and my reward is with me, to give every man according as his works shall be. Rev. 22: 12. Reward is here located at Christ's coming, not for a few merely, but for "every man;" and "every man" includes the entire race of Adam.

Were it not for immortal-soulism, the doctrine of reward at death, so contrary to Bible testimony, could never have existed. But when the theory obtains that death liberates a personal ghost from the body, instead of totally killing the man, it becomes a necessity to coin up the doctrine of a reward for ghosts prior to the judgment-day. Some, however, who feel the force of Scripture testimony on this subject, wish to split the difference between truth and error on this point, and plead for a part of the reward at death, admitting that a part is due at the resurrection also. Now if inspired testimony is partly true about the time of the reward, may it not be wholly true? Not a word can be found in the entire book of God about two different periods of reward for one person. Besides it would look unlike God to give a saint a part of his crown at one time, and another part at another; a part of the palm of victory at one time, and another part at another time. It is no part of his work to split crowns, or deal out rewards in different installments. No reward is due till the day of settlement arrives, and then it will all come. If any part of the reward can be obtained before the judgment-day, why not all of it? and then what need of a judgment at all? Has not God located reward subsequent to the judgment, without excepting any part of it? Then why should men decide that God's plan is partly wrong, while admitting that it is partly right? Rather "let God be true," not in part only, but fully true, even if immortal-soulism suffers in consequence, as it assuredly will; for the doctrine of reward before the judgment, in part or in full, either for saint or sinner, could never have come into existence independent of immortal-soulism—the great tree of theology that puts forth so many branches of error, loaded with evil fruit. Let the tree be hewn down, and these various branches of error will fall with it.

The doctrine of a sky-kingdom as the future home of the saints is another branch of error belonging to the same tree, originating from the impression that there is an embryo-angel within the saint, and that, when let out of its mortal prison-house, it will soar to the home of the angels on high. But the reader of the Bible is aware that God primarily created our world, and pronounced it not only "good" but "very good," and that he placed a good man in it, on trial for endless life, with the "tree of life" before him, that at some time in his history, if faithful, he might "eat and live forever." Live where? In the very world God created on purpose for him to live in. If sin had never entered, this would have been the home of good men "forever;" and when sin is removed, and its results are overwhelmed in oblivion, this same realm will become the home of the good of every age, beyond the judgment-scene; and thus the original purpose of Jehovah in creating this globe will be carried out—earth will be peopled with a race of good men that will "live forever," in a Paradise that will bloom under the supervision of Christ, the second Adam, after sin comes to an end, and the results of the fall are repaired. Christ refers to the introduction of this era of sinless and deathless perfection on earth, when glorified humanity will inherit a celestial kingdom, in these words: "When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory; and before him shall be gathered all nations; and he shall separate them one from another, as a shepherd divideth his sheep from the goats: and he shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left. Then shall the King say unto them on his right hand, Come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world."Matt. 25: 21–34. From this testimony we learn:

1. That the entrance of the saints into the kingdom is not at death, but when the "Son of man shall come in his glory."

2. That the kingdom which they are to inherit is not heaven above, but the very "kingdom prepared from the foundation of the world," after the great separation takes place. Earth is to be renewed, sin to end, death cease, and God's glory to deluge the globe, for God has said, "As truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord." But before the dawn of that age of glory, the statement of the apostle Peter must be verified: "But the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men. . . . . The day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat. . . . Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." 2 Pet. 3: 7, 10, 13. Here we have "judgment," the "fire," and the "perdition of "ungodly men," to precede the new earth state, "wherein dwelleth righteousness." The "times of restitution" will unfold to our joyful vision the result of the announcement heard by the Revelator while describing the new earth state: "He that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new" (Rev. 21: 5), not all new things, but "all things new," agreeing with the Psalmist: "Of old hast thou laid the foundation of the earth: and the heavens are the work of thy hands. They shall perish, but thou shalt endure: yea, all of them shall wax old like a garment; as a vesture shalt thou change them, and they shall be changed." Ps. 102: 25, 26. Thus the new earth is old earth "changed," or made new; and then "the tabernacle of God shall be with men. . . . and there shall be no more death: for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 3, 4. In this thrilling description of future bliss, we have the new Jerusalem coupled with the new earth, as the glorious capital of the world to come. No other home is due the saint of God, and this is not to be enjoyed till after the resurrection and judgment.

But I may be informed that Peter speaks of an inheritance "reserved in heaven." So he does; but that which is "reserved in heaven" cannot be heaven itself, but something distinct therefrom; something deposited there; and instead of our emigrating to heaven to receive it, it is "ready to be revealed in the last time." "Jerusalem which is above," is hereafter to come "down from God out of heaven;" then the saints, as real beings, will enter in through the gates into the city. Christ is coming, angels are coming, and the city is coming, and earth is to be cleansed from sin, and be filled with glory, and Christ is to reign, and the "tabernacle of God is to be with men," and saints to be "equal to the angels," thus combining a world of glory with a world of realities. How much more delightful to contemplate, than a world of shadows. Let me be a real being, in a real kingdom, under the supervision of the King of glory, rather than exist as a personal shadow, in a remote realm, peopled with the imaginary shades of the dead. Let me have real society, and be a real being forever.

While immortal-soulism exists, this long train of God-dishonoring errors will prevail. Without immortal-soulism, God could never have been dishonored with Catholicism, Mohammedanism, Mormonism, Spiritualism, Necromancy, Transmigration, Hero-worship, Ghostly servitude, Universalism, Endless torment, Spiritual resurrection, Spiritual advent, Rewards at death, and a sky-kingdom for the saints.

To make war on these mighty errors, or on a part of them, while upholding the only platform on which they could possibly stand, is to act unwisely. All these great streams of bitter theology flow from one fountain. Shall we insist that the fountain is sweet, and still try to dry up the streams that flow from it? Can both sweet and bitter streams flow from the same fountain? And after seeing so many bitter streams flow out of this fountain, shall we persist in releasing the fountain from the charge of being a bitter fountain, on the mere supposition that it may send out some good streams? Not one good stream has ever been traced to this fountain—no, not one; nor can one of these bitter streams be traced to any other fountain. The only way to get rid of these miserable streams is to dry up the fountain from which they spring. The stroke that will kill immortal-soulism, will also kill every one of these great errors, which have so long dishonored God, and cursed his cause. And so long as this system thrives, these errors will have a support.

If you would get rid of a bad effect, ferret out the cause, and remove it. We have found the cause, the true cause, and the only cause of these great errors. They all originate in immortal-soulism, and could not exist a moment without it. Shall we remove the cause, or shall we help keep alive these God-dishonoring errors by giving our sanction to the cause that produces these results? Shall we join hand in hand with the devil in proclaiming, "Ye shall not surely die"? If men really die, the resurrection is needful; but if death simply helps an immortal personality to escape from the mortal body, to live on, and live on endlessly, the doctrine of the resurrection is belittled; and as these doctrines cannot be reconciled, the resurrection is being rapidly discarded, by substituting in its stead a spiritual resurrection, which is only a blind method of denying the doctrine; but the blow that is dealt against a future literal resurrection of the saints, will fall with equal force against the doctrine of Christ's resurrection in the past; and when that is blotted out, our hope is obliterated forever; "For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised: and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain." 1 Cor. 15: 16, 17.

The whole Christian system falls to the ground the moment we blot out Christ's resurrection, and that resurrection is blotted out by the same stroke that blots out our future literal resurrection, for his resurrection and ours are the same in kind, his being the first fruits: "But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. 15: 20, 21. As Christ is the resurrected first-fruits, and as he affirmed after his resurrection, "I am he that liveth, and was dead," Rev. 1: 18, thus proving his resurrection was a literality, it follows that our resurrection must be like his; agreeing with Paul, "We look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ: who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body." Phil. 3: 20, 21.

We have clearly discovered, in this brief examination of the subject, that there is a correct and an incorrect theory of immortality. The correct theory is based upon Christ and the resurrection, attainable on conditions of obedience and faithfulness; while the incorrect theory is founded on immaterialism, independent of Christ, and regardless of character. Is not "the gift of God eternal life through our Lord Jesus Christ?" Rom. 6: 23. And has not every man eternal life who is immortal! In other words, can that which is immortal ever die? And can it be anything less than eternal life to live eternally? And if we already possess a nature that will require us to live eternally, whether we receive Christ or not, how can eternal life be the "gift of God" through Christ? And is not the commencement of eternal life at the resurrection, as the angel affirmed? "Many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life." Dan. 12: 2. But I may be met with the claim that we are said to have eternal life in the present tense. So we are, in the same sense that the check-holder may be said to have a million of dollars, while every cent of it is in the bank for a stipulated time, to be given to him at the proper time, if the conditions are not forfeited. "And this is the record, that God hath given to us eternal life, and this life is in his Son." 1 John 5: 11. We have it now prospectively, but it is deposited "in his Son;" for Christ "is our life," "the resurrection and the life," in the sense of being the Life-giver. "And this is the promise that he hath promised us, even eternal life." John 2: 25. And Christ adds: "In the world to come eternal life." Mark 10: 30. Let immortality be given to the saint at the resurrection and let eternal life then commence as the result, and then we can recognize it as the gift of God, through Christ, to the faithful only.

For the World's Crisis.

THE OVERCOMER.

"To him that overcometh will I grant to sit with me in my throne, even as I also overcame and am set down with my Father in his throne."—Rev. 3: 21.

This is a promise to those who are victorious in the christian life. If they persevere and are not weary in well-doing, they shall be with him in paradise, or Eden restored. O glorious thought! Christianity requires great strivings, and an overcoming of all things. If christians are faithful, and gain the victory by conquering besetting sins; if they continue faithful, and walk worthy of Christ unto the end, they shall have as a reward a seat in his throne. If their christian principles are firm and unshaken, and they convert many to righteousness, they will shine as the stars.

The christian life has always been regarded in all ages as a warfare. Many fall in their conflicts with temptation and evil; but those that achieve the victory over the world, the flesh, the devil, and false teachers, will be sure to triumph at the end of life's journey. Jesus said in the text, that he overcame the world and the tempter, and he now promises to all that overcome, as he has done, that they shall have a seat in his throne with him.

What encouragement is here held out to christians to be faithful, and labor in the vineyard, by doing what they can, letting their light shine, living pure lives, being known and read of all men. Let them persevere in spreading the name and the fame of Jesus; let them try and do what they can to elevate the people, and bring them to the Lord. Let them go out into the highways and the by-ways and labor diligently, as they have opportunity, in the service of the Lord. The wages are good. The christian has the promise of the life that now is, and in the world to come life everlasting. Then let us persevere onward, nor faint by the way, remembering that, if faithful, eternal life is ours.

For the World's Crisis.

"THE CHURCH NOT BUILT ON PETER."*

The Bible Class, Sunday, P. M., under Mr. Pearson, was well attended, and with good interest to the close.

The lesson was Matt. 16: 16–18,—"Thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church."

Mr. P. quoted St. Peter, St. Paul, and the prophets, to show that there is but one foundation on which the church could have been built. This sole foundation is Christ and his truth. 1 Pet. 2: 6–8; Eph. 2: 20; 1 Cor. 3: 11; Isa. 28: 16.

He quoted some leading Christian Fathers who did not sustain the pretensions of Rome. St. Ambrose, St. Jerome, etc., made "the rock" (petra, feminine—agreeing with truth), the confession of Peter, and not Peter in person. As it is written: "Ye . . . are built on the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth into an holy temple in the Lord." Let us note a few points, that bear this subject quite beyond the sphere of verbal criticism and learned opinion, into that of well known or easily ascertained facts.

I. The Church of God, the church of the New Testament, did stand on this one foundation—truth. It breathed "the unity of the Spirit." It spake "the same things." The superstructure of this church arose with the growth and spread of this dispensational truth, announced by Peter. The action of this apostolic church was after Christ (not Belial). Its benign and cheerful countenance was to man like an age of sunshine; and its voice of welcome to all did win men to come into the household of God, and to build on this "sure foundation"—the truth that Peter first taught in this form. Then believers were such from the heart, fearing God and eschewing evil. Then titles of earthly honor, plans for personal preferment, and world-wide agencies to aggrandize ambitious leaders, did not darken the light of gospel day, nor drive men away from God, as we now see in Rome.

II. The Church of Christ so endowed, and so endorsed by the Holy Ghost, was honored to hold a council, set forth the gospel of salvation, and fill out the canon of inspired truth. Now to add to or take from this, is to yield to another spirit, and depart from the faith or the foundation of apostles, prophets, and Jesus Christ himself. Rev. 22: 18–19; Heb. 10: 38.

This divinely honored Church, embracing Peter, foretold the great "falling away" (the apostasy, in Greek). 2 Thess. 2: 3–8; 1 Tim. 4: 1–4; 2 Pet. 2, 3; 1 John 4: 1; Matt. 24: 4–14.

III. This apostasy, in all its primal features, belongs solely to the Roman Church. Its time, its place, and its relations to all national history, through the greater part of the gospel age, demonstrate the precision with which its features are drawn by the primal apostolic church. In contrast, all Protestant churches are so out of time and out of geographical position, as to render it impossible that any one or all of them together should be a fulfillment of the foretold apostasy.

The Roman church is (among the churches of the west) pre-eminent for her antiquity; her poetic seven-hilled city; her sway over the Roman imperial authority; her queenly attitude towards the ten kingdoms; her use of "mystery" and the golden cup in her service; her meretricious array of purple and scarlet color; and her presumptuous attempts to "change times and laws" for both church and world. In all these and other analogous particulars, she sustains a solitary and sad pre-eminence.

Note her characteristics, as sketched by the pencil of prophecy. Rev. 17. The woman, the church in this centre of the apostasy, rides "the beast." The Roman church alone has ruled the Roman world, as a rider guides and governs his beast.

"The seven heads are seven mountains, where the woman sitteth." Thus, that church has her seat and centre in Rome, with its seven hills.

The symbol of seven heads and ten horns is in no way suited to any church and state association as it is to the Roman. The Roman church takes pride and claims precedence, because she is, in this relation, "the mother church."

"The woman was drunken with the blood of saints"; and the Romish church has held her sovereign sway commensurate with all these ecclesiastical persecutions.

"The ten horns shall hate the whore and make her naked," before burning her with fire. Surely it is well-known history to say that the Roman church has been hated, and has been progressively made naked. France, under Napoleon I., began this openly at the Revolution. Since then, Italy, Austria, and poor priest-ridden Spain, have aided in this work.

The Roman church is thus known to be the centre of this apostasy, as foretold. It is ascertained, as infallibly as we can find any power, by its geography, its chronology, and its associated history. She stands out without a rival as to her most distinctive features. She has none that should even assume to share her marked dishonor; none to share her already designated destiny in the coming judgment of God. Rev. 17: 19.

There is a still more profound and full dispensational test to show the falsehood of her claims, drawn from the type and its contrasted antitype, in the epistle to the Hebrews. The antitype of the old Jerusalem, its temple and high priesthood, cannot belong to Rome, as noted above, but to the future heavenly things themselves, the city of the living God, and amid the bright and beautiful visions of the new heavens and new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness. Heb. 7: 11.

Thus the true apostolic church has spoken unmistakably as to the foundation and upbuilding of the Church, as well as to its counterfeit in the Apostasy. This harlot-like church, whose titled dignitaries are clothed in purple and scarlet color, and decked with gold, and precious stones and pearls, with their idolatrous abominations, is no more like the Church of Christ, than the worship of the golden calf in Israel was like that of the living God, instituted by Moses.

Let us beware, as St. Peter warns us. 2 Pet. 3: 17. Let those who have been misled obey the voice of the holy Apostolic Church, and "come out of her." Abandon the apostasy, saith the Spirit, and cleave only to Christ. Build on Him, the only foundation of God's living temple.

The abominations of this apostate church must apply to one that employs "images," relics and saints, in her worship, rather than to Protestants, who eschew them. The idol image of the nations, named in 2 Kings 23: 13, was their abomination; so of Pagan Rome. Dan. 9: 27; Matt. 24: 15. Hence, the abominations of the church of Rome arise from her abounding images and idolatrous services; all of which Protestants discard.

We conclude that if any church or power can be known by its leading features, its geography, its history and chronology; then we find the apostasy in Rome, only there, as as to its central organization. J. B. COOK.

VOICES OF THE DEAD AND LIVING.

BY S. S. BREWER.

THE COMING OF THE LORD WILL BE SUDDEN.

I have ever believed that the coming of our Lord will be sudden. Said he, while yet with his disciples, "For as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west; so shall also the coming of the Son of man be." And the translation of the saints will be equally so, for thus it is written, "Behold I show you a mystery; we shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump; for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." 1 Cor. 15: 51, 52.

Says William Cunningham, "If we who have marked every sign in the spiritual horizon for a long series of years, were now asked, 'Is there any sign of his coming yet unaccomplished?' If we were further asked, 'Shall he come this year?' our answer would be, 'We know not, but this we know and believe, that Christ is near at hand, even at the door.' . . . Amidst this commixture of dread and alarm, and these groanings of distressed nations, and fond whisperings of 'peace, peace,' suddenly as the blaze of forked lightning, unexpectedly as the fall of the trap upon the ensnared animal, and the dark and concealed approach of the midnight thief, a voice like ten thousand thunders shall burst on the ears of the earth. It is the voice of the archangel. It is the trump of God. He cometh to judge the earth. His dead saints spring from the dust. His living saints in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, are changed and both together are rapt up far above the clouds to meet him."

Said Dr. Doddridge—"For with regard to his final appearance to judgment, our Lord says—'Surely I come quickly;' and will you not also sing your part in the gospel anthem—Amen, even so come, Lord Jesus? 'Let this illustrious day come, even with all its horrors. We shall go from the ruins of a dissolving world, to the new heavens and new earth, wherein righteousness forever dwells."

"Yet when the sounds shall tear the skies,
And lightnings burn the globe below,
Saints, you may lift your joyful eyes,
There's a new heaven and earth for you.
Now let our cheerful eyes survey
The blazing earth and melting hills,
And smile to see the lightnings play,
And flash along before thy wheels."
—Dr. Watts.

ANXIOUSLY DESIRING THE LORD'S RETURN.

"O come, thou kingdom of heaven for which we daily pray. Come, ye predicted ages of righteousness and love for which the faithful have so long yearned."—Dr. Channing.

"Tell her [the church] that the day is near the dawning, the sky is clearing; our Beloved will be on us ere we are aware."—Rutherford.

"The thoughts of the coming of the Lord are most sweet and joyful to me, so that if I were but sure that I should live to see it, and that the trumpet should sound, and the dead should arise, and the Lord appear before the period of my age, it would be the most joyful tidings to me in the world. O that I might see his kingdom come!"—Baxter.

"This is the day I look for, and wait for and have laid up all my hopes in. If the Lord return not, I profess myself undone."—Alliene.

"Persuade yourself that the King is coming. Read his letter sent before him (Rev. 22: 20), Behold, I come quickly. Wait with the wearied night watch for the breaking of the eastern sky, and think that ye have not a morrow."—Rutherford.

"Come, Jesus! thus beats the pulse of the Church, thus breathes that gracious spirit which actuates and informs the mystical body of Christ, and we should never be satisfied till we find such a spirit breathing in us, and causing us to look for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ."—M. Henry.

"The church has waited long
Her absent Lord to see,
And still in loneliness she waits,
A friendless stranger she.
Age after age has gone,
Sun after sun has set,
And still in weeds of widowhood
She weeps a mourner yet.
The whole creation groans,
And waits to hear that voice
That shall restore her comeliness,
And make her wastes rejoice.
Come, Lord, and wipe away
The curse, the sin, the stain,
And make this blighted world of ours
Thine own fair world again.
Come, then, Lord Jesus, come!"
—Bonar.

"The Lord cometh! The heart of many a one thrills at this call. O were he already here!"—Krummacher.

"Tell the church to hold on till Christ comes."—J. K. Lord.

"Blessed consummation of this weary and sorrowful world! I give it welcome. I hail its approach. I wait its coming more than they that watch for the morning. Over the wrecks of a world I weep; over broken hearts of parents; over suffering infancy; over the unconscious clay of sweet innocents, over the untimely births that never saw the light, or have just looked upon it and shut their eyes for a season until the glorious light of a resurrection morn. O my Lord, come away. Hasten with all thy congregated ones. My soul desireth to see the King in his beauty and the beautiful ones whom he shall bring along with him."—E. Irving.

"Come forth out of thy royal chambers, O Prince of all the kings of the earth. Put on the visible robes of thy imperial majesty. Take up that unlimited sceptre which thy Almighty Father hath bequeathed thee. For now the voice of thy bride calls thee, and all creatures sigh to be renewed."—Milton.

"O day, dawn! O time, run fast! O bridegroom, haste, haste fast that we may meet! O heavens, cleave in two, that that bright face and head may set itself through the clouds! O that the corn were ripe, and this world prepared for the sickle."—Rutherford.

"The church in her militant state
Is weary and cannot forbear;
The saints in an agony wait
To see him again in the air.

The Spirit invites in the Bride
Her heavenly Lord to descend,
And place her enthroned at his side,
In glory that never shall end.

The news of his coming I hear,
And gladly I join in the cry,
O Jesus, in triumph appear,
Appear in the clouds of the sky.

Whom only I languish to love,
In fullness of majesty come,
And give me a mansion above,
My glorious heavenly home."—C. Wesley.

"The Scripture uniformly commands us to look forward with eager expectation to the coming of Christ, and defers the crown of glory that awaits till that period."—Calvin.

"There is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but unto all them that love his appearing."—Paul.

PREACH THE COMING OF CHRIST.

"Said the devoted and talented Wm. Cunningham, "We have entered into the last period of awful expectation during which the church is likened unto virgins.

"There is but one trumbet remaining; therefore let us lift our heads, because our redemption draweth nigh."—Bullinger.

Will the ministry give heed to the timely, solemn and affectionate charge of Dr. Hugh McNeil: "My reverend brethren, watch; preach the coming of Jesus. Solemnly and affectionately, in the name of God, I charge you, preach the coming of Jesus. 'Watch ye, therefore, [for ye know not when the master of the house cometh, at even or at midnight,] lest coming suddenly, he find the porter sleeping.'

Take care—'Watch, I say unto you, I say unto all, watch. And all my being responds, Lord, help me to watch for and preach the coming of Jesus."

In view of the solemnity of the awful hour in which we live, how very appropriate the language of Jerome: "Whether I eat or drink, or in whatever other action or employment I am engaged, that solemn voice always seems to sound in my ears, 'Arise, ye dead, and come to judgment, my heart quakes, and my whole frame trembles. If I am to indulge in any of the pleasures of this present life, I am resolved to do it in such a way that the solemn realities of the future judgment may never be banished from my recollection."

Said Dr. Cotton Mather, "The Ruler of this world returning to us, will send forerunners, who shall show his approach and the speediness of his coming. And before the very great and very greatly to be dreaded day of the Lord come, he will send Elias, or men endued with his spirit and power, who with loud voice shall show themselves sons of thunder concerning the Lord hastening to us."

"It behooveth any servant of God, who would be named a vigilant and not a drowsy servant, to perform this office of Elias. And were the power granted to any Elias, of uttering, through a mighty trumpet, a voice that might be heard throughout the regions of the whole globe, he would surely with this alarm summon us from our lethargy. "For when our Lord shall come, he will find the world almost void of true and lively faith [especially of faith in his coming]; and when he shall descend with his heavenly banners and angels, what else will he find almost, but the whole church as it were a dead carcass, miserably putrefied with the spirit and manners and endearments of this world."

Cotton Mather died in A. D. 1728. And could he have been permitted to live and write from actual observation he could not have drawn the picture represented in a more graphic and positively life-like manner. I will close this article with the voice of one more living expectant of soon seeing the glorious advent of the Redeemer.

"Great and solemn crisis! I cannot but again exclaim. My friends, if you like, reject all my historical explanations; but do not reject this, that Christ who died upon the cross, will come, and when you think not, and reign, wearing his many crowns, upon his glorious throne. Look for him, and the same Christ will come again, the husband to the widow, the bridegroom to the bride; he has promised that he will come to us, and 'we shall be forever with the Lord.'"

"And when I think of the time when he does come, I can scarcely realize that glorious Sabbath which will overspread the earth! That noble song which will be heard when the saints shall sing together, Holy, holy, is the Lord God of hosts! What a flood of beauty, magnificence, and glory, will roll over this now shattered orb, like the countless waves of an illuminated ocean: illuminated by Christ, the great central sun, around whom all systems revolve, and from whom all beauty comes. And, my dear friends, if there be the least probability in what I have said, is it not our duty to pause—to prepare and search if it be so? When men heard that there was to be a new star somewhere to be detected in the firmament, there were some thousands of telescopes every night directed to the skies, and countless star-gazers searching if, peradventure, they might discover it. My dear friends, a star comes brighter and more beautiful than any other, 'the bright and morning star,' 'too long concealed by clouds which are about to be chased away'; why should not the believer who has shared in the bitterness and the blessings of the cross, pray and pant for him, if, peradventure, he may share in the splendors of his crown? Is not the Lord welcome to us? Crushed and bleeding humanity, amid its thousand wrongs, cries, 'Come, Lord Jesus.' The earth, weary with groans and sobs of its children, cries, Come, Lord Jesus. The persecuted saints in Tahita and Madeira, in dens, and caves, and solitary places of the earth, cry, Come, Lord Jesus. And surely, many a heart that has been warmed by his, that has been refreshed by his peace, sanctified by his grace, shall raise the same cry, 'Come, Lord Jesus,' and the sublime response will descend from heaven, like a wave from the ocean of love overflowing men's hearts, 'Behold I come quickly.'"

"My dear friends, I say to many of you, Farewell; and I say that in a sense in which it is not often uttered, I say it not lightly but solemnly. May you fare well in the first resurrection. May you fare well in eternity; and at that day when sighs and farewells shall cease, may we meet before the throne of God and the Lamb, and so be forever with the Lord! Amen, and amen."—Dr. John Cumming.

"Awaken, O chosen and faithful,
And see that your lamps burn bright!
For thick fall the evening shadows,
Then follows the deep dark night.
The train hath set forth for the marriage,
The Bridegroom is on his way,
And silently cometh the midnight—
Awaken, and watch, and pray."

THE NIGHT OF PROPHECY.

Our world is covered with a mantle of gloom, a cloud of more than Egyptian darkness. Vivid lightnings flash in quick succession athwart the political horizon, and deep, sonorous thunders shake the foundations of the universe. Perplexity and doubt, fear and trembling, exhibit themselves in perpetual apprehension of impending evils. Crime stalks abroad at noonday with unblushing desperation; and self-adoration is the order of the times. Arrant infidelity permeates the entire fabric of human society; deceiving and being deceived is the desideratum of man's ambition, the magnet of perverted human nature. The future hangs like a black cloud, or a sword of righteous vengeance, over an impious generation, ready to burst upon them in all its latent fury.

Before us stand the gigantic proportions of those modern monsters so graphically photographed by inspiration. Some are departing from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils; and hell seems jubilant throughout her borders. Good men yield to demoniac influences, and plunge madly into the abyss of sin; while each infernal muttering reminds the watcher of an approaching earthquake, which shall ventilate the powers of darkness, and engulph in oblivion's vortex the last vestige of delusion.

When persons send letters to or from Canada, or Nova Scotia, they should recollect that the postage is six cents; and if not prepaid, the receiver of the letter will have to pay ten cents. JESUS IS COMING.

When we take a general view of the prophetic Scriptures and their fulfillment, we can see no room to doubt that we are very near the end of the present dispensation. The evidence is overwhelming. It must be true that the stone, mentioned in Dan. 2: 34, is about to smite the "great image," which represents the four great kingdoms of Babylon, Medo-Persia, Grecia and Rome. The first three filled their prophetic mold before Christ came, and the last had just begun its work, as delineated by Daniel and John. Since then, the Roman empire has been divided into its ten parts, as symbolized by the horns of Daniel's fourth beast; three of those ten have been plucked up by the roots to make room for the "little horn," which has since worn out the saints of the Most High, as predicted by Daniel and John; and we have now come to the time when the Roman woman is hated by her former supporters and lovers. This is one of the last features in her history. Her end must be at hand; but she is to continue till Christ comes to gather the saints "to the marriage supper of the Lamb."

Are we ready to welcome Jesus? Are our hearts pure? Is our conversation holy? Do we keep unspotted from the world? Are we sufficiently awake, and are our lamps trimmed and brightly burning, giving light to all around? If the reader is not ready, remember we have not a moment to lose. We must be very near the great day of the Lord. It is now all-important that those who wish to be ready to meet Jesus at his coming should be prayerfully watching, entirely consecrated to God.

RUTLAND.

The interest still continues at Rutland. We have some very heavenly meetings. The Spirit of the Lord is with us in our gatherings in great power, helping young converts to speak and pray with much courage. Many are under conviction, and we are hoping and praying that they may be converted, and lead a true christian life, and at last have a home in the coming kingdom. Eight more were baptized last Sabbath, May 15th, making sixty-three in all. Others intend to be baptized next Sabbath, May 22nd. Some of the prayer and conference meetings are among the best we ever enjoyed.

WHO IS ANTICHRIST?

"He is antichrist that denieth the Father and the Son." 1 John 2: 22. Does the Papacy deny Father and Son? If so, we fail to see the proof. So far as we can learn, the various Popes have always worshiped both Father and Son. They have been specially noted for their magnificent ceremonies in worshiping God and his Son. If they did not worship Jesus and his Father, why were they so bitterly persecuted for doing it at the time of the French revolution? Because they acknowledged God and his Son, and would not deny them, they were put to death.

In the late decree on the Catholic faith, issued by the Ecumenical Council, April 24th, 1870, we find the following:—

"For it is known to all that the heresies which the Fathers of Trent condemned, and which rejected the Divine authority of the Church to teach, and instead subjected all things belonging to religion to the judgment of each individual, were, in course of time, broken up into many sects; and that, as these differed and disputed with each other, it came to pass, at length, that all belief in Christ was overthrown in the minds of not a few. And so, the sacred Scriptures themselves, which they had at first held up as the only source and judge of christian doctrine, were no longer held as divine, but, on the contrary, began to be counted among myths and fables. Then arose and spread too widely through the world that doctrine of rationalism or naturalism which, attacking Christianity at every point as being a supernatural institution, labors with all its might to exclude Christ, who is our only Lord and Savior, from the minds of men and from the life and the morals of nations; and so to establish, instead, the reign of mere reason, as they call it, or of nature. And thus, having forsaken and cast away the Christian religion, having denied the true God and his Christ, the minds of many have at last fallen into the abyss of pantheism, materialism and atheism; so that now repudiating the reasoning nature of man and every rule of right and wrong, they are laboring to overthrow the very foundations of human society.

Moreover, as this impious doctrine is spreading everywhere, it has unfortunately come to pass that not a few even of the children of the Catholic church have wandered from the way of true piety."

"The holy Catholic Apostolic Roman Church believes and confesses that there is one true and living God, Creator and Lord of heaven and earth."

In this "Dogmatic Decree on Catholic Faith," we find it declared that Jesus is God's "only begotten Son;" that he is the author and finisher of our faith," and that, "If any one shall deny the one true God, Creator and Lord of all things visible and invisible; let him be anathema." Concerning the holy Scriptures, the Decree says: "If any one shall . . . deny that they are inspired by God; let him be anathema."

But Spiritualism teaches the opposite of all this, denying both Father and Son, and the inspiration of the holy Scriptures. Advanced Spiritualists utterly reject and deny the God of the Bible, and his only begotten Son Jesus. If we call that "the antichrist," that acknowledges and worships Father and Son, as Catholicism has ever done, what shall we call that which denies Father and Son, and will worship neither, as does Spiritualism? If "a man" should rise up among the Spiritualists, and claim to be "the Messiah," holding the highest political and religious power upon earth, and at the same time denying both Father and Son, would not such an one fill the prophetic picture relating to antichrist? Are there not very strong indications that we may soon see this accomplished? Let us watch and be sober. "The end of all things is at hand."

In an article on this subject, in the Christian Era, by G. S. Abbott, an able minister, he says:—

"Paul teaches, however, the doctrine of Anti-Christ as a 'distinctive, bodily personality.' I see not how to escape this interpretation of 2 Thessalonians. If the doctrine is here, there certainly should be no attempt to evade it. Is it here? Without entering upon a detailed exegesis of the passages referred in the second chapter, they bear strong prima facie evidence of a terrible personality to be revealed in the last time. They could have hardly been more explicit had it been Paul's object to exclude the idea of polity, or of impersonal opposition to Christ. 'The Man of Sin;' the Son of Perdition;' 'the One who opposeth himself to God;' 'the One who represents himself as God;' 'the wicked One who was to come with satanic power and lying wonders,' if words have a meaning, and philology has any rules of interpretation, designate an individual. Ellicott says, 'As the Lord's coming is declared to be (chap. 1: 7,) a revelation, so is the coming of Anti-Christ. Both are alike in this, they are to be revealed.'

Again he says, 'Even as Christ is now spiritually present in his church, to be personally revealed more gloriously hereafter, even so the power of Anti-Christ is now secretly at work, but will hereafter be made manifest in a definite and distinct bodily personality. Anti-Christ is no set of principles, or succession of opponents, but one personal being, as truly man as he whom he impiously opposes.' Alford says, 'All the early fathers regard the adversary here described as an individual person, the incarnation and concentration of sin. Their consensus in expecting a personal Anti-Christ is a weighty point. There was nothing in their personal circumstances or temperament which prevented them from interpreting all that is here said as a personification, or from allegorizing it as others have since. This fact gives that interpretation an historical weight, from which it is difficult to escape.' Olshausen says, 'The individuality of Anti-Christ can manifestly be excluded from this passage only by forcing its meaning.'"

FRANCE AND NAPOLEON.

The vote for Napoleon was taken Sabbath, May 8th, and resulted in an overwhelming majority in his favor. We have not yet seen the full result, but as far as known it is as follows:—

PARIS, May 9. The returns received to this hour foot up, yeas, 7,126,288; nays, 1,485,884. The vote of the army so far as known, stand yeas, 210,200, nays, 36,498. It is estimated that without counting the votes of the arrondissements, the army, the navy, and Algeria, the Government will have a majority of over five millions. The excitement has been intense all day, but there has been no disturbance whatever. The military precautions are continued.

A council of Ministers was held to-day, at which the Emperor presided. It is reported as the result of the council's deliberation that the ministers will tender their resignations tomorrow, and M. Ollivier will be charged by the Emperor with the formation of a new Cabinet. The Emperor has complimented the Prefect of Police for his success in maintaining public order. Victor Hugo has been ordered to appear before the Tribunal for an article in the Rappel, exciting hatred and contempt for the Government."

AN OLD PAPER.—In another column will be found an article, headed "Immortality." It is taken from Vol. I., No. 5, of the "Herald of Gospel Liberty," published at Portsmouth, N. H., Oct. 27th, 1808, by Elias Smith. The entire paper spreads eighteen inches long and eleven inches wide. It was published semi-monthly, at $1.00 a year.

"CHRISTIAN UNION" is the title of an excellent tract of fifty pages, published at the Crisis office, and contains many important points, that deserve a candid consideration by all the friends of Christianity.

PERSONAL.—Bro. E. McCullock is to preach to the church in Nevada, Ohio, for the present.

BAPTISM.—Editor Rutland Herald:—Your careless types of yesterday morning say "That two infants were baptized in the Congregational church by the pastor and four adults immersed in East Creek by Elder Grant."

Now in point of fact were not the infants sprinkled and the adults baptized? And if so is it quite fair to force the Bible term baptize into the support of the Papal rite of sprinkling, and attempt compensation by substituting the equivalent word immerse for baptize?

If any responsible person would like an opportunity to defend such a course, upon a level platform, he can be accommodated, and upon short notice, with an opponent. EAST.

The foregoing is from the Rutland Daily Herald, April 25th, communicated by a layman, who is competent to sustain his position.

SCIENCE AND THE BIBLE.

MR. EDITOR:—There exist several interrogatories in the book of Job, the deciphering of which seems associated with the revelations of science. The 38th chapter is markedly rich in this respect. At the 31st verse the All Infinite one is represented as thus interrogating Job, "Canst thou loose the bands of Orion?" Now Orion is the winter evening glory of the stellar firmament. Bright, beautiful and bold, it glows with a refulgence wholly unequalled by any portion of the universe of stars. Its position in space is such that it can be seen by the entire habitable world, except in the month of June, when it rises and sets with the sun, and consequently is absorbed in the solar refulgence. It must be interesting to the student of the high and ennobling science of astronomy to reflect upon the following remarkable coincidence, that about 5776 years ago the centre of this constellation was the leader of the starry host. It then occupied the first point of Aries, the vernal equinox, or line of no right ascension, and what is even more remarkable and profoundly interesting is that at this precise time, when this constellation was the leader of the heavens, man was introduced upon the earth, according to the Mosaic narrative.

Now I am conversant with the deductions of the geologists and their claim for a greater antiquity for man. I reject the development theory of Darwin, on the ground that there was a time when mind was associated with matter, that the act was not a progressive one, but done at once and in full; hence the races of molosk, monkey, baboon, or ape, have no connection with the form endowed with the attribute of mind. The development theory demands greater antiquity. God can vouchsafe his own divine ray on the soul of man at will, and each one can judge for himself of the two theories.

We have diverged a little from the question, "Canst thou loose the bands of Orion?" In the region of the bands or belts of Orion exists one of the largest and most wonderful nebulæ that the heavens offer for the contemplation of man. It was most apparent that Job was powerless to solve the interrogation, as were also the wise men of antiquity. The wondrous secret has been faithfully kept. This nebulæ has refused every inquiry of the astronomers of the old world. Even the huge telescope of Rosse failed utterly to penetrate its depths or light up a path through its dark recess. But to-day its bands are loosed. Science hath set its Pharos on its headlands of gloom, and its ray develops a bridge of light which spans its dark gulf. The powerful telescopes of Struve, Bond and Clark have penetrated the veil, and its mysteries are an open door.

Again, it is asked in the same chapter, "Hast thou entered into the treasures of the snow?" Job probably had not. There is no proof that any of the men of antiquity had invested this department of science. It seems never to have attracted attention until this our day, and many even now see nothing in a snow-storm but a snow-storm. But men of scientific research have entered into the treasures of the snow, and now number three hundred varieties of form in the snow-flake.

A third interrogation runs thus: "Canst thou bind the sweet influences of Pleiades?" We very naturally ask what sweet influence can possibly emanate from Pleiades more than from Hyades or any other of the constellations, seeing that Pleiades are in no sense conspicuous, having not even one star of the first magnitude in the cluster. Yet the language of this entire chapter is said to be that of God speaking unto Job, and in order to be valid it should and must bear the stamp of Godlike significance. There is not a shadow of evidence to show that Job had the most distant knowledge of any influence whatever emanating from the Pleiades, nor has a ray of light been thrown on this mysterious passage until our own day. On the 14th of December, 1846, Sir Wm. Hamilton announced to the Royal Society of London that he had just received from Professor Madler, of Dorpat, the extraordinary and exciting intelligence of the discovery of the central sun, and its location is the central star of the Pleiades, around which the entire drift of the heavens tends.

Again Job is interrogated, 35th verse: "Canst thou send lightnings, that they may go and say unto thee, Here we are?" This question is also of latter day interpretation. There is no evidence that Job had the least control over the winged messenger; or any of the great minds of preceding ages. Still there was not a question put to Job but what has been or is being answered by his posterity. For the solution of this case we cite to you the philosopher and his kite, our own sage, serene, glorious old Franklin. He heaves his lasso over the storm-steed and tames his fiery breath. Morse sees the subjugated spark and applies it to the wire, saying, "Go hence and say, Here we are."

Finally, Sir Isaac Newton, in his commentary on the Bible, makes this remark: "The knowledge of mankind would be so increased that they would be able to travel at the rate of 50 miles an hour." Voltaire, who did not believe in the inspiration of the Scriptures, got hold of this, and said "Now look at that mighty mind of Newton, who discovered gravity, and told us such marvels for us all to admire; when he became an old man and got into his dotage he began to study that book called the Bible, and it seems that in order to credit its fabulous nonsense we must believe that the time is coming when men will be able to travel fifty miles an hour. The old dotard!" exclaimed the philosophic infidel. But who, we ask, is the dotard now? Newton, in reaching the conclusions stated, reasoned from high thoughts of the Most High—Voltaire, from the aspect of things as they then stood revealed. Again we ask, Who is the dotard now? In the language of Whittier, we would say

"Let yonder whistle shrill and rumbling jar
Of the fire wheel and steedless car,"

make the reply. D.

TENT MEETINGS.

My dear brethren of like precious faith: The Tent is about to be pitched in comparatively new places, and by the help of the Lord, and your prayers and means, we hope and expect it will do much good.

I write this to earnestly solicit the help of all in this blessed work of sounding the last note of warning to this doomed world. The time has come for action. Now, dear brethren, when you see the tent is to come into your region, make up your minds that you will make some sacrifice to attend the meeting and help by your influence, your prayers, and songs. Let those that can sing in spirit be there; they will be of great service; also the preachers who can, come, for we want the people to understand we are in earnest in our efforts to save the perishing. Our first meeting is at Millville, Mass., commencing June 8th. L. BOUTELL.

IMMORTALITY.

Much is said in the world concerning Immortality; and many know not what they affirm. Immortality is spoken of in general as referring to some part of mortal man.

Multitudes speak of the immortal soul, not inquiring whether it is so or not; but from general opinion they suppose they speak the truth.

When speaking or writing upon immortality, I do not mean what is commonly understood by it, or what philosophers think; but what is meant by the word in the Scriptures of truth. Whatever is not found there, I consider false; all said on the subject there, I believe. What is not expressed, is not meant.

The word immortal is mentioned but once in the whole Bible. The word immortality is mentioned five times. This word signifies that which is durable; or not subject to any decay whatever; remaining eternally the same.

This being the meaning of the word, the reader will now be shown how it is used in the Scriptures.

1st. The word is applied to the eternal God; 1 Timothy 1: 17. "Now unto the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God, be honor, and glory, forever and ever, Amen." Chap. 6: 16. "Who only hath immortality, dwelling in the light which no man can approach unto, which no man hath seen, nor can see; to whom be honor and power everlasting. Amen."

Here is the fountain of immortality; the King eternal, immortal, and invisible. I once thought these verses referred to Christ; but he was once mortal, or he could not have died; since he rose from the dead, he is immortal, to live forever, for, "God raised him up from the dead, and gave him glory." In one place God is called incorruptible, which means the same as immortal: Rom. 1: 23. "And changed the glory of the incorruptible God, into an image made like to corruptible man."

2. The word immortality is mentioned where we are told how mortal man could become immortal, or this mortal put on immortality. 2 Tim. 1: 10. "But now is made manifest by the appearing of our Savior Jesus Christ, who hath abolished death; and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel.

In this verse we are told that Jesus Christ, the mediator between God and men, has brought life and immortality to light through the gospel: he said, God is a spirit." He told men of eternal life, and that those who obey him shall be raised immortal at the resurrection of the just.

Many wished they might live again; but Jesus Christ, God's elect, told us plainly of it, when he preached the gospel to the poor, and proclaimed liberty to the captives. It is to him we look for the words of eternal life.

3. The word immortality is mentioned where we are told who will be sharers in it. Rom. 2: 7. "To them, who by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory, and honor, and immortality; eternal life."

Many people think that all will be raised immortal at the resurrection. If they are, they will all be equal to the angels, having eternal life. Immortality is one of the glorious blessing of the gospel promised only to those who obey the gospel. There is not a single promise of immortality to those who die in their sins, in all the Scriptures of truth. It is mentioned in the following verses, that the contentious, and disobedient, shall perish in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ, according to the gospel Paul preached to the world.

4. The word is used to show what will be immortal. 1 Cor. 15: 53, 54. "For this corruptible must put on incorruption, and this mortal must put on immortality; so when this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality; then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written,—death is swallowed up in victory."

These are the only places where the words immortal and immortality are used. Here we may learn from Christ and the apostles what it means, where it is, who shall share in it, what will be immortal, and the glorious time when it shall take place—when the followers of the Lamb shall be raised incorruptible, bearing the image of the heavenly. Then the body, sown in corruption, shall be raised in incorruption—sown in dishonor, shall be raised in power—sown a natural, shall be raised a spiritual body. "For our conversation is in heaven; from whence also we look for the Savior, the Lord Jesus Christ; who shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself."

Surely here is enough to encourage every rational creature on earth to seek for glory, honor, immortality and eternal life. To such as seek for it the promise of eternal life is made, and shall be fulfilled. So be it.—Herald of Gospel Liberty.

CURIOUS FACTS.—The twenty-first verse of the seventh chapter of Ezra contains every letter of the English alphabet. It is perhaps not so well known that the eighth verse of the third chapter of Zephaniah, contains every letter, including finals, of the Hebrew, as well as every vowel sound, and also the different forms of the Sheva.—Jewish Chronicle.

SELF-CONSECRATION.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."—ROM. 12: 1.

Without a consecrated heart, and a life of unspotted purity, the grand aim of religion—to advance in us the divine life—is never accomplished, while its great works of charity, justice and mercy are never fulfilled.

God calls us to bring before his altar our great offering, the heart, and to render it with unflinching faith, holy and acceptable to his service. This the true believer tries to do, and will not rest in mere negative virtues, but will build up a character of such moral energy as can only be produced by unselfish christian motives. But while struggling for this victory of right, how many are deluded with the thought that they can serve God and still remain devoted to the pleasures of worldly indulgence. Ah! this is a cherished but fatal error, an evil pernicious both in influence and effect.

The voice of God and the voice of the world are in direct antagonism toward each other. The one, ever pleading with man's better nature for a life of divine trust and holiness, bears the glorious promise of eternal life; while the other calls from God to revel in heartless, sin-devising pleasure, and bears the sad inscription—Death.

Self-consecration will not allow of divided interests, but strikes at the root of all worldly selfishness. Its aim is to unreservedly offer to God the reasonable sacrifice of the heart and life; a dedicated body to all his holy purposes; and is never complete without this perfect surrender.

This is a great work, one that does not consist in a single act, but of a constant renewal; and as we cherish the glorious promise of a redeemed life, and a longing desire for its crown-giving Savior to appear, "I beseech you, brethren, by the mercies of God, that ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service." REPORT.

Bro. Grant:—While others are giving in their reports, it seemeth good to me also to have somewhat to say in this direction. In the last year, I have preached one hundred and fifty-eight discourses, and seen several converted. I love the truths of the Bible, and have suffered much for them, and am still ready to suffer. I acknowledge but one Master, and that one is Jesus. I believe his words, respect his precepts, and desire to imitate him in all things. I do no business in my own name, but go at his bidding, and where he leadeth me, by his grace I will follow. I have abandoned the thought of pleasing every one, and am eager only to please the Lord, who purchased me with his precious blood; and to be his servant is the height of my ambition.

I might relate several interesting incidents connected with my labors the past year; but I forbear, lest it should have the appearance of self-glory. A more faithful record is kept of my labors than I can possibly keep; and my just recompense is in reserve till that day of final results.

I believe a special work is placed in the hands of the people called "Adventists." I believe that work is a necessity, and will be done completely before the Lord comes. God never set a man nor a body of men to work for the sake of keeping them busy. When God sets a man to work, it is always for a purpose. I believe we are out in the highways and hedges, for the purpose of filling the King's table; and we shall eat the supper when the table is full, and not before. My faith in the Lord's soon coming is what it ever has been. I believe we are in close proximity to the event. My faith is in this matter regulated by general facts; and I can not come down to technicalities, and believe definite time, from the stand-point some occupy. I may be wrong, and others right. If so, I shall be the loser. I believe the words of Jesus, recorded in Mark 13: 37, are for me: "And what I say unto you, I say unto all, watch!"

I am tired of dry theories, and long for a development of practical, vital preaching among "Adventists." I have hardly preached a doctrinal (so called) sermon the past winter. I believe if we can get men to receive Christ, they will receive his doctrine, as we believe it. Win men to Christ, and win them to yourself by having Christ in you, and there is no danger of their fighting your faith, whatever it is. Crooked heads and straight hearts are better than straight heads and crooked hearts. I desire to be a little, humble christian, and I feel very weak and helpless; and only live by the hour, or minute, and that by grace. If I am, or ever have been, any thing to my brethren, or to the world, it is all of God. Encouraged by his promises, comforted by his Spirit, I hope to be guided by his counsel amid the fire and smoke of battle; and if wounded, I know he can heal; and if slain, I know he can restore to life. I am not eager for promotion, as he that is greatest in this army must be the servant of all. I desire to enjoy honor when it comes from God, and glory, when it will be unending. I can afford to suffer with the Captain of my salvation, as such only can reign with him. Pray for me, that I may endure to the end.

THE VERMONT TENT.

Inquiries are often being made, Are we going to have the tent? I would say to all such, I expect to buy the tent this month (May), if two-thirds enough to pay for it is received. Let every brother and sister who have pledged send the money at once; and all others, who wish to own a share in it, send now what you feel is duty, for the purpose of spreading the glorious truths of the blessed Bible. Don't be afraid of getting too much. We now need nearly $100 more than is pledged. Don't let it start out in debt. Have it free. Do. R. N. STETSON.

Correspondence.

From Bro. B. Spaulding.

Bro. Grant:—I am almost afraid to write for the Crisis, lest I should be thought intruding; but I know brethren wish to hear what has become of Bro. Spaulding. Some think I am dead, some that I am laid up with infirmity, and some that I am backslidden. Well, neither of these are correct; I am alive, am very infirm with age, yet able to keep about to work some, and to write a good deal. I don't think I have backslidden from God, or lost my interest in his blessed cause. My memory is very poor indeed; yet I don't forget God, nor Jesus Christ, nor the cause of God, which I have loved so well and enjoyed so much. Neither do I forget the brethren and sisters whom I love, and who have treated me with so much kindness and hospitality. No, when I forget these, let my right hand forget her cunning. I do not forget God's word, nor the coming of our blessed Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, nor that glorious kingdom which he is to set up.

I can see, by the prophet's pen, a panorama of the events which are yet unfulfilled, and I believe every jot and tittle will be fulfilled. Yes, and the signs of the times show plainly to my mind that we live on the very threshhold of the new dispensation. I look forward with joyful expectation to the day when Jesus will appear in his chariot of salvation; when the voice of the archangel's trump shall wake the sleeping dead; when the grave shall no longer be able to hold its victims prisoners, but they will come forth singing, "O death, where is thy sting! O grave, where is thy victory!" I had hoped to live to see that glorious day, but probably I shall not. Many of my brethren have hoped to live to see it, yet they sleep in the grave.

Well, we shall see it, if we are worthy a part in the first resurrection. They that are alive will not anticipate, or go before those who are asleep, for the dead shall be raised, and the living changed. My mind remains firm and unshaken on these doctrines, but I am disabled from going abroad as I used to. My feet are partly paralyzed. It is difficult for me to move about, yet I do work some. I see the names of brethren and sisters in the Crisis, and it does me good. I am glad they hold fast their profession, and hope they will endure to the end. I am glad there is less of the testing spirit, and more of a disposition to think and let others think; to speak out plainly, and let others speak out as plainly, what they believe, and not make a man an offender for a word, or a different idea. We all have our opinions, and we are all fallible, may err, have erred in some instances, and may again.

Let us keep our eyes open to the signs of the times, and our minds open to conviction, willing to hear, and willing to learn more of the truth. Let us not come to the conclusion that we have got the whole truth, but that we are to be continually growing in knowledge. Let us be living christians, known and read of all men. Let us show our faith by our works, love the brethren, fear God, comfort the feeble, support the weak, and "be patient toward all men"; and may the God of peace be with you. Your aged Bro.,

B. SPAULDING.

Chelmsford, Mass., May 1st, 1870.

From Bro. J. A. Cleaveland.

My dear brethren in Vt.:—Shall we have a tent in this State, as proposed at our campmeeting at Camp Brook last fall? If so, send your pledges to R. N. Stetson, West Hartford, Vt., as soon as possible. The tent is wanted the 23d of June to hold a conference in at Middlesex, Vt. If it can be had then, a good donation will be given to help pay for it from that place. I want some brother in every place to take it upon him to stir up the brethren to send in their pledges. I will mention a number in different places: James M. Densmore, Densmore Hill; Wm. Bugbee, Bridgewater; C. Tenney, So. Royalton; J. Washburn, Camp Brook; Robert Long, Warren; O. Kimball, Cabot; Chris. Dwinell, Marshfield; Dr. Warner, St. Johnsbury; Daniel Braley, East Roxbury; E. N. Morse, Calais and East Montpelier; and some one in every other place.

We wish Bro. Carpenter, of North Springfield, to help us in this enterprise, and Bro. Mathewson, of Castleton. Send the money to Bro. R. N. Stetson, West Hartford, Vt. Now don't delay. It is time to work. We want the tent much. Let us act like men in this matter, at once. J. A. CLEAVELAND.

From Sr. F. Reynolds.

Bro. Grant:—I see by your valuable paper that my heavenly Father is making you a successful fisherman in Rutland. He told his disciples, when on earth, that he would make them fishers of men. He always fulfills his precious promises. May the Lord continue to bless your efforts, as he has always done.

Our little church is still enlarging here in Chicago. Our pastor, Bro. Ramsay, baptized three on Sunday last; and some are constantly withdrawing from the frozen regions of the beautiful sunshine which is always to be found in our meetings. May our joy always spring from communion with Jesus.

Our dear pastor has had several sick spells lately, caused by hard labor. There is such a vast field here in Chicago, that a faithful man so yearns over precious souls, that he wants to be everywhere at once. I wish we could get two more good preachers here, who would be willing to sacrifice for the Lord. Yours in joyful hope of soon seeing Jesus,

Extracts from Letters.

BRO. S. GOODHUE writes from Wilmot, N. H., April 10th:—"While reading the Crisis this morning, I have been truly fed from my Master's table by the heart-cheering letters from brethren and sisters. I believe God has a people yet, who are not like this world, because God has chosen them out of the world. Then it is their duty to stay out, and place themselves in a position where God can work through them in mighty power. God has laid out a plan to save men, and has told us just what to do to be saved. He is under no obligation to save us, unless we comply with his plan, or the requirements of the gospel. We must have the life-giving power within us, dwelling there continually; and this we have, if we have the Spirit of Jesus. We profess to believe that Jesus is coming. We pray, sing and talk of his coming; but this will not save us. Our professions may be as high as heaven; but unless we have the real sanctifying influence of God's Spirit in us, I believe we shall be shut out of the kingdom.

The professed church is drowsy and sleepy, and that class who profess to be looking for Jesus soon to come, are being lulled asleep by the devil, and are being conformed to this wicked world, by following their foolish fashions and customs, and a desire to be somebody in this world, or to have the world think well of them; thus losing sight of the great truths of God, and by following the imagination of the wicked heart, they become barren and unfruitful in the knowledge of our Savior Jesus Christ. O that we, as a people, could realize the responsible position that we occupy. It seems to me that we should do as a people did anciently, call on God mightily for help, and pardon for all our sins. Brethren and sisters, let us gird on the armor anew, and face the enemy. The battle is already raging in fury. The enemy has every man at his post; and shall we, who have such a Captain as ours, desert, and join the enemy's ranks? Methinks I hear scores say, No. Let us be bold soldiers, and press the battle, and trust in our Leader, and we are sure of victory.

SISTER N. J. LUCAS writes from Hartford, Me., April 10th, 1870:—"I have been passing through deep waters of affliction. Death has entered our dwelling, and taken away my aged father, and I have seen him borne away to the cold and silent grave, there to rest till Jesus comes. In the midst of grief and mourning I have been greatly comforted. The Lord has been my stay and my support in this hour of deep affliction, and it has been sweet to hold communion with Jesus. Never did the promises contained in the holy Scriptures seem so precious as now. Never did the hope of the resurrection beam brighter. O, it is but a little while ere the voice of the archangel and the trump of God will bid the sleeping saints awake; then I expect my dear father will come forth from his dusty grave, clothed with immortality. Then, if good and faithful, I expect to meet him to part no more.

In the silent grave we have laid him,
Till the resurrection morn;
Then the Savior will receive him,
And restore his precious form.

How glad I am that there is a time in the future when death shall be destroyed, and him that had the power of death. I sometimes long for that time. I am willing to toil on longer, if it be the Lord's will; and I do feel like saying, in the language of the beautiful hymn that we have sung:

'Tis sweet to work for Jesus,
There is resting by and by.'

How sweet it is, amid sickness, sorrow, pain and death, to know 'there is resting by and by,' and that, if good and faithful, we shall ere long receive the promised reward. Dear brethren and sisters, pray for us, that we may be prepared fully to meet the dear one whose voice is hushed and stilled in death."

SR. C. C. SMITH writes from South Hadley Falls, April 10th, 1870:—"It fills my heart with joy to think we are so near our blessed home. O praise the Lord, that he called after us, and we turned our feet into his testimonies. May God grant that we who profess to believe that he is soon coming, may so live as not to bring a reproach upon the cause of Christ. The eyes of the wicked are continually upon us. How careful we ought to live every moment. The name of that dear Savior charms my breast, while on my pilgrim journey. I heard him say, Be of good cheer, for I am soon coming to take my weary, wayworn children home. He is like the shadow of a great rock in a weary land, where we can run in and be forever safe.

I do praise the Lord for this salvation which is so free. What can be more blessed than to labor for that dear Jesus, who has done so much for us. Dear brethren and sisters, let us pray on, labor on, for soon Jesus will come, the door of mercy will be closed, our work done, and we shall stand before the judgment bar. God grant our work may be done, and well done, that we may hear him say, 'Come, ye blessed.' Let us get on the whole armor, have that faith which labors, which builds us up in Jesus Christ, himself being the chief corner stone. Our Master does not want any lazy ones in his army, but only those who are willing to work for the salvation of souls."

SR. S. E. TEEPLE writes:—"It is through the abundant mercy and goodness of God that I am permitted to write a few lines for the Crisis, a paper that has been long sustained, through which we can communicate our thoughts to each other as we journey on toward the haven of eternal rest, sweet rest! How welcome to the suffering saint of God. I think much of the day when the saints will be gathered from every clime; when tribulation and anguish shall have ceased, and strife be done away; when the watchmen will see eye to eye, and naught disturb in all God's holy mountain. But here there is such a difference; hardly two see alike, or believe alike.

O for more living, active faith, such as we used to have twenty years ago, when all was laid on the altar, and every one lived like pilgrims and strangers. Because iniquity abounds, the love of many waxes cold; but he that endures to the end will be saved. I have my joys and sorrows, my hopes and fears; but all goes well, having the blessed assurance that God is mine and I am his. I mean always to live so as to keep the abiding witness of my acceptance with him. My motto is, 'Onward and upward.'"

BRO. E. TOWN writes:—"I have resolved (1) I will be thankful to God for all that I receive at his hand. (2) That God shall have all the praise for whatever good cometh upon me. (3) That I will, by the grace of God, spend all my days in his law and doing his will concerning me. (4) That I will try to bridle my tongue, and keep my body in subjection to the law of God. (5) To pray at least twice a day, and read as much as one chapter in the Holy Bible. (6) To pray for my enemies, and do good to them that despitefully use me. (7) To love others as myself. (8) To esteem others as good as myself, and especially those who give evidence that they are the children of God. (9) That my affections shall be placed on Christ, and not on things of earth. (10). To deny myself, and take up the cross, and follow Christ all the days of my life, in hope of eternal life at his coming."

SR. ELLEN L. CRUMB writes from West Greenwich, R. I., April 4th, 1870:—"The Lord opened to me a field of labor away back in the country, where they had never heard of the blessed hope. This is the fourth week I have been here. The Baptist church is open for me, also a school-house and a chapel. Here is a circuit of about four miles. The people seem to love these truths. There are a few exceptions, of course, where they think it decidedly wrong to ever depart from the traditions they first received when taken into the church. I can say, to the glory of God, that the truth is gaining ground here. The Baptist minister, an old-fashioned sort of man, seems to be less prejudiced than most of the D.D.'s of our day. He loves the resurrection doctrine. He has embraced the sleep of the dead. He is now looking into the doctrine of the saints' inheritance and destruction of the wicked. The Lord is saving sinners here. Four were baptized yesterday. Others are ready, waiting for their friends to go with them. On the whole, I can say the battle goes well. There is a prospect of great good being done here. Pray for us."

SR. D. C. CORWIN writes from Washington, D. C.:—"The columns of the Crisis refresh me, and the letters and names of the brethren and sisters always give me a spring of joy. God bless and bind together in the sure bundle of life all who love the blessed hope. We here in the Capital are looking and hoping and praying for better times. We have a prayer meeting started at a brother's house. There is a good deal of a revival spirit in the churches, and they reckon many converts. Union meetings have been in progress several weeks, going from church to church. I have attended a good deal. I always expect and get my crumb at these meetings, and bear my testimony as I have opportunity."

"NOW SQUIRM, OLD NATUR."

A stingy christian was listening to a charity sermon. He was nearly deaf, and was accustomed to sit facing the congregation, right under the pulpit, with his ear trumpet directed upwards, towards the preacher. The sermon moved him considerably. At one time he said to himself—"I'll give ten dollars;" again he said, "I'll give fifteen." At the close of the appeal, he was very much moved, and thought he would give fifty dollars.

Now the boxes were passed. As they moved along, his charity began to ooze out. He came down from fifty to twenty, to ten, to five, to zero. He concluded that he would not give anything. "Yet," said he, "this won't do—I am in a bad fix. My hopes of heaven may be in this question. This covetousness will be my ruin." The boxes were getting nearer and nearer. The crisis was upon him. What should he do? The box was under his chin—all the congregation were looking. He had been holding his pocket-book in his hand during this soliloquy, which was half audible, though in his deafness he did not know that he was heard. In the agony of the final moment, he took his pocket-book and laid it in the box, saying to himself as he did it,—"Now squirm, old natur!"

This was victory beyond any that Alexander ever won—a victory over himself. Here is a key to the problem of covetousness. "Old natur" must go under. It will take great giving to put stinginess down. A few experiments of putting in the whole pocket-book may, by and by, get the heart into the charity box, and then the cure is reached. All honor to the deaf old gentleman. He did a magnificent thing for himself, and gave an example worth imitating, beside pointing a paragraph for the students of human nature.—Rev. G. E. C.

CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.—I have noticed one thing (said Mr. Spurgeon while recently addressing his people)—I have jotted this down in the diary of my recollections—that you always sing best when you are most spiritual. Last Monday night the singing was better than it was on Sabbath evening. You kept better time and better tune; not because the tune was any easier, but because you had come up to worship God with more solemnity than usual, and therefore there was no slovenly singing, such as pains my ear and heart sometimes. Why, some of you care so little to give the Lord your best music, that you fall half a note behind the rest; others of you are singing quite a false note, and a few make no sound of any kind. I hate to enter into a place of worship where half a dozen sing to the praise and glory of themselves, and the rest stand and listen. I like the good old plan of everybody singing, singing carefully and heartily. If you cannot sing artistically never mind; you will be right enough if you sing from the heart, and pay attention to it, and do not drawl out like a musical machine that has been set a going and therefore runs on mechanically. With a little care, the heart brings the art, and the heart desiring to praise, will by-and-by train the voice to time and tune.

STEWART'S ESTABLISHMENT.—In passing up Broadway to Tenth street, the visitor to New York comes to Mr. Stewart's great retail establishment—an enormous building, beautiful, elegant and symmetrical in its architecture—and from the constant tide of human beings passing in and out, the stranger at once concludes that there must be something of unusual interest within. Suppose we enter the current and pass into this magnificent edifice. We at once find ourselves in the midst of a mass of human beings, quite beyond our power to number, all observing the utmost order and propriety.

The daily receipts of this establishment average $60,000. Not less than twenty-two hundred persons are required to perform all the duties. The wonder is, how such an immense force can be kept in such perfect order, all moving with such regularity, every one in his place attending to the duties assigned him?

It is supposed that not less than fifteen thousand persons visit the establishment daily, and that the number has reached fifty thousand on some special occasions. It is a model business house, and Mr. Stewart deserves the thanks of the people of this country for placing before them such an example of business order and politeness.—Boston Daily News.

Summary of News.

FOREIGN.

Cable News.

LONDON, May 20. Letters from Rome state that a debate on the Constitution de primatia is now going on in the Ecumenical Council. The Bishops of Dijon, Spires and Rothenburg have made speeches against the infallibility dogma, and at last accounts Cardinal Schwartzenburg had the floor in opposition. One of the organs of the Vatican says, however, that resistance is practicallyextinct.

MADRID, May 20. Another deputation waited upon Espartero yesterday, hoping to prevail upon him to accept the throne. He persisted in his refusal.

FLORENCE, May 20. Three Italian frigates are cruising around the island of Caprera to prevent the escape of Gen. Garibaldi to Naples. The Government has taken this action because the sons of Garibaldi are with the insurgents in Southern Italy.

MUNICH, May 20. Baron Liebig, whose condition recently caused so much anxiety, is convalescent.

PARIS, May 21. The Emperor met the Legislatif bodies this morning in solemn assembly in the Salle d' etat, and received from a deputation of the corps Legislatif the result of the vote on the plebiscitum.

His Majesty with the Empress and Prince Imperial were greeted by the Deputies and Senators with demonstrative enthusiasm. M. Schneider addressed the Emperor on behalf of the Legislative bodies.

A pamphlet has appeared at Rome denouncing acquiescence in the dogma of the personal infallibility of the Pope as a mortal sin. It is supposed to have been written by the Bishop of Saint Berieux, and produces an extraordinary sensation.

The debate on infallibility, in the Council, continues. Of the fathers who have given notice of their intentions to speak, sixty are yet to be heard. The close of the discussion is fixed for the 29th of June, the date of the next general congregation.

DOMESTIC.

Calais, Me., May 23. A fearful conflagration is raging in the timber lands between here and the St. John river. There has been an immense destruction of property. Unless the wind changes or rain falls, the loss of timber and buildings will be incalculable. A dense smoke is in the city, and the air is filled with flying cinders.

New York, May 23. It is rumored that a force of over 20,000 Fenians left Brooklyn, this evening, for Canada.

Buffalo, May 23. There has been great activity among the Fenians in this city during the last forty-eight hours. It is impossible to get any reliable particulars. That the men are in earnest there can be no doubt.

Telegraphing around the World.

No one, probably, who has given the least thought to the subject, doubts that the earth will soon be encircled by telegraphic lines. How much remains to be done to that end, and how to do it, are the topics which the United States Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has recently been considering, under the suggestion of arguments made by Cyrus W. Field and others, who present a definite plan of their own. Before we come to that, however, let us glance at the present state of intercontinental telegraphing. A telegraph map of the world shows no less than five grand lines traversing the face of Europe from east to west, striking over into Asia in three lines which are more or less completed, to the eastern shores of China, off which they are stopped, leaving a gap to Western America. Returning to Western Europe, we find three lines running across the Atlantic, and connecting with our American system, extending to Cuba on the one hand, (with additions under contract to carry it to Buenos Ayres in South America,) and to San Francisco and Puget Sound on the other.

Here we come to the gap—and a considerable gap it is, reaching across the Pacific Ocean—which Mr. Field and his company propose to fill. He suggests two routes between San Francisco and the city of Yokohama in Japan. One extends northwest to the Aleutian Islands, and then southwest to Japan; the other, which is longer, but offers more commercial advantages, runs to the Sandwich Islands, and thence to Japan and thence to China. Admiral Porter, in a letter to Mr. Field, greatly prefers this route. Its distances would be about as follows: From San Francisco to the Sandwich Islands, 2080 miles; thence to the Midway Islands, 1140 miles; thence to Yokohama, in Japan, 2260 miles; thence to Shanghai, China, 1035 miles. To this is to be added one-sixth of the whole, to make statute miles, 1086 miles, and also twenty per cent. of the whole for slack, 1520 miles, thus making the entire length of cable from San Francisco to Shanghai, 9121 miles.

It is a stupendous enterprise, undoubtedly, but the success of the Atlantic cables has abundantly demonstrated its feasibility. Its realization is only a question of time. The exigencies of commerce are fast making it a necessity, and the need of it is particularly felt by our Government, as Admiral Porter has shown. When the line is completed to China, it will connect with the three lines now pushing on from the West, and with the line, now partially completed, with the remainder under contract, running to Sumatra, Java, Australia and New Zealand; thus enabling the Government to communicate easily with any part of its Asiatic squadron, or our merchants with their correspondents in any quarter of the East. The value of this, particularly in case of a war with England or France, when the Atlantic cables would be cut, is obvious at a glance. Mr. Field's company do not ask for any Government subsidy until their line is actually built and in operation, when they will require a cash subsidy of $500,000 annually for twenty years for the Government use of the wires. And they propose to bind themselves in a manner which will at once secure the commencement of the work and its vigorous prosecution to a speedy completion. Admiral Porter regards this proposal as reasonable, in view of the benefit the Government would derive from its facilities, and it is reported that the Foreign Relations Committee think favorably of the proposition. How this may be we cannot say; but of the grandeur and utility of the general enterprise, and the ultimate certainty of its realization, there can be no doubt.—Journal.

Circular.

DEAR SIR.—Clergymen and others ask why I have devoted myself to the Anti-Tobacco cause twenty years? This inquiry deserves an answer.

1. I was myself a user of tobacco. I gave it up; and, as it formed an era in my life, like a young convert, I joyfully proclaimed it to my fellow-men.

2. My preaching was blessed of God. Many clergymen and many laymen relinquished the habit; and young men and boys in large numbers signed the pledge against tobacco and strong drink.

3. In the course of investigation, I soon saw that tobacco was injuring the piety of church-members, rendering some irritable and others stupid, and tending to destroy all aspirations for sanctification and the "higher life."

4. I became convinced that tobacco is an idol, assuming the place of God—as really an idol as Baal or Juggernaut, and that our young men, whilst worshiping it, can no more be saved, than whilst worshiping God and mammon.

5. In looking over churches, I saw that backsliders were tobacco users and I came to the conclusion that tobacco had much to do with their apostasy. This is confirmed by mournful facts.

6. On farther investigation, I found that many devotees of tobacco are in a narcotized or abnormal state. Their moral sensibilities are not only stupified, but the glorious atttribute of free will is paralyzed, and their power to choose God well nigh destroyed.

7. I found that when men relinquished tobacco, it paved the way to relinquish other destructive habits, and this to a resurrection of the whole moral man, and this to a determination to be right with God, and to "lay hold on eternal life."

8. Conferring with missionaries in this and other lands, I found the evil as broad as the world; that the Chinese and Turks are intoxicated and narcotized not only by opium, but by tobacco, and whilst in this state their conversion is about as hopeful as that of dead men in the catacombs of Rome.

These are my reasons for sacrificing myself to this despised cause. Other men may denounce the habit as filthy, expensive, and unhealthy. I take higher ground. I maintain that it mars the image of God in good men, and hinders the conversion of sinners about us.

Great obstacles obstruct the gospel. I am doing what I can to invoke attention to a mighty one, and to prepare the way of the Lord. My cause is unpopular—I am unpopular; but somebody must do unpopular work, or it will never be done. I have published two hundred different tracts against tobacco and strong drink. I am trying to spread them gratuitously over the nation. It is expensive business. If, my dear sir, you have any money you would gladly give to this object, please send it by mail, and I will acknowledge it with gratitude. Yours truly, GEORGE TRASK.

PRAYER.

Go, when the morning shineth,
Go, when the noon is bright,
Go, when the eve declineth,
Go, in the hush of night;
Go, with pure mind and feeling,
Fling earthly thoughts away,
And in thy chamber kneeling,
Do thou in secret pray.

Remember all who love thee,
All who are loved by thee;
Pray for those who hate thee,
If any such there be;
Then for thyself, in meekness,
A blessing humbly claim,
And link with each petition
Thy great Redeemer's name.

Or if 'tis e'er denied thee
In solitude to pray,
Should holy thoughts come o'er thee
When friends are round thy way;
E'en then the silent breathing
Of thy spirit raised above,
Will reach his throne of glory,
Who is mercy, truth, and love.

Oh! not a joy or blessing
With this can we compare—
The power that he hath given us
To pour our souls in prayer.
Whene'er thou pin'st in sadness,
Before his footstool fall,
And remember in thy gladness,
His grace who gave thee all.

For the World's Crisis.

"ANNIHILATED."

On page 41 of Alfred Bryant's* "World to Come," he says: "What a lavish expenditure it would be to give man such powers [of mind, capable of progressing, improving, and traveling on from perfection to perfection], only to be cast down and annihilated!"

We would like to ask Friend Bryant, How much better would it be to cast those powers into hell, where they would be in eternal suffering? Will they continue to progress in hell? If so, which way will they progress; upward, or downward? If upward, would they not come to be righteous at last, and so become fit subjects for the kingdom of heaven, and finally be saved on their own merits, instead of the merits of Jesus Christ? Would not this result in universal salvation?

If they progress downward, becoming more vile, and, as a consequence, be tormented more and more, how much better would this be to those powers which are "lavishly expended" on such unfortunate beings? Would it not be much better to let them die, and so rid the universe of all evil?

Again. On the same page he says:—"If there is not a higher life for man, God really does more for the brute than the intelligent. Excluding violence, animals commonly live out their day, until they become incapable of more enjoyment." Again we ask, Would it be a higher life for man to be "cast down" to the miseries of hell, there to wail and languish eternally?

We believe there is a higher life for man, if he will but accept it on the terms of the gospel; but if he fails of this, and must be tormented eternally for doing wrong, we admit that God does more for the brute than for man. But we believe God will be merciful in the destruction of evil beings, as well as of the brute. In the time of the flood, God destroyed men and animals alike with the same element. Peter says concerning the wicked (2 Pet. 2: 12), "But these, as natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed, speak evil of the things that they understand not; and shall utterly perish in their own corruption."

David says (Ps. 37: 10, 11), "For yet a little while, and the wicked shall not be; yea, thou shalt diligently consider his place, and it shall not be. But the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace." To be signifies to exist. So when David says, "The wicked shall not be," he means the same as though he said, "The wicked shall not exist." If the wicked shall not exist, they will be annihilated. The prophet Obadiah says (Oba. 16), "They [the heathen) shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been." What they shall drink, is, in other passages, shown to be liquid fire, like that which rained upon Sodom. David says (Ps. 11: 6), "Upon the wicked he shall rain snares, fire and brimstone, and a horrible tempest; this shall be the portion of their cup." The wicked will drink, by endeavoring to breathe, until they die. When they are burned up, "they will be as though they had not been"; which will not be the case if they still live and exist in hell or any other place. But "their place shall not be." No, not even in hell; for hell itself shall be cast into the lake of fire and brimstone. See Rev. 20: 14.

If the foregoing quotations do not teach annihilation, there is no such thing, and the word is obsolete and useless.

From page 243 to 252, Mr. Bryant labors very hard to show that substance cannot be annihilated, in order to prove that the punishment of the wicked will not result in their annihilation. While we believe that God could annihilate, or uncreate substance as easily as he created it (Gen. 1: 1; Heb. 11: 3), we think it is unnecessary to do this in order to annihilate the sinner as a conscious, organized being. We never believed that the substance, of which a man is composed, will ever be annihilated. If a man is burned to ashes (Mal. 4: 3), or is consumed away into smoke (Ps. 37: 20), the man is annihilated. The smoke or ashes is not a man. There is, then, one man less in existence.

M. Bryant admits that destroy means to decompose, or to separate into original elements. Then he claims that when a man is destroyed, the soul is merely separated from the body; as though the soul is a primary, or original element which cannot be separated or decomposed. If this were so, the soul must have had an existence coequal with substance, else God is still creating original or primary elements. But when the soul is destroyed, what then? Friend Bryant says that when the soul is destroyed, it is merely separated from God by being cast into hell. Admitting that destroy means to separate, we do not see the point in this; for it would only change its location. The sinful soul is already separated from God, while it is with the body. But if destruction also means a change of location, it has no definite signification. We might say, "The house is destroyed, and you would not know whether it is demolished, or simply moved from its old foundation to a new one. A cargo of sugar might be destroyed, and we not know but it was merely sent from Charleston to Boston. It seems strange that intelligent minds will be led to such extremes in vain philosophy, rather than submit to God's plain truth against a pet dogma.

THE SAME JESUS.

The second coming of our Lord from heaven is practically rejected by a great number of professed christians. Their faith is so cold and dead on the subject, it is well nigh unnamed by them. And when they profess to believe in it, it is multiplied into many distinct comings. How many say Christ comes at death, and takes away the soul to heaven, where it enjoys the fancied sky-kingdom. It is easy for some to understand the second coming of Christ to be in a spiritual manner; but it is impossible for them to see or believe in a personal, visible advent of the Messiah from heaven. They can understand how we are rewarded at death; but they cannot comprehend the Scriptures upon this all-important subject; nor that we do not receive our reward till the coming and kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Second Advent is coupled with the resurrection; then shall he reward every man. The second advent implies the closing up of the gospel day, and the opening of a new dispensation. The present heavens and earthly things shall pass away. He will gather the wheat into his barn, but the chaff he will burn up. The early fathers made the second advent of Christ and the judgment day a prominent feature in their teachings. Many hundreds of years have passed away since their day, and many scoffers have arisen in these last days, saying, "Where is the promise of his coming?" But the Nobleman who has been absent in the far country is about to return literally—the same Jesus; not at death, but at the end of the age.

There are but two comings of the Messiah mentioned in the Bible. The first coming consisted of the lowly Savior, the Man of Sorrows, who was crucified, buried, and who rose the third day according to the Scriptures, and who was seen by over five hundred brethren at once, and was seen by unimpeachable witnesses to ascend into heaven, and a cloud received him out of their sight. While these good men were looking up to catch a last glimpse of their departing Lord, "Behold two men stood by them in white apparel, which also said, Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven." Thus we have the positive statement of the two angelic ones, that the same Jesus shall come back again, tangible, the same immortal, visible Jesus that was seen to go away. Thus the second coming of our Lord will be literal, personal. "Behold he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him."—Rev. 1: 7.

Modern christianity and spiritualism have so spiritualized away the Bible, that there is a general unbelief in a personal, visible coming of our Lord. Let not the men of this fast and wicked age deceive themselves in this matter, thinking they have found out a more excellent way to paradise. The hour cometh when the trump of God shall sound, and the dead shall hear and come forth to judgment. The tribes of the earth shall mourn, and they shall see the once crucified and rejected Savior "coming in the clouds of heaven with power and great glory." It will be the same Jesus that was seen by the men of Galilee to go up into heaven. He will come to gather his saints and establish his kingdom on earth, and to reign over the house of Jacob forever. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."—Matt. 5: 5. There shall be no more death; the redeemed shall live on forever. Death, and him that hath the power of it, shall be destroyed. It will be a world of unending life, immortality, eternal bloom. Jesus will be there personally. We shall see him as he is, and be made like him. He will have a glorious body; so will his saints.

The prophetic periods that were given to measure earth's history are about to expire. The signs of the times indicate the speedy dissolution of all earthly kingdoms, and the downfall of Satan's empire. The moments in which we live are fraught with momentous and eternal consequences. O sinner, haste away to Jesus, who now stands with outstretched arms to save you. If your sins are not forgiven, soon you will behold his frowning face. The world is full of backsliders. Haste ye, before your doom is forever sealed. O christian, hold fast; watch and pray always, lest coming suddenly the Master find you sleeping.

JEALOUSY.

More mischief is done through this one element of human nature, than is generally supposed. It is a blighting evil. It destroys our peace, it mars our joy, it burdens our song, it usurps the place of trust in our heart, it stings like an adder, out of harmony creates discord, in union brings division, and in quietude turmoil and confusion. God's Spirit engenders order, unity and peace; and where jealousy enters, these heaven-bestowed elements take their flight.

"Well," says one, "I am not troubled with this malady." But stop, dear friend, and consider well, ere you dismiss this from your mind. Prove that you are not tainted with this green-eyed leprosy of the soul. Observe its tendencies, as you see its fruit in others, then search your own heart, and see if it has a place there. Some persons suppose this element is confined to the married relation. Although it may, alas! too often be discovered as existing between husband and wife, yet it does not stop here; its limits are nameless. It finds its way into all departments and relations of life, and into all dwellings, societies and communities. It is seen among the clergy, the laity, and suppliants. It is seen among brethren of different denominational orders; and the fruit of it is strife. It is seen among members of one church, even; between elders and deacons and laymen. The sisters, also, are not lacking in this quality. They think one sister pushes herself forward too much for a modest christian, and tries to attract notice. Another dresses above her means, and is puffed up with vanity and self-love; and she speaks with every one but me, and that is because I work for my living and cannot dress in style. The next talks long and loud; she is good, but I have no doubt she is always busy in other people's matters. I saw her talking with Sister B., and I know she was talking about me, for I saw her look towards me. O sisters, do not demean yourselves enough to allow any such feelings to enter your heart, and unfit it for the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

This jealousy creeps into families, and among mutual friends, and accomplishes direful results. I have witnessed its work. I have felt its poisonous breath, and been pained by its sting. O, it is deadly in its work! What pain it brings; what unhappiness it gives rise to; how much grief it causes; what bitter tears flow in consequence of it; how many fond hopes are blighted by it; what deep peace it breaks into and destroys; what trust is betrayed by it, and by its pernicious touch how many friends are lost, and many enemies gained. And all this for a mere phantom, ever appearing in sight, yet perpetually eluding the grasp; and beckons its victims onward to an utter destruction of everything that makes life desirable.

Reader, have you a taint of this, worse than leprosy upon you, gnawing at your very vitals? Has it pierced your brain as well as heart? Does the pain increase, and does your distorted vision tell you that all your friends are leaving you? that each and all are turned against you? Remember they are mere spectres in the creation your disordered fancy has wrought. Apply to the Great Physician at once, ere your disease becomes chronic and past remedy.

Christians, followers of Christ, can it be that you indulge in this weakness of the flesh, and delusion of Satan? (for certainly its origin can be traced to no good source). Satan is marshaling his host, and sowing discord, strife and envyings broadcast. Friends of Jesus, let not this seed find root in your heart. Search closely your entire life, and if there be any root of bitterness born of jealousy within your heart, pluck it out, and wash in the healing fountain of Jesus' blood, and be made clean. Do not let jealousy mar your peace with God. Let us consider our own unworthiness, enumerate our own faults, and recount the mercies of God toward us, his long-suffering and gentle dealings, and we shall have little time to find fault with others, little occasion to be jealous, and abundant reason to praise God for his mercy.

THE ABOLITION OF DEATH.

The prevalency of the law of death is one of the most mysterious facts in the history of the human species. Men who are contented with looking merely at the surface of things—who contemplate external phenomena alone, and classify and speculate about them just as they find them—are apt to look upon death as an inherent or essential principle of human nature. They see that all animals die—human beings among the number—and they rush at once to the conclusion that man was created in order to die, and that mortality, or the certain destiny of death, forms one of the conditions of our very being. And yet every one is conscious, in his own bosom, of a feeling that life, and not death, is man's natural destiny; that dissolution and its horrible accompaniments are uncongenial, and indeed involve something penal. Moreover, the entire language of Scripture concurs with man's natural feelings. The history of the fall in the early chapters of Genesis, represents death as the consequence of man's eating the forbidding fruit, and again and again, in the doctrinal annoucements of New Testament inspiration, we are informed that the very existence of death in the world is attributable to the sin of our first parents. 'By one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned.' There is accordingly no doubt whatever, if we are willing to be guided either by the instinctive feelings of the human heart, or by the utterances of Scripture, that death is an accident which has befallen us, and that our mortality or liability to dissolution, involving, of course, everything which leads to these horrible results—accident, disease, pain, suffering, and so on—is the consequence of our fallen or sinful condition. In short, man in the beginning, and at the dawn of the creation day, was duly informed by his Creator that death could not happen to him save by his own fault. Other animals, for aught I I know, might be dying around him; but from this law of animal existence, his case was to be an exception; and did he maintain his allegiance or obedience to the God of heaven, he would continue to live for ever.

Whilst, therefore, universal experience proclaims the unexcepted prevalency of the law of death, Scripture with equal distinctness accounts for the phenomenon. It does more. It holds out the prospect of man's restoration to his primeval state. Had Adam and Eve not sinned, they and their posterity would have peopled this round world of ours, filling all its continents and islands with their descendants—glorious, happy, and immortal. But, in the room of the entire posterity of our first parents, we are informed in Scripture that an election according to grace will be taken—the loving and ransomed people, that is to say, of Jesus Christ; and in them the primeval destiny of our race will be accomplished—this round world restored to the paradisaical state, and peopled by myriads of human beings, glorious, happy, and immortal. Nay, all the rest of mankind will be recuscitated, too, or restored to the integrity of their physical constitution; restored, indeed, only to brook that awful destiny—dying the second death—glorifying thereby the justice, as the salvation of the redeemed will glorify the mercy and grace of the eternal God. Whether, accordingly, we look to the righteous or the wicked, the redeemed or the reprobate, the resurrection which is coming, and which it is the object of the apostle in this chapter to describe and illustrate, will prove that death is a conquered enemy, that its ravages are of temporary duration, and that the hour is coming when death's law, now absolutely universal, will be abrogated for ever. A lengthened period may have to elapse before it is finally realized. But the result is announced in the words before us, which proclaims the purpose of the Almighty utterly to abolish death, and banish it from creation for ever. 'The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.'

Striking and momentous words! What desolations death has accomplished; what countenances it has saddened; what happy households it has filled with mourning and woe; what wide regions of the earth it has covered with graves, and the mouldering relics of all that was lovely, good, and noble! But death, it seems, is destined to die. A time—blessed epoch it will be—is appointed to come when such a thing as death will be found no more within the precincts of the universe of God. Its destruction is doomed. Notice the emphatic words before us: 'The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death.' Destroyed—not curbed, restrained, and kept within bounds,—but absolutely destroyed. Such a thing as death no longer anywhere existing! What a glorious consummation, the fullest blessedness that human nature is capable of, and an eternity undimmed by shadow of death, wherein to enjoy it!

The whole subject referred to in these verses is, therefore, about the most sublime and momentous which can engage the thoughts of man. Any one who thinks and believes that there is a God, often has felt it to be a strange thing that in this beautiful world there should be so much vexation, suffering and death; and must have often wondered, in utter amazement, at the unsatisfactoriness, disappointing providences, and careless agitations of this our mortal state. Do we never ask the question, Can such things last forever? Is it to be eternal misery and woe? No, by no means. There is a glorious world of the hereafter; and the faith of the christian anticipates the coming of the kingdom of God. Oh, the visions of rapture which rise before the imagination of the believer, lighted up by the word of God, like a glorious landscape, when the sun from behind a dark cloud bursts upon it in all his splendor. Have a share, brethren, in these hopes. Hold fast the beginning of your confidence steadfast unto the end. Believe me, no worldly possession can ever equal a place and a portion in the coming kingdom of God. Be united to Jesus. Cherish his spirit; continue to do his work. What say you yet to hear the very accents of his voice, and saying to you, "Enter ye into the joy of your Lord"?—Rainbow.

CHASING A REVIVAL.

There is an article going the rounds of the papers, attributed to the Rev. Lyman Beecher, of which the above heading is the substance. He, in his lifetime, uttered many important truths, and preached many telling sermons; but we cannot endorse the sentiment contained in this article. What does it imply? Evidently that the church has no agency in the perpetuation of a revival. With the same propriety we may say it is of no use to chase missionary enterprises, or Sabbath Schools, or any other work of the church. Or after a person has been blessed and comforted and strengthened in the hopes of the gospel, and his feet are established on the Rock of Ages, he may with the same propriety say it is of no use to chase this any further, and hence give up watching and praying, and backslide from God, and dishonor him and his cause.

We know mankind will act much as they have been educated; hence the custom of having special seasons for revival efforts. It was not so in the primitive ages of the church, but there were added to it daily such as should be be saved. We often hear the quotation from Scripture, "The set time to favor Zion has come"; but we think this has no reference to a revival of religion, but to a period in prophecy; and the set time to have a revival is when the people of God will labor and pray for it, whether in the frosty winter, the reviving months of spring, the genial summer, or the fruitful autumn. The promises of God were not made for any particular season of the year.

We sometimes hear another quotation, concerning the waters troubled by the angel at the pool of Bethesda. This is far-fetched, and would imply that the church must wait for some power outside of itself before it should act. We believe the waters of salvation will be troubled, or overflow, that sinners will be troubled, the church revived, its cords lengthened, its stakes strengthened, and converts multiplied, whenever the people of God make the necessary efforts to this end; and it is a pity that the idea and custom of having a few weeks only in the year of special work were not banished from the church for ever.

SMALL THINGS.

"It is of small things that great life is made up."

Little words, not eloquent speeches nor sermons; little deeds, not miracles nor battles, nor one great act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true christian life. The little constant sunbeam, not the lightning; the waters of Siloah, "that go softly" on their meek mission of refreshment; not the waters of the river "great and mighty," rushing down in torrent, noise, and force, are the true symbols of a holy life.

The avoidance of little evils, little sins, little inconsistencies, little weaknesses, little follies, little indiscretions and imprudences, little foibles, indulgences of the flesh, little acts of indolence, of indecision, slovenliness, or cowardice, little equivocations or aberrations from high integrity, little bits of worldliness and gayety, little indifferences to the feelings or wishes of others, little outbreaks of temper and crossness, or selfishness, or vanity; the avoidance of such things as these goes far to make up at least the negative beauty of a holy life.

And then, attention to the little duties of the day and hour, in public transactions, or private dealings, or family arrangements; to the little words and tones, little benevolences, or forbearances, or tendernesses; little self-denials, self-restraints, and self-thoughfulness; little plans of quiet kindness and thoughtful consideration for others; punctuality and method, and true aim in the ordering each day—these are the active developments of holy life, the rich and divine mosaics of which it is composed.

What makes you green hill so beautiful? Not the outstanding peak or stately elm, but the bright sward which clothes its slopes, composed of innumerable blades of grass. It is of small things that a great life is made up; and he who will acknowledge no life as great save that which is built up of great things, will find little in Bible characters to admire or copy.—Guide to Holiness.

FATHERS AND MOTHERS.

Let every father and mother be kind, cheerful and happy, if they would bring up their children in the fear of the Lord. Cheerfulness is only another name for health and happiness. Children need cheerful homes and kind words, as much as the flowers need the sunshine and the dew. I am afraid very many of the young wander from home and God, not for the lack of correction, prayers, and virtue at home, but for the want of home cheerfulness and home sunshine. Home should be the place where faces wear smiles, hearts speak love, and hands help each other. It is no place for sour faces or harsh words. A cheerful countenance is a passport to good society, and a smile playing on the cheek of the heart that feels its sins forgiven may be the passport to the courts of heaven.

Fathers and mothers, if you would have a happy home, you must not only plant flowers and beautiful trees around your house, but within you must plant acts of kindness and deeds of love. They will blossom here, and bear fruit in eternity. The family that lives not for selfish ends, but to make others happy and good, is as near heaven as earth can be. Love your children, and they will love you.

STRANGE POETRY.

Bro. Grant:—It was my lot to hear the following lines read by a Methodist preacher, at a conference of Methodist preachers, in Woodhull, Steuben Co., N. Y. It occasioned much mirthfulness, especially in the Presiding Elder, who shook his sides freely, as he listened to the wit and sarcasm hurled at a people who are preaching that the meek shall inherit the earth, and shall delight themselves in the abundance of peace. ABOUT A PEOPLE DESCRIBED BY SOLOMON.—Prov. 30: 12.

King Solomon, the wisest man
That lived in ancient days,
Described a people now alive
Who walk in evil ways.

In their own eyes quite pure they are,
Their prayers they often say;
And yet their inbred filthiness
Has not been washed away.

Methinks from the old Sadducees
These creatures must have sprung;
They boast that they alone are right,
And all the rest are wrong.

They try God's church to overthrow,
In sinning they are bold;
The soul's existence they deny,
Like Sadducees of old.

With these poor creatures it would be
Presumptuous to dispute;
Since they of matter are composed,
No higher than the brute.

The soul they say is naught but breath,
And when that dies away,
Unconscious they expect to sleep
Till the millennium day.

When that day dawns they hope to rise
A joyful little band;
To build fine houses, eat and drink,
And share the promised land.

They mean to parcel out the earth,
And each one have his share;
Then, O what splendid farms they'll have,
What shining robes they 'll wear.

The wretches who reject their creed,
Are to be burned with fire;
To be like ashes in the street,
And all in smoke expire.

And when the heretics are dead,
And they are left alone;
They'll clap their hands and shout for joy,
And call this world their own.

But say, will they be all agreed
About their different shares?
No, some will think their neighbor's farms
Are better far than theirs.

And so there will be quarrelling
Among the Advent train,
Carnal their dispositions are,
And carnal they'll remain.

Like worms they grovel in the dust,
No higher good they know;
No home they seek above the skies,
Their portion lies below.

From error's dark and gloomy path
May I to Jesus flee;
From animals that have no souls,
Good Lord, deliver me.

HINTS FOR HAPPINESS

Be wise in the choice of books; keep to what is useful and instructive, as well as pleasant. In company be consistent; cheerful, but not light; conversible, but not trifling. Remember that you are supporting the character and credit of your parents, as well as your own. Show a marked preference to such conversations, persons, occupations, etc., as may tend to essential good. Always think before you speak. Say and do, neither hastily nor unadvisably. If any proposal is made to you, in which you hesitate how to act, first say to yourself, how would God have me act? Secondly, what would my parents have me do, if they were here to advise me? Strive to recommend religion by the courtesy, civility, and condescending character of your conduct. Watch against irritation, unkind speaking, anger, and fault-finding; study and promote love. Shut out evil imaginations and angry thoughts. Let it be your sole business here to prepare for eternity. Consider every moment of time in that view. Cultivate prayer. Books are good or bad in their effects, as they make us relish the word of God, the more or the less, after we have read them.

Dress. Aim at great neatness and simplicity. Shun finery and show. Be not in haste to follow new fashions.

Behavior in company. Be cheerful, but not gigglers. Be kind, but not servile. Beware of silly, thoughtless speeches. Although you may forget them, others will not. Remember, God's eye is in every place, his ear in every company. In every company, support your principles by cautious consistency. —Rev. Leigh Richmond.

HABITS.

Our habits mean the things that we are doing continually; our mode of life; our common every-day way of going on. Some of these habits, or ways of life, can hardly be said to depend on ourselves now; for, when once we have begun them, it is often not in our power to change them. A man's work or business has been settled long ago, and, generally speaking, he must now go on with it. The laborer must earn his bread by the labor of his hands; the carpenter, the bricklayer, the shoemaker, have been bred to their trades, and generally speaking, must stick to them; the shopman must stand behind the counter, the servant must serve, the sailor must live aboard ship. Men do, it is true, change their way of life sometimes; but more commonly each man keeps to that which he began with, and very often he would not be fit for any other.

But there are habits, or ways, of another kind, which do depend on ourselves. The way in which we spend that part of our time which we can call our own, the company we keep, our pleasures, pursuits, and employments when not at work—all these do depend on ourselves. Nay, more; whether we are at work or not, and whatever our work may be, there are habits which we may indulge in or not, as we please. For instance, a man who is at work upon that which does not want much thought, may either fix his mind on something good, or may be thinking of folly or sin. A man working with others may either swear, or not swear; may speak to his mates in a way either to do them good, or to do them harm; may either set a watch over his tongue, or let himself speak idly, carelessly, and vainly. In like manner, whatever his work or trade may be, a man may be either a drinking man, or a sober man; a Sabbath-breaker, or a lover of God's day; one who strives to bring up his children for God, or one who lets them go their own way. Habits of this kind (and there are many more than I have mentioned) are within our own power. We can choose them. We can change them. At least, by God's help we can; and that he is always ready to give us.

Some day we shall look back on our present habits, and think of the way in which we are now living, of our words, our pursuits, our pleasures. Reader, what will your thoughts be then? Is there anything in your habits now, for which you will then be sorry? Does conscience tell you that a time will come when you will say, "Oh, that I had not gone on so! Oh, that I had not passed that part of my life as I did! Oh, how I wish that my habits then had been different!" Do you think this likely? Are you almost sure of it? Are there many things in your course of life, about which you will feel thus? Is there even one thing—one habit or practice of yours, an old habit perhaps, which even now you know to be wrong, but which, nevertheless, you still keep? Is it so?

It will be very sad to look back thus. Very sad, because a wasted or mispent life, a life of evil habits, cannot be lived over again. What you are now doing, no sorrow of yours hereafter can undo.

Judge your habits now by what you will think of them hereafter—you know when—at that solemn time when the end is at hand. Break off from all you will then think wrong—then, when you are about to meet God. Make a change at once, before your present evil habits get stronger. For habits do get stronger; and every day's indulgence makes them harder to leave off. Stop and change, before you go further. Let there be no delay.

You want two main things. You cannot do without either. You want the blood of Jesus to cleanse you, and you want the Holy Spirit to renew you, to help you, and to strengthen you. Old habits will be too strong for you without this help. But God is gracious and merciful, and pities poor sinners; and he will certainly help you, if you pray to him. Do pray to him. Pray very earnestly. Pray in the name of Jesus Christ. Pray again and again. Pray that God would blot out all your sins in the blood of Jesus, and give you a new heart and a new spirit; that so you may henceforth live to him, and may enter upon better habits, cleansed from all the guilt of the old ones, and may both begin and go on, not in your own strength, but in his.—English Tract.

CHASTITY.

Chasteness of soul in our relations to Christ is too little prized, too feebly longed after. How many and deep are the stains on our bridal robes, that should be so white and clean. Conformity to the world, following after its fashions and amusements, seeking its filthy lucre, groveling for its honors, pampering of self, shrinking from the cross, putting human methods and observances and dependences proudly in the place of Christ, indulging in fears and doubts instead of taking him simply at his word; it is in such ways that our minds, through the subtilty of the serpent, are beguiled and corrupted from the simplicity that is in Christ.

Yours in the bonds of christian hope,

MAN'S FOLLY.

How strange it would look to us to see a person having a beautiful musical instrument in his house continue to play on a few notes, and those the most discordant, and refuse the services of the greatest teacher in the land, offered freely. But the masses do this with themselves. They cultivate only their lower nature. They live only to eat and drink, and seek pleasure; while they refuse Christ, the great Teacher.

Albert S. Burnham.

Habit is everything.—We have all heard the story of the man who slept above the baker's oven for twenty years, then changed his lodgings, but had to go back to the oven before he could sleep. A case illustrating the same principle has recently come under our notice. A city man, accustomed to lodge in one of the noisiest streets, visited a country friend. Too much quiet destroyed his rest at night. His friend felt for his distress, and said he would try and relieve it. Accordingly he went to a neighbor's and procured a bass-drum, which he beat under the fellow's bedroom window, and made his boy run a squeaking wheelbarrow up and down on the porch, while his wife played on the piano, and the servant-girl pounded on the door with the tongs. In this manner the sufferer was enabled to get two or three hours of quiet and refreshing sleep, though it was heavy on the family.

Gems.

— When a man is in a wise state, he is always in a calm state.

— Children of God, like lilies of the valley, flourish best in lowly situations.

— Hope is the dawn of joy, and memory its twilight.

— A good conscience is sometimes sold for money, but never bought with it.

— Nothing brings such peace to the heart as a calm trustfulness in God's overruling care.

— Hard as it is to understand the difficult parts of the Bible, it is a great deal harder to practise the simple parts.

— To look up to God, to mark the providence of God, to meditate on the word of God, are three chief duties in time.

— Heart-work must be God's work. The great heart-maker alone can be the great heart-breaker.

— Many persons who appear to repent are like sailors, who throw their goods overboard in a storm, and wish for them again in a calm.

— If you would find out a great many faults, be on the look out; if you would find them in still greater abundance, be on the look in.

— Things of value are preserved with care. The wise man has taught us a fine lesson—"keep thy heart with all diligence, for out of it are the issues of life."

— Much depends on the way we come into trouble. Paul and Jonah were both in the storm, but under very different circumstances.

— Invite Jesus, for he always says "I will come." He may wait three days, as he did with Martha and Mary; but "I will come," is his intention. Expect him till he comes.

— It is not the station that we fill which is of importance, so much as the light we send forth from it. There is no condition, however humble, which precludes the zealous christian from doing something to the honor and praise of his God.

— When a man desires to sleep, he desires to hear no noise; so when a man desires to sleep in sin, he desires not to hear the voice of grace disturbing him; and the devil, like a diligent chamberlain, draweth the curtains of darkness and security about him.

WHY USE SPECTACLES?

With most persons, there is an epoch in life when the eyes become slightly flattened. It arises, probably, from a diminished activity of the secreting vessels. The consequence is that the globe is not kept quite as completely distended with fluids as in youth and middle age. There is thus an elongated axis of vision. A book is held farther off to be read. Finally, becoming more flattened by the same inactivity with in, the difficulty is met by putting on convex glasses. This is the waning vision of age. If, however, when that advancing imperfection is first realized, the individual persists in the attempt to keep the book in the old focus of vision—even if he reads under perplexing disadvantages, never relaxing, but perseveringly proceeding just as he did when his eyes were in the meridian of their perfection, the stock vessels will at last come up to his assistance, and the original focal distance will be re-established.

This statement will unquestionably be combated energetically by those who use glasses. But it will be a waste of forsenic powder, because the fact is established beyond cavil. We do not pretend it will be successful in every instance; but generally, if glasses are once resorted to, then the opportunity of doing without them is forever lost.

Very aged men may be noticed reading fine print; and ladies, too, by scores, who resisted glasses at the age of life referred to, who enjoy all the comfort of distinct vision, and they will, until, like the deacon's chaise, every stick in the vehicle falls to pieces at the same time.

Therefore, begin with a firm resolution never to use glasses of any kind, for reading or writing. The ancients knew nothing about such contrivances; if they had, there would have been poor eyes in abundance, and oculists to meet the emergency. Cicero never complained of imperfect vision at the age of sixty-three. He even wrote his last letter by torchlight, on the eve of being put to death by the waiting soldiers. Humboldt died at ninety-two, having never been embarrassed with those modern contrivances, unettes. John Quincy Adams, illustrious for scholarship, at a ripe old age saw without them. Indeed it would be a laborious enterprise to collect a catalogue of names in the chronicles of literary fame, of men and women, who were independent of glasses.—Dr. J. C. V. Smith.

Bad Bed-Fellows.—No tobacco-user is fit for a bed-companion. He is giving forth pestilential vapors from all the pores of the skin. He is an embodiment of perpetual miasm. The immediate atmosphere surrounding him is inevitably impregnated and polluted with the constant effluvia which emanates from his whole surface. He become a perfect walking distillery of the deadly essence, sending forth its fumes and vapors into the surrounding atmosphere. His mouth is the mill which grinds out the weed, and his whole body the distillery for the essence. Put a chewer or smoker into a vapor bath with no tobacco in the room, and in a short time the whole room will be strongly scented with tobacco effluvia that emanated from his body. Put him into a warm bath and get up a perspiration; then put that water upon flies or vermin or plants and it will instantly destroy them.

Disinfecting Sick Rooms.—The old practice of burning rags, sugar, vinegar, etc., in sick rooms, is now no longer tolerated by well-informed people, as the smoke and fumes of these substances only add to the impurity of the air, and hide its fetid condition. In place of these substances for general use, comes carbolic acid, a cheap and powerful disinfectant for cleansing foul places about the house. Carbolic acid is used in solution of water; a half gill placed in any vessel, the contents of which need deodorizing is sufficient. Carbolate of lime placed in saucers in a sick room produces good results. Cleanliness, fresh air, and sunshine are, however, more important than any disinfectant, and should always be made a matter of constant thoughtfulness wherever the sick are confined.

Ventilation.—The breathing of impure air tends to shorten life; the body loses its health and strength, the mind its vigor, and becomes feeble and desponding. People who breathe bad air day after day are always in a low, nervous state. They fancy the least whiff of fresh air will give them their death of cold; they have but little appetite for food; they become pale and sallow. Scrofula if not produced by impure air, is greatly aggravated by it; and the same may be said of consumption; besides which, measles, skin diseases, sore eyes, rickets, are all more or less occasioned by want of proper ventilation. Shops that have the doors open are more healthy than those with closed doors.

Dyspeptic Sufferers.—The kernel of the peach pit has proved a perfect remedy for what is termed "heart-burn." When the suffering manifests itself, eat one or two of the kernels, and after a few days the symptoms will disappear. The remedy is simple, cheap and harmless, and, best of all, effectual.

Good Family Advice.—Let all troublesome topics be avoided at meals. Do not dwell upon the difficulties of business, the delinquencies of domestics, or discipline the children at the dinner-table, for a cheerful spirit not only gives relish for food, but a good start at digesting the same.

Bowel Complaints.—Good ripe fruits, taken at meals, never induce dangerous bowel complaints. Overeating would cause colic or diarrhea, but not Asiatic cholera, if nothing but pure food were eaten.

Burns.—The white of an egg is a most efficacious remedy for burns.

WHAT THEN?

What then? Why, then, another pilgrim song;
And then a hush of rest, divinely granted;
And then a thirsty stage (ah me, so long!)
And then a brook, just where it most is wanted.

What then? The pitching of the evening tent;
And then, perchance, a pillow rough and thorny;
And then some sweet and tender message, sent
To cheer the faint one for to-morrow's journey.

What then? The wailing of the midnight wind;
A feverish sleep, a heart oppressed and aching;
And then a little water-cruse to find
Close by my pillow, ready for my waking.

What then? I am not careful to inquire;
I know there will be tears, and fears, and sorrow;
And then a loving Savior drawing nigher,
And saying, "I will answer for the morrow."

What then? For all my sins his pardoning grace;
For all my wants and woes his loving kindness;
For darkest shades the shining of God's face,
And Christ's own hand to lead me in my blindness.

What then? A shadowy valley, lone and dim;
And then a deep and darkly-rolling river;
And then a flood of light, a seraph's hymn,
And God's own smile forever and forever!

THE ANCIENT HOPE OF THE SAINTS.

BY WILLIAM SHELDON.

The hope of a kingdom to come on the earth, of heavenly origin, under the glorious supervision of a coming Messiah, had elated thousands of hearts prior to the birth of Jesus; and when the angel Gabriel was despatched from heaven's throne to announce the time of his birth, with the accompanying affirmation, "The Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his Father David, and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of his kingdom there shall be no end," that hope was strengthened; and after he commenced his public ministry, his disciples confidently looked for him to become king; and although Jesus made frequent allusions to his future death, "they understood none of these things" (Luke 18: 34), as they were so intent in their expectations, and so animated with the hope of seeing a kingdom set up under the supervision of Christ.

The reign of the Messiah so absorbed their attention that they entirely overlooked the predictions concerning his death, and blindly connected his reign with his first mission to the world, ignoring the fact that between his first advent and his kingly elevation he must be "a man of sorrows," die, enter the grave, and be raised from the dead, to officiate as "Mediator between God and man." Not having understood this, their hearts were thrilled with the hope of soon seeing Jesus constituted king; and it was the existence of this impression that originated the request that came from the mother of two of Jesus' disciples; "Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on thy left, in thy kingdom." Matt. 21: 21.

It was the same impression that animated the hearts of the disciples at the time Jesus rode into Jerusalem, and induced them to exclaim: "Blessed be the King that cometh in the name of the Lord" Luke 19: 38. It was the same enthusiastic expectation that fired their hearts when "Jesus perceived that they would come and take him by force to make him a king" (John 6: 15); but knowing that the time for him to commence his reign had not arrived, Jesus concealed himself in a mountain.

This was the very impression that elated their hearts when "they thought that the kingdom of God should immediately appear." Luke 19: 11. And this was the hope that led Peter, with sword in hand, to contest the capture of his prospective King on the night of the betrayal; but, despite his feeble resistance, wicked men triumphed, and led away Jesus, and "crowned him with a crown of thorns," in mockery of his claim to the kingship.

Now the faith of the disciples begins to falter; but presently it is put to a more severe test, as they see Jesus nailed to the tree, while his enemies defiantly wag their heads, and tauntingly exclaim, "Hail! king of the Jews." But their hope is obliterated when Jesus dies, and his enemies put him in the sepulchre, and roll a great stone, and put a seal upon it, to keep him in death's embrace. Their expected king is dead and buried, and their hope died with him. Their happy dreams of a coming kingdom are all thrown into the shade, and they are plunged into a quandary. Their contemplated king is dead. Where now is the expected kingdom?

Where now is the hope that so recently filled their hearts with ecstasy? Their hope has expired; the hope of the establishment of a kingdom under the Messiah is obliterated; for, prior to the resurrection of Jesus, "they knew not the Scriptures, that he must rise again from the dead." John 20: 9. All was darkness and sadness, and keen disappointment, while Jesus slept in the tomb; for they were blind to the thought of his resurrection. For three days and nights they were without hope. Supposing that he must long remain under the power of death, his friends came with spices and ointments to prepare him for a long rest in death, after the custom of the Jews.

But, lo! an angel had come down from heaven, and paralyzed the soldiers, rolled away the stone, broken the Roman seal, and Jesus had risen with "the power of an endless life." The news coming from the lips of two angels is reiterated—"He is risen!" How the tidings fly, and it wakes up the hope of the contemplated kingdom in all their hearts. They now see that death could not prevent the establishment of the long-looked-for-kingdom. Jesus lives again, and can yet set up the kingdom. And it was this thought that led Peter to exclaim:—"Blessed be the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, which according to his abundant mercy, hath begotten us again unto a lively hope, by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." 2 Pet. 1: 3.

For forty days after his resurrection, Jesus remained among his disciples, conversing with them "relative to things pertaining to the kingdom of God;" but he did not then see fit to enlighten them concerning the precise point of time when it should be established; perhaps he knew they could not endure the thought of its being so far in the future, so soon after their recent sad disappointment; so with hearts filled with the thoughts of the establishment of the Messiah's kingdom, still looking for it prematurely, at the end of forty days, almost impatient for its immediate establishment, they came to Jesus and "asked of him, saying, Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" Acts 1: 6. The reply of Jesus was calculated to strengthen the impression that they were right in expecting the kingdom at some time: "It is not for you to know [now] the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power: but ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you." And while the Master's admonition—"Tarry ye in Jerusalem until ye be endued with power from on high"—was still sounding in their ears, "He was taken up, and a cloud received him out of their sight." For a moment the unexpected event bid fair to extinguish their hope again; but God carefully arranged for this emergency; two messengers "stood by them in white apparel," fresh from the throne of God, to make the cheering announcement, "This same Jesus, which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."

Had it not been for this angelic testimony, their hope might have been blighted again; but this announcement, coming from the truthful lips of holy angels, elated their hearts with the sweet assurance that their contemplated King was destined to return again; and perhaps for a time they fancied that he would remain away only a few days, weeks, or months at most, to make some necessary arrangements preparatory to the establishment of his kingdom on earth; and they remained in Jerusalem, as they were commanded to do, till the Holy Spirit came down upon them in miraculous power; when the secret was divulged that Jesus was to be the Mediator of the race, to offer repentance to all men, and be the guest of the Father "till his enemies be made his footstool," or till he should "judge the quick and the dead at his appearing and kingdom;" thus learning that his "kingdom" could not come till the dead should be judged.

Subsequently Jesus sent a "revelation" to his waiting disciples, in which he plainly informed them that the ushering in of his kingdom would take place at the sounding of the seventh trump; at which time also the dead should be judged, and the reward be given to the saints, and the wicked be destroyed: "And the seventh angel sounded; and there were great voices in heaven, saying, The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ; and he shall reign forever and ever: . . . thy wrath is come, and the time of the dead that they should be judged, and that thou shouldest give reward unto thy servants the prophets, and to the saints, and them that fear thy name, small and great; and shouldest destroy them that destroy [margin, "corrupt"] the earth." Rev. 11: 15, 18.

Thus the ancient hope of a heavenly kingdom on earth is to be realized at the return of the Divine Nobleman who has gone from earth "into a far country, to receive for himself the kingdom" which is now filled with "enemies," who are practically saying, "We will not have this man to reign over us;" but in due time he will "return" to earth, "having received for himself the kingdom," and issue this edict of extermination: "Those mine enemies that would not that I should reign over them, bring hither and slay them before me." Luke 19: 12, 15, 27.

Then the territory of the coming kingdom will be free from all impurity, and Messiah shall "reign before his ancients gloriously." This ancient hope, though not perfectly understood at first, is to be consummated at the coming of the "King of glory," who was once the "Man of sorrows," when all the entombed saints shall be called forth to share in its realization, in a sinless and deathless realm. The early disciples erred, not in believing that the "government should be upon his shoulder," nor in supposing that he should reign "upon the throne of his father David," but in looking for it too early. They erred in looking for this kingdom without the resurrection, and without the judgment day. In due time these defects were rectified; and now this hope shines brighter than ever, and we are nearing the time of its consummation.

While the disciples were so very anxious for the establishment of the kingdom that they overlooked Messiah's death, many now have their attention so fixed on his death that they overlook his reign. But the kingdom is coming when the King shall be escorted from heaven to earth by myriads of angels. May our hearts be ever animated with this glorious hope, and may our fervent prayer ever be, "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is done in heaven."

For the World's Crisis.

FOREVER WITH THE LORD.

The christian's "Lord and Master is now absent; but prior to his departure he made this promise: "I will come again, and receive you unto myself, that where I am, there ye may be also;" and also, "Neither can they die any more;" while Paul's testimony is, "So shall we ever be with the Lord."

Then death will never break up the friendly circle, sickness never afflict us, temptations never annoy us, sorrow never disturb us, foes never oppress us, and sin will exist no more. Our sainted friends will all be gathered, the pure-hearted ones of six thousand years be assembled, coming from the cold realm of death, electrified with immortal vigor, to meet the descending Savior, and for a time to stand on the "sea of glass," which is "before the throne," in the new Jerusalem, there to "sing the song of Moses and the song of the Lamb"—a song of triumph and a song of redemption.

Saved at last. How sweet the thought. No more dangers to fear, and no more doubts to oppress. No longer absent from the Lord, but with him in Paradise, with prophets and apostles; and "so shall we be ever with the Lord." The living saints no more fall victims to death, and the dead saints all escape his grasp. Then "the tabernacle of God shall be with men" on earth made new, and thus we shall "ever be with the Lord."

For the World's Crisis.

WALKING BY FAITH, AND WALKING BY SIGHT.

The truth I am about to present is drawn from the whole word of God, but the phraseology of my subject comes from the seventh verse of the fifth chapter of 1st Corinthians: "We walk by faith, not by sight."

The children of this world walk by sight, while the children of the kingdom, when living as they should, walk by faith. To act "by sight" is to act in accordance with what is seen; is to behold and judge things for oneself. It is to act on the authority and in the light of one's own reason and judgment. To act by faith is to act by hearsay, from the testimony or word of another. Faith uses the ear, rather than the eye; whence comes the expression, "the hearing of faith"; also, "faith cometh by hearing"; hearing rather than seeing. Jesus told Thomas, "Blessed are they who have not seen, yet have believed." Faith takes a low and humble position. Reason is proud and lordly, and likes to act from itself alone. Faith accepts what she hears without doubt or questioning, and acts as she is told. Hence the proud heart does not like faith. A heart must be broken thoroughly before it loves faith.

When I speak of faith, I mean scriptural faith. And this faith is that which exalts God as her Master and Lord of all. The only question she asks is, "Does God say this?" and she believes. What seems, what appears to be, makes no difference to her. God's naked word outweighs all probabilities and appearances. No matter how a thing looks—what does God say about it?

Scriptural faith cannot be exercised between man and man; for faith, in the Scripture sense, means taking God's word, God's statement, against and in the face of every thing to the contrary. God demands unquestioning faith in every statement he makes. He commands that I live by my ear, instead of by my eye. Shall I sit in judgment over a statement of God's? Nay. Let God be true, and every man a liar; yea, though human eyes and reason are stultified.

Walking by faith, as contrasted with walking by sight, means simply acting unremittingly on the strength and by the direction of God's statements or words. "We walk by faith"; i.e., faith in every step, in every act we perform.

But just here let me speak of a wide-spread error with regard to faith; it is very prevalent and very pernicious. I cannot describe this error better than to say that it resolves faith into a general and wholesale trust. It is so convenient to trust in God in a general sort of way; to say, "Lord, Lord," and not do the things which he says.

I think I had this kind of faith about fifteen years. I was not careless nor indifferent; I seemed to be humble, and thought that I could say, "Thy will, O Lord, be done." I expected that God would do as he pleased, and I knew that I must submit, and I tried to do so. I rather threw myself upon the mercy and will of God, in a general way. I was not so particular about what he said, but I trusted that I was submissive and humble, and had faith, or trust, which I considered the same thing.

Now I can see the working of just that sentiment in this church. This is really the idea of nine out of every ten professing christians. They say, in heart, "God is sovereign; I will yield to him, I will bow to him, and let his will be done. He is merciful; I will trust in him." This general sort of trust creates a pleasant and soothing feeling, and the man comforts himself with the thought that he has saving faith. But this is an awful mistake. Why? That is not faith. Faith goes by the chart. It keeps the chart in hand, and traces out every crook and turn and point of compass marked out.

Since I came to know what faith is; to know that it is special and not general, I have studied the chart—the Bible—ten-fold, yes, a hundred-fold more than I ever did before. The truth is, we have a way of saying, "I trust in God—his holy will be done," and then go and act, and live, not as carefully and exactly as God directs, but as seems best to us, as our own judgment and desires dictate; and we don't scruple very much to go contrary to God's plain directions. It is very easy to get over texts of Scripture, saying, "It does not mean exactly so; we must make some allowance for the language. At any rate it is very uncertain what it does mean; and we can only trust in God, and let his holy will be done."

Now, I do not suppose that those who have not struggled and fought against this universal tendency of unbelief see this picture as I do. But, where true faith exists, it makes everything of our great chart. It studies it, it pores over it, it keeps its finger on it, and when a step is to be taken, an act or deed to be done, or a doctrine to be accepted or to be taught, it traces out the line of it with all nicety of care and painstaking.

The man who walks by faith, in reality, and not in mere profession, will have an altogether new and absorbing love and regard for the word of God, such as he never dreamed of having before. Then every text becomes as good as a mint of gold, and he regards it in its exact literal expression, and is as careful of its accurate significance as is a man of the delicate works in his watch.
